Deputy Sheriff W. A. Putnam, assisted by two West Brookfield officers, made a successful raid on two road houses late Saturday night and early Sunday morning. The first place visited was the large farm house kept by Gaylord Cook, located just north of the Boston and Albany brdge on the West Brookfield road. Search here revealed 93 bottles of lager. The officers then continued to Ragged Hill house, kept by Tom Merrill. Here they had considerable trouble getting in, but finally succeeded, and found several bottles of lager, a bottle containing whisky and another containing wine. The proprietors of both places were arrested and taken to West Brookfield. In the police court Monday morning both were found guilty and fined $50 apiece, which they paid.

WALES.

A. A. Cobbett, the merchant, is away to the hot springs for his health.

The quarterly meeting of the Wales Savings Bank will be held next Tuesday at 2.30.

Winter fruit in certain localities is very fair and large. The best quality sells for $2 per barrel.

Isaiah Hiscock spends most of his time at his hotel in Holland, which he is thoroughly repairing and fitting up for the new landlord, who expects to open soon.

Constable Eager is dispatching the unlicensed dogs. One lost its head yesterday, and others will follow soon.

W. Royce is doing quite a job in the way of improving his meadow land. He is covering it with sand several inches deep.

Lineman Alden has been afflicted with a badly swollen face this week, caused by getting cold after having a tooth extracted, but is now better.

Savings Bank Commissioner W. T. D. Trefrey visited the savings bank Wednesday, and after an examination reported everything satisfactory and the bank in good condition.

Bradley & Heck have their cider mill in running order in the basement of the Valley mill. They are doing a good business, and will buy apples and make cider. They are preparing to engage in the vinegar business.

The mills are running evenings, and the Excelsior mill has an extra set of men who work all night, thus keeping the looms going 24 hours per day. This makes Wales look like old times, to see so many going to and fro and waiting about for work. Many strangers have come to town in answer to an advertisement for help, probably three for every vacant place. Most of them are young and fairly dressed young men; occasionally one resembling the professional tramp appears.

WEST WARREN.

The steeple on the Catholic church is being repaired.

Dr. O. W. Phelps will move to Warren about the first of November.

John O'Neill of Hardwick is visiting his sister, Mrs. Timothy Danehy.

Miss Agnes Welsh is entertaining a young lady friend from Thorndike.

Mrs. David Burroughs of Vermont is visiting her brother, Jack Trowbridge.

Joseph L. Sedgley of Lowell, a former resident of this place, was in town Tuesday.

The West Warren brass band gave a very pleasing concert at Quaboag Wednesday afternoon.

Miss Mary S. Irving is entertaining an old acquaintance from Scotland, Mr. Welsh, now of Lowell.

Miss Ada Curford and Miss Mary Gaffney of Springfield spent Monday with Miss D. P. Johnson.

Rev. Francis H. Ellis of West Springfield, professor of Greek, spent Tuesday with Rev. William Dockham.

Master Johnie Faneuff, who has been ill a long time with typhoid fever, died Tuesday; interment at Millbury.

Mrs. Charles Crossman, who has been visiting Mrs. George Crossman, has returned to her home in Millbury.

Mrs. James O'Neill's mother, Mrs. White of West Brookfield, died at her house Tuesday; burial in West Brookfield.

Miss Agnes Welsh will have her fall millinery opening next week Monday and Tuesday, afternoon and evening.

W. H. Beaman, a former resident of this place, died Friday at the house of his daughter, Mrs. Amory Crossman; interment at Warren.

John Laundervill died at his home on East Main street Sunday night. He had just returned from a trip to Canada, was taken ill Saturday and was unconscious most of the time until death.

Carrol Bliss and Charles Nichols of Warren drove to Ware Tuesday. On the way home the horses got the best of the boys and run down Ware hill, throwing both out. Bliss was not hurt, while Nichols was considerably bruised with a rib, or two broken. Nichols was arrested and taken to Warren.

The last remaining old landmark of the town is being removed. The large maple tree in front of Mrs. Willard Hall's on Main street has been pronounced unsafe and workmen are removing it, roots and all. The tree is 16 feet in circumference and is supposed to be over 100 years old.

BELCHERTOWN.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Sadler are rejoicing over the birth of a son.

The Granby Grange met with the Belchertown Grange Tuesday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stone of Enfield entertained a whist party from Belchertown Sept. 20th.

T. S. Kentfield has returned from New York much improved in health.

Mrs. Charles McMaster of Monson is spending a few days with Mrs. Oliver Hyde.

We regret to learn the death of Mrs. Amasa Allen, whose burial occurred Sept. 24th. She was formerly Mrs. Luther McMaster of Belchertown.

Our popular landlord, D. W. Dillon, who is president of the Farmers and Mechanics Club, is making a great effort to have our annual cattle show a success.

The Democrats have chosen the following delegates to the different conventions: State, William E. Bridgman, William H. Bridgman, Ansel C. Shaw; congressional, Asahel B. Shaw, Fred B. Purdy, William F. Squires; councilor, Harvey Purdy, Oliver Shannon, Mason L. Sanford.

Found Dead in Bed.

Jason Walker, 86, one of Belchertown's oldest residents, was found dead in bed Sunday morning. His grandfather was one of the earliest settlers of the town, and a Revolutionary soldier. Mr. Walker lived upon the place originally owned by his grandfather. Of his family one grandson is left, Jason Hurlburt, with whom he lived.

Fire Set by Tramps.

John Garvey's barn, situated in South Belchertown, about a mile from Bondsville, was burned about one o'clock Tuesday morning, supposed to have been accidentally set fire by some tramps. The building and contents were a total loss, but all the stock except about 100 chickens was saved. The building contained about 15 tons of hay, several tons of mowed oats, mowing machine, horse rake, and considerable farm machinery. The absence of wind probably saved the house. Loss $2000; insured for $1000.

A. B. Howard picked ripe strawberries from his garden last week, over an inch in diameter.

George W. Longley died very suddenly of heart failure yesterday noon while at the dinner table. He had not been feeling well for several days, but no serious result was anticipated. Mr. Longley was a grandson of Colonel Joshua Longley, and the only surviving member of the family of the late Worcester Longley. He was prominent in business and social circles, and at the time of his death was justice of the peace and town clerk. He was married a year ago to Miss Hattie Dwight.

LUDLOW.

Miss Mary Birnie has returned from Vermont.

Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Hannum are spending the week in Boston.

Alexander Birnie has gone back to the Amherst Agricultural College.

Mrs. John Smith and daughter Edith have returned home. They have been spending the summer in Becket.

James Henderson and Fred Howard have resumed their school work at the Mass. School of Technology.

There will be a concert in the Union church next Wednesday evening under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E. The programme includes readings by Miss Edith Mae Smith, of the Emerson College of Oratory, singing by Miss Lelia Quick, Miss Nella Houghton, Wilbur F. Miller and E. E. Chapman, a male quartette, a flute duet and a piano duet.

Reunion of the 46th Regiment.

The 22d reunion of the 46th regiment was held in Masonic Hall, Ludlow Mills, Tuesday afternoon. The veterans marched up the street, led by the Sons of Veteran's drum corps, and were met at the entrance of the hall by the school children, who saluted them with three cheers and sang patriotic songs for a welcome. The reunion was called to order at 12.30 o'clock by Col. W. S. Shurtleff, and after a short preliminary talk the names of comrades who had died were read. They were: L. C. Rodier, Co. A; J. H. Burnham, Co. B; Theodore Hess, Co. C; Lieut. D. Bronson, Co. D; S. H. Bodfish, Co. D; Charles Upham, Co. G; Charles Triss, Co. H, and J. Edgerton, C. H. Stewart, J. P. Griswold and S. H. Merrick of Co. I. Lieut. W. S. Loomis spoke a few words in remembrance of the dead. Dinner was served at 2 o'clock by the ladies of Ludlow, about 150 sitting down to the table. After dinner Col. Shurtleff spoke at some length upon the advantage of going out of the city into the country to hold the reunions. Among the other speakers were Superintendent Stevens of the Ludlow Mills, who expressed pleasure at being an honored guest of the regiment; Chauncey Buell of Ludlow, who spoke on the importance of reunions; Rev. Mr. Quick, on mutual sacrifices in behalf of the whole country; Lieut. A. O. Kinney of Chicopee told a humorous story of camping life in North Carolina; Lieut. W. S. Loomis of Holyoke told of the enthusiastic reception of the Grand Army in Pittsburg. W. R. Sessions, secretary of the state board of agriculture, and Oscar Ely also made brief addresses. The officers of the regiment are: President, Col. W. S. Shurtleff; vice presidents, Lieut-Col. L. B. Walkley, Maj. S. B. Spooner, Lieut. Gideon Wells, Lieut. W. S. Loomis, Capt. A. Campbell, Sergeant E. S. Heath, Capt. J. M. Justin, Capt. R. H. Cromwell, Capt. F. B. Lincoln, Capt. F. C. Cook, Capt. John Avery, Lieut. R. D. Witt; secretary, A. S. Bryant; treasurer, George W. Turner.

BRIMFIELD.

Moses H. Baker, who has been quite sick, is better.

Miss Lilla Wiley has gone to Fall River as clerk in a dry goods store.

Hon. Charles E. Stevens was renomatedin to the council by acclamation.

Miss Louisa Howlett of Holland is spending the week at Dr. Chamberlin's.

Mr. and Mrs. Yerring of Long Island made a flying visit to town this week on business.

Drs. George I. Chamberlin spent the week in Worcester, to attend the musical festival.

John L. Bacon, who has been a student at Monson Academy the past year, left this week for Philadelphia, to enter a medical school.

Rev. S. T. Frost of Palmer will preach in the West brick schoolhouse next Sunday at 2:30 p. m.

Miss Mary Mulvany and George Fitch of Springfield were married there on Thursday evening.

George D. Storrs is the best man mentioned for the Democratic representative candidate.

Mabel, eldest daughter of Orus Parker, is in Springfield, attending school and taking music lessons.

Quite a number of our citizens took advantage of the Boston and Albany free ride to visit Boston Wednesday.

Mrs. E. B. Smith returned to Chicago Friday, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. George M. Hitchcock.

Frank Coolbroth of Springfield has been in town the past week in the interests of a life insurance company.

At a recent session of the probate court Samuel N. Gleason was appointed trustee under the will of Esther T. Kenney, late of Brimfield.

These are the delegates chosen to the different Democratic conventions: State, F. R. Newton, C. C. Brown; congressional, C. B. Tarbell, G. E. Bacon; councilor, D. Haynes, E. W. Carder.

There will be a lecture and entertainment course under the auspices of the Methodist society, consisting of three lectures and one concert, with dates as follows: November 7, Rev. Henry Tuckley of Springfield, subject, "Man and Wife, or How to Be Happy Though Married;" 21st, Rev. C. L. Goodell of Boston, subject, "Abraham Lincoln;" December 5, concert by the Amherst glee club; 19th, Dr. N. T. Whitaker of Lynn, subject, "America."

Mary F. Brown, daughter of the late Deacon C. R. Brown of this place, died at her home in Springfield Wednesday after a lingering illness. She was graduated from the Westfield Normal school at an early age, and taught at Westfield, Warren, Brimfield and Palmer, after which she went to Springfield and remained at the Hooker school five years. In 1874 she was made principal of the Auburn street school, and held the position 17 years. Miss Brown came of a family of teachers and was very successful in her chosen profession. At the time of her death she was a member of Memorial church. The funeral will be held to-morrow at 10 o'clock. The burial will be at Brimfield.

A Much Wanted Young Man.

Frank Skiffington was watched for on Wednesday but not found. It seems he had made arrangements to be married, when another young woman thought she had a prior claim on him and swore out a warrant for his arrest. He probably got a hint and left town. It is reported that there is a third young woman who would be better pleased had she never known him.

AN ANNIVERSARY.

THE READERS OF THE BOSTON SUNDAY JOURNAL WILL CELEBRATE WITH THAT PAPER ITS ANNIVERSARY.

The anniversary of the establishing of the Boston Sunday Journal is to be celebrated by that paper in a very pleasing way. Next Sunday a thirty-two page paper will be issued, inclosed in a finely colored cover, prepared expressly for the Journal at a cost of $1500, and containing many novel features. The Sunday Journal has gained thousands of readers by its originality and enterprise, never letting a week pass without presenting many strong and entertaining special articles not to be found in any other paper, as well as all the news. One hundred thousand copies are to be printed next Sunday.

Remarkable Progress.

Two new Sunday newspapers have been published in Boston for about one year, and yet The Boston Sunday Globe has not only held its lead during that time, but has actually increased it. For instance, the average circulation of The Boston Sunday Globe in August, 1893, was 165,700, while in August, 1894, it was 176,347, a splendid gain of 10,647 copies per Sunday. The Sunday Globe prints one-third more every Sunday than its nearest competitor, and not only leads all others in advertising, but gained 14 columns last Sunday over what it published one year ago. The Globe certainly handsomely maintains its position at the head of Boston journalism.

The show of New Millinery is as full as we can make it, not only of finished hats and bonnets, but of the materials to make them of.

It would be hard to describe the vagaries of woman's fashionable headgear this season. We have caught some notions from the great artistes of Paris, and French wit and dexterity have been artfully mingled with American skill in our work room. Is it any satisfaction for you to know that you are getting a result equal to Paris, from a local milliner?

And there are hundreds of trimmed and untrimmed hats here. A great many that are only here; many with very few of a pattern. All are to be seen.

HEADACHES.

Headache is pure and simple headache. It is that, and still something more. It an affliction that describes itself. There are, however, different forms indirectly, perhaps produced by different causes. But we claim that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred it results from a disordered stomach. CELERY TONIC BITTERS is an infallable cure for headaches.

SICK HEADACHE is often very tenacious, clinging to its subject for years. It is, in most cases, attended by sickness of the stomach, depressed spirit, and vomiting. It is the occasion of great suffering.

BILIOUS HEADACHE. This invariably arises from a disordered stomach.

NERVOUS HEADACHE sometimes assumes a neuralgic form; and he or she who suffers from it is to be pitied.

Every bottle GUARANTEED to give satisfaction or MONEY REFUNDED.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

The most accessible of Cripple Creek Gold Mines. The works are in the town limits, thereby making labor, transportation and supplies cheaper and more practical. Every indication points to a great boom in Cripple Creek Stocks. An opportunity of this nature is not offered to investors indefinitely. As soon as sufficient funds are acquired to complete certain developments all stock will be withdrawn from the market. A small block may be a constant source of revenue to its owner for years to come. This flattering proposition will safely bear the most careful investigation. Write any expert, bank or miner in Cripple Creek Gold District. It will reflect credit to the Camp, our Company, and be exceedingly profitable to yourself.

The Ela Helean Gold Mining Co.

Of Colorado Springs and Cripple Creek, Colorado. Capital $1,000,000. Equally divided into 1,000,000 shares, par value $1, fully paid and forever non-assessable. All dividends, if any, will be declared on every share. Incorporated under the laws of the State of Colorado. 280,000 shares still remain in the treasury. 80,000 shares are now offered to the public at FIVE CENTS PER SHARE, proceeds of all sales to to be used exclusively in development work at the mines. The Company are in possession of a twenty year municiple franchise to mine under the streets and alleys of the Town of Cripple Creek, being directly in the heart of the richest gold-producing district in the world. The Company own mineral bearing lots scattered throughout the entire town, and have also acquired twenty year leases to extract ores from under nearly fifty lots. In the Company's workings an 8-foot vein has been opened up, from which assays have been taken running from $12 to $500, and many specimens showing free gold. The property is under the entire management of Mr. J. C. Dickey, formerly manager of the famous Summit Company and Yankee Girl, the latter of which sold for nearly $1,000,000.

Out of Sight —out of mind. That's the way with things in the laundry and the kitchen. Perhaps you think they're using Pearline there. And your linen is going to pieces, and you're dissatisfied with the work, and you're blaming Pearline for all the trouble. If this is the case, you can make up your mind either that Pearline isn't used, or that something else is used with it, which does the damage. Possibly you'll find that they're trying to wash with some of the imitations that peddlers, prize-givers and unscrupulous grocers are offering to those who do not realize the danger. — JAMES PYLE

Grover Writes Once More.

GROVE TO DAVE.

I've a secret in my heart, David B.,
And I'll tell the truth in part, love, to thee,
Every mill with goods to sell—
Every workingman as well—
Wish we were both in——, you and me.
When the voters of this land, David B.,
Get their ballots in their hands, "Hully Gee,"
It won't take us long to see
They've enough of you and me,
And our bill with tariff free, David B.

Chorus.

Come with me, David B., David B., come and see,
How they take our tax and tariff theory,
And the promises we made, on the prospects of Free Trade,
We had better left unsaid, you and me.

DAVE TO GROVE.

Every morn when I awake, Grover C.,
Seems to me your head I'll break, as I see
How the papers of the day, in their keen sarcastic way,
Make of you and me their prey, spitefully.
When the sunset tints the West, Grover C.,
And you sit down to rest heavily—
With the stars that stud the sky,
I still wait and wonder why
You don't write once more—then die, Grover C.

Chorus.

Come with me, Grover C., Grover C., you shall see—
What a help you are to party harmony.
In the '96 campaign, perhaps you will explain,
Why you treated with disdain, David B.

Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its fragrance on the desert air;
Full many a tramp in filth and rags is seen
Who might, with p'luck, have been a millionaire.

The skies were never bluer,
And love was never truer,
And dollars never fewer

While there's fish enough for frying?
A song's ahead o' sighing—
Let's be happy on the way!

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulas and testimonials. Address, F. J. THE SMALLEST PAINTING IN THE WORLD.—It is said that the smallest piece of painting in the world has recently been executed by a Flemish artist. It is painted on the smooth side of a grain of common white corn, and pictures a mill and a miller mounting a stair with a sack of grain on his back. The mill is represented as standing on a terrace, and near it is a horse and cart, while a group of several peasants are shown in the road near by. The picture is beautifully distinct, every object being finished with microscopic fidelity, yet by careful measurement it is shown that the whole painting does not cover a surface of half an inch square.—From the Boston Transcript.

A constant wail goes up on the Pacific that Chinese are like sparrows in their ability to drive other races out. They are not infallible, however, as their greatest monopoly, the tea trade, has been wrested from them. IN A MAINE LAUNDRY.—Two clergymen who were soliciting funds for a new church guilelessly inquired for the laundry in an Old Orchard hotel and were promptly ushered up in front of a sumptuous bar. "Is this the laundry?" asked one of the clergymen. "Yes, gentlemen," said the bar-tender, flipping his towel across the polished wood. "We can boil the stiffness out of a shirt front right here, to beat the band." Then his amazed visitors escaped, but they were seen coming out and—oh, well there were lots of explanations required.—From the Lewiston Journal.

Tired, Weak, Nervous Could Not Sleep.

Prof. L. D. Edwards, of Preston, Idaho, says: "I was all run down, weak, nervous and irritable through overwork. I suffered from brain fatigue, mental depression, etc. I became so weak and nervous that I could not sleep, I would arise tired, discouraged and blue. I began taking

Some Inside Facts.

Such Matters Always Leak Out.

This Time It Carried the Great News Far and Wide.

Many Families All Over the Land Are Deeply Interested in the Matter.

There are many things in the lives of persons and families which, when they are known, become matters of public interest. People always want to know those things which personally concern them, which add to their welfare, their looks or their comfort. Here is a piece of news, which coming from such high authority, makes it of more than ordinary interest.

Mrs. Charles H. Heaton, residing at 143 State street, Montpelier, Vt., is a most lovely and accomplished lady. The family has the very highest social standing. Her husband has held many offices of trust in the city and in politics, and among the Masonic fraternity stands at the head. Her husband's father is president of the Montpelier Savings Bank and Trust Co., the largest bank in the city. Her father is a prominent railroad man. She writes as follows:

"Two years ago we had a terrible experience with La Grippe, and by overwork in taking care of my children and the results of the disease I was left in a very exhausted condition, in fact was nearly prostrated. I was so weak that upon the least excitement I would feel nauseated. I was as near nervous prostration as any one could be.

"Someone recommended Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to me, and I immediately began its use. I am happy to say that it completely cured me. I think it is the best medicine I ever knew of for any form of nervous or chronic disease. I have recommended it to many and shall do so upon every occasion."

This letter is of the utmost importance to you, for it tells you just what to do to be cured. If you are nervous, weak, tired, sleepless, if you have headache, indigestion, kidney or liver complaint, poor blood and weak nerves, you can surely regain your health and be as well as you ever were by taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

The strengthening and curative powers of this remedy are wonderful. Use it and you will be made well and strong. It is the discovery of Dr. Greene, the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted by all at his office, 24 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., free, personally or by letter.

A TWO-MILLION-DOLLAR COMMA.

"Oh, punctuation marks are not of much account. They're just put in for looks. I don't want to bother about them."

Such are the sentiments of a good many school-boys with regard to this branch of letter and composition writing. Others, again, appear to think that all that is necessary is to put in a comma here and there at hap-hazard, to set off the "look of the thing." How risky this way of doing things is may be learned from the following incident:

It seems that some twenty years ago, when the United States, by its Congress, was making a tariff bill, one of the sections enumerated what articles should be admitted free of duty. Among the articles specified were "all foreign fruitplants," etc., meaning plants important for transplanting, propagation or experiment.

The enrolling clerk, in copying the bill, accidentally changed the hyphen in the compound word "fruit-plants" to a comma, making it read, "all foreign fruit, plants," etc. As a result of this simple mistake, for a year, or until Congress could remedy the blunder—all the oranges, lemons, bananas, grapes, and other foreign fruits were admitted free of duty. This little mistake, which any one would be liable to make, yet could have avoided by carefulness, cost the Government not less than two million dollars. A pretty costly comma that?

A "REFUSAL" OF PROPERTY IS NOT LEGALLY BINDING.

It may not be fully understood than an offer to purchase or to sell a farm for a given price, even though it may be in writing, is not binding on the proposer until actually accepted by the other party; therefore the proposer may retract his offer at any time before it is accepted. This is so, on the authority of Hon. A. M. Spear of Gardiner, Me., even though he should give a certain number of days in which the other party might decide whether to accept the offer or not.

What is ordinarily termed the "refusal" of property, is therefore a dangerous thing to rely upon unless you are dealing with a man whose "word is as good as his bond." This is so, although you may have fully made up your mind to take the farm but have not notified the owner of the fact, and should go to great trouble and expense in buying stock, agricultural implements, etc., or even had moved your family to take possession. Should the owner then refuse to sell, while you have nothing but his oral agreement, you would have no legal remedy, either to compel him to convey, or for expenses you may have incurred.

POET'S INTERRUPTION.

Upon the thunder-blasted cliff, scarred by the storm's resistance, he felt the glamor and the awe and mystery of existence: the magic of the thoughtful night, its endless amplitudes of light, burst on his tranced and raptured sight, that gazed into the distance.

Beneath his feet the ancient sea, its mighty anthem pealing, broke on his shores of consciousness in mighty tides of feeling—visions of mermaids 'neath the waves, sporting in glee o'er sailors' graves, through emerald pearl-emblazoned caves, his fancy was revealing.

And summer islands crowned with flowers burst from the misty ocean, and spicy archipelagoes arose in glad commotion; and dolphins on the sunlit seas were sporting with the porpoises, and sirens sang their soulful glees and mermen vowed devotion.

What voice is this that breaks his dreams between the sky and water? It sounds much like a woman's voice, and not a sea-nymph's daughter. He bent his ear and heard her say: "Now, John, don't mope the time away; come down to McElroy's cafe—two ice creams for a quarter."—New York World.

AN ARTFUL DODGER.—A shrewd old farmer, full of fun and mischief, once overreached a merchant in some transaction, and the merchant complained of the way in which he had been treated.

"Well, I'll tell you what I'll do with you," said the farmer. "I'll sell you all my live stock at a dollar a head, and I'll let you come and count them yourself."

The bargain was struck; the day was appointed to count and hand over the stock. The merchant and his assistants, in due course arrived at the farm. They counted up horses, cattle sheep, hogs and the rest. The merchant then asked when he would remove the stock.

"Wait a little!" said the keen old farmer.

"You haven't seen them all yet."

He then led the party close up to a dozen beehives, overturned one of the hives with his foot, and, amid the yells of the flying party, the farmer was heard shouting:

"Count now, ye rascals! Count! count! count!"

"Good morning, Mr. Dolyers."

"Good morning, Mr. Trivvet. What can I do for you today?"

"Well, the fact is, Mr. Dolyers—I—I—I—er, your daughter referred me to you, sir."

"Oh, she did, did she?" snorted the papa. "Well, all I've got to say is that I'm getting tired of this referring business. You are the fourth that she has sent to me in the last 10 days. I'll put a stop to it. I'll tell her that if she hasn't enough nerve to do her own rejecting, I'll accept the very next dude that she unloads on me in this way, and make her marry him. When the fellow comes along that she wants she'll accept him without taking the old man into consideration, and I don't propose to be made a scapegoat any—Well, I declare if the chap didn't actually walk off before I got done telling him what I had to say."

Mr. Dolyers resumes his work of cutting off coupons.

As for Mr. Trivvet, he never came back.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thos. Eggers, 130 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption, tried without result everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. THE TEACHER IS TAUGHT.—The attempt to enforce artificial politeness gives occasion for some amusing incidents. A story is told in the Boston Budget of an English landed proprietor, who sent by his servant, a young lad, a brace of English pheasants for the rector of the parish.

The boy was ushered into the room where the rector was sitting. Throwing the game at his feet, the boy said: "Here is a pair of pheasants my master has sent ye," and without taking off his hat turned to leave the room.

"Hold on," said the rector; "this is not the way to do it. You sit here, and I'll show you."

Taking up the birds the rector put on his hat and left the room. Immediately returning the rector removed his hat and bowed low to the boy, saying: "Your worship, my master has sent a brace of pheasants, which he wishes you to accept with his compliments."

"Thank you sir," said the boy, rising and bowing. "Tell your master I am much obliged to him, and here is a shilling for your trouble in bringing them to me."—Exchange.

Blatant Republican—"You must own, sir, that the Democratic party is retrograding." Honest Democrat. "Well, I'll confess that it seems to be running down Hill, just at present."—Puck.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Out of Sight —out of mind. That's the way with things in the laundry and the kitchen. Perhaps you think they're using Pearline there. And your linen is going to pieces, and you're dissatisfied with the work, and you're blaming Pearline for all the trouble. If this is the case, you can make up your mind either that Pearline isn't used, or that something else is used with it, which does the damage. Possibly you'll find that they're trying to wash with some of the imitations that peddlers, prize-givers and unscrupulous grocers are offering to those who do not realize the danger. 287 JAMES PYLE

Grover Writes Once More.

GROVE TO DAVE.

I've a secret in my heart, David B.,
And I'll tell the truth in part, love, to thee,
Every mill with goods to sell—
Every workingman as well—
Wish we were both in——, you and me.
When the voters of this land, David B.,
Get their ballots in their hands, "Hully Gee,"
It won't take us long to see
They've enough of you and me,
And our bill with tariff free, David B.

Chorus.

Come with me, David B., David B., come and see,
How they take our tax and tariff theory,
And the promises we made, on the prospects of Free Trade,
We had better left unsaid, you and me.

DAVE TO GROVE.

Every morn when I awake, Grover C.,
Seems to me your head I'll break, as I see
How the papers of the day, in their keen sarcastic way,
Make of you and me their prey, spitefully.
When the sunset tints the West, Grover C.,
And you sit down to rest heavily—
With the stars that stud the sky,
I still wait and wonder why
You don't write once more—then die, Grover C.

Chorus.

Come with me, Grover C., Grover C., you shall see—
What a help you are to party harmony.
In the '96 campaign, perhaps you will explain,
Why you treated with disdain, David B.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulas and testimonials. Address, F. J. THE SMALLEST PAINTING IN THE WORLD.—It is said that the smallest piece of painting in the world has recently been executed by a Flemish artist. It is painted on the smooth side of a grain of common white corn, and pictures a mill and a miller mounting a stair with a sack of grain on his back. The mill is represented as standing on a terrace, and near it is a horse and cart, while a group of several peasants are shown in the road near by. The picture is beautifully distinct, every object being finished with microscopic fidelity, yet by careful measurement it is shown that the whole painting does not cover a surface of half an inch square—From the Boston Transcript.

IN A MAINE LAUNDRY.—Two clergymen who were soliciting funds for a new church guilelessly inquired for the laundry in an Old Orchard hotel and were promptly ushered up in front of a sumptuous bar. "Is this the laundry?" asked one of the clergymen. "Yes, gentlemen," said the bar-tender, flipping his towel across the polished wood. "We can boil the stiffness out of a shirt front right here, to beat the band." Then his amazed visitors escaped, but they were seen coming out and—oh, well there were lots of explanations required.—From the Lewiston Journal.

Tired, Weak, Nervous Could Not Sleep.

Prof. L. D. Edwards, of Preston, Idaho, says: "I was all run down, weak, nervous and irritable through overwork. I suffered from brain fatigue, mental depression, etc. I became so weak and nervous that I could not sleep, I would arise tired, discouraged and blue. I began taking

Some Inside Facts.

Such Matters Always Leak Out.

This Time It Carried the Great News Far and Wide.

Many Families All Over the Land Are Deeply Interested in the Matter.

There are many things in the lives of persons and families which, when they are known, become matters of public interest. People always want to know those things which personally concern them, which add to their welfare, their looks or their comfort. Here is a piece of news, which coming from such high authority, makes it of more than ordinary interest.

Mrs. Charles H. Heaton, residing at 143 State street, Montpelier, Vt., is a most lovely and accomplished lady. The family has the very highest social standing. Her husband has held many offices of trust in the city and in politics, and among the Masonic fraternity stands at the head. Her husband's father is president of the Montpelier Savings Bank and Trust Co., the largest bank in the city. Her father is a prominent railroad man. She writes as follows:

"Two years ago we had a terrible experience with La Grippe, and by overwork in taking care of my children and the results of the disease I was left in a very exhausted condition, in fact was nearly prostrated. I was so weak that upon the least excitement I would feel nauseated. I was as near nervous prostration as any one could be.

"Someone recommended Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to me, and I immediately began its use. I am happy to say that it completely cured me. I think it is the best medicine I ever knew of for any form of nervous or chronic disease. I have recommended it to many and shall do so upon every occasion."

This letter is of the utmost importance to you, for it tells you just what to do to be cured. If you are nervous, weak, tired, sleepless, if you have headache, indigestion, kidney or liver complaint, poor blood and weak nerves, you can surely regain your health and be as well as you ever were by taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

The strengthening and curative powers of this remedy are wonderful. Use it and you will be made well and strong. It is the discovery of Dr. Greene, the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted by all at his office, 24 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., free, personally or by letter.

A TWO-MILLION-DOLLAR COMMA.

"Oh, punctuation marks are not of much account. They're just put in for looks. I don't want to bother about them."

Such are the sentiments of a good many school-boys with regard to this branch of letter and composition writing. Others, again, appear to think that all that is necessary is to put in a comma here and there at hap-hazard, to set off the "look of the thing." How risky this way of doing things is may be learned from the following incident:

It seems that some twenty years ago, when the United States, by its Congress, was making a tariff bill, one of the sections enumerated what articles should be admitted free of duty. Among the articles specified were "all foreign fruitplants," etc., meaning plants important for transplanting, propagation or experiment.

The enrolling clerk, in copying the bill, accidentally changed the hyphen in the compound word "fruit-plants" to a comma, making it read, "all foreign fruit, plants," etc. As a result of this simple mistake, for a year, or until Congress could remedy the blunder—all the oranges, lemons, bananas, grapes, and other foreign fruits were admitted free of duty. This little mistake, which any one would be liable to make, yet could have avoided by carefulness, cost the Government not less than two million dollars. A pretty costly comma that?

A "REFUSAL" OF PROPERTY IS NOT LEGALLY BINDING.

It may not be fully understood than an offer to purchase or to sell a farm for a given price, even though it may be in writing, is not binding on the proposer until actually accepted by the other party; therefore the proposer may retract his offer at any time before it is accepted. This is so, on the authority of Hon. A. M. Spear of Gardiner, Me., even though he should give a certain number of days in which the other party might decide whether to accept the offer or not.

What is ordinarily termed the "refusal" of property, is therefore a dangerous thing to rely upon unless you are dealing with a man whose "word is as good as his bond." This is so, although you may have fully made up your mind to take the farm but have not notified the owner of the fact, and should go to great trouble and expense in buying stock, agricultural implements, etc., or even had moved your family to take possession. Should the owner then refuse to sell, while you have nothing but his oral agreement, you would have no legal remedy, either to compel him to convey, or for expenses you may have incurred.

POET'S INTERRUPTION.

Upon the thunder-blasted cliff, scarred by the storm's resistance, he felt the glamor and the awe and mystery of existence: the magic of the thoughtful night, its endless amplitudes of light, burst on his tranced and raptured sight, that gazed into the distance.

Beneath his feet the ancient sea, its mighty anthem pealing, broke on his shores of consciousness in mighty tides of feeling—visions of mermaids 'neath the waves, sporting in glee o'er sailors' graves, through emerald pearl-emblazoned caves, his fancy was revealing.

And summer islands crowned with flowers burst from the misty ocean, and spicy archipelagoes arose in glad commotion; and dolphins on the sunlit seas were sporting with the porpoises, and sirens sang their soulful glees and mermen vowed devotion.

What voice is this that breaks his dreams between the sky and water? It sounds much like a woman's voice, and not a sea-nymph's daughter. He bent his ear and heard her say: "Now, John, don't mope the time away; come down to McElroy's cafe—two ice creams for a quarter."—New York World.

AN ARTFUL DODGER.—A shrewd old farmer, full of fun and mischief, once overreached a merchant in some transaction, and the merchant complained of the way in which he had been treated.

"Well, I'll tell you what I'll do with you," said the farmer. "I'll sell you all my live stock at a dollar a head, and I'll let you come and count them yourself."

The bargain was struck; the day was appointed to count and hand over the stock. The merchant and his assistants, in due course arrived at the farm. They counted up horses, cattle sheep, hogs and the rest. The merchant then asked when he would remove the stock.

"Wait a little!" said the keen old farmer.

"You haven't seen them all yet."

He then led the party close up to a dozen beehives, overturned one of the hives with his foot, and, amid the yells of the flying party, the farmer was heard shouting:

"Count now, ye rascals! Count! count! count!"

"Good morning, Mr. Dolyers."

"Good morning, Mr. Trivvet. What can I do for you today?"

"Well, the fact is, Mr. Dolyers—I—I—I—er, your daughter referred me to you, sir."

"Oh, she did, did she?" snorted the papa. "Well, all I've got to say is that I'm getting tired of this referring business. You are the fourth that she has sent to me in the last 10 days. I'll put a stop to it. I'll tell her that if she hasn't enough nerve to do her own rejecting, I'll accept the very next dude that she unloads on me in this way, and make her marry him. When the fellow comes along that she wants she'll accept him without taking the old man into consideration, and I don't propose to be made a scapegoat any—Well, I declare if the chap didn't actually walk off before I got done telling him what I had to say."

Mr. Dolyers resumes his work of cutting off coupons.

As for Mr. Trivvet, he never came back.

THE TEACHER IS TAUGHT.—The attempt to enforce artificial politeness gives occasion for some amusing incidents. A story is told in the Boston Budget of an English landed proprietor, who sent by his servant, a young lad, a brace of English pheasants for the rector of the parish.

The boy was ushered into the room where the rector was sitting. Throwing the game at his feet, the boy said: "Here is a pair of pheasants my master has sent ye," and without taking off his hat turned to leave the room.

"Hold on," said the rector; "this is not the way to do it. You sit here, and I'll show you."

Taking up the birds the rector put on his hat and left the room. Immediately returning the rector removed his hat and bowed low to the boy, saying: "Your worship, my master has sent a brace of pheasants, which he wishes you to accept with his compliments."

"Thank you sir," said the boy, rising and bowing. "Tell your master I am much obliged to him, and here is a shilling for your trouble in bringing them to me."—Exchange.

Blatant Republican—"You must own, sir, that the Democratic party is retrograding." Honest Democrat. "Well, I'll confess that it seems to be running down Hill, just at present."—Puck.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Out of Sight—out of mind. That's the way with things in the laundry and the kitchen. Perhaps you think they're using Pearline there. And your linen is going to pieces, and you're dissatisfied with the work, and you're blaming Pearline for all the trouble. If this is the case, you can make up your mind either that Pearline isn't used, or that something else is used with it, which does the damage. Possibly you'll find that they're trying to wash with some of the imitations that peddlers, prize-givers and unscrupulous grocers are offering to those who do not realize the danger. 37 JAMES PYLE

Grover Writes Once More.

GROVE TO DAVE.

I've a secret in my heart, David B.,
And I'll tell the truth in part, love, to thee,
Every mill with goods to sell—
Every workingman as well—
Wish we were both in——, you and me.
When the voters of this land, David B.,
Get their ballots in their hands, "Hully Gee,"
It won't take us long to see
They've enough of you and me,
And our bill with tariff free, David B.

Chorus.

Come with me, David B., David B., come and see,
How they take our tax and tariff theory,
And the promises we made, on the prospects of Free Trade,
We had better left unsaid, you and me.

DAVE TO GROVE.

Every morn when I awake, Grover C.,
Seems to me your head I'll break, as I see
How the papers of the day, in their keen sarcastic way,
Make of you and me their prey, spitefully.
When the sunset tints the West, Grover C.,
And you sit down to rest heavily—
With the stars that stud the sky,
I still wait and wonder why
You don't write once more—then die, Grover C.

Chorus.

Come with me, Grover C., Grover C., you shall see—
What a help you are to party harmony.
In the '96 campaign, perhaps you will explain,
Why you treated with disdain, David B.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulas and testimonials. Address, F. J. THE SMALLEST PAINTING IN THE WORLD.—It is said that the smallest piece of painting in the world has recently been executed by a Flemish artist. It is painted on the smooth side of a grain of common white corn, and pictures a mill and a miller mounting a stair with a sack of grain on his back. The mill is represented as standing on a terrace, and near it is a horse and cart, while a group of several peasants are shown in the road near by. The picture is beautifully distinct, every object being finished with microscopic fidelity, yet by careful measurement it is shown that the whole painting does not cover a surface of half an inch square.—From the Boston Transcript.

CHINESE LOSING.

In One Line at Least Their Grip Is Weakening.

A constant wail goes up on the Pacific that Chinese are like sparrows in their ability to drive other races out. They are not infallible, however, as their greatest monopoly, the tea trade, has been wrested from them. Japan, Ceylon, Java, and the hill countries of India now successfully compete with the Chinese by raising tea that is better in some forms

IN A MAINE LAUNDRY.—Two clergymen who were soliciting funds for a new church guilelessly inquired for the laundry in an Old Orchard hotel and were promptly ushered up in front of a sumptuous bar. "Is this the laundry?" asked one of the clergymen. "Yes, gentlemen," said the bar-tender, flipping his towel across the polished wood. "We can boil the stiffness out of a shirt front right here, to beat the band." Then his amazed visitors escaped, but they were seen coming out and—oh, well there were lots of explanations required.—From the Lewiston Journal.

Tired, Weak, Nervous Could Not Sleep.

Prof. L. D. Edwards, of Preston, Idaho, says: "I was all run down, weak, nervous and irritable through overwork. I suffered from brain fatigue, mental depression, etc. I became so weak and nervous that I could not sleep, I would arise tired, discouraged and blue. I began taking and now everything is changed. I sleep soundly, I feel bright, active and ambitious. I can do more in one day now than I used to do in a week. For this great good I give Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine the sole credit.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

It Cures."

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. All druggists sell it at $1, 6 bottles for $5, or it will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Some Inside Facts.

Such Matters Always Leak Out.

This Time It Carried the Great News Far and Wide.

Many Families All Over the Land Are Deeply Interested in the Matter.

There are many things in the lives of persons and families which, when they are known, become matters of public interest. People always want to know those things which personally concern them, which add to their welfare, their looks or their comfort. Here is a piece of news, which coming from such high authority, makes it of more than ordinary interest.

Mrs. Charles H. Heaton, residing at 143 State street, Montpelier, Vt., is a most lovely and accomplished lady. The family has the very highest social standing. Her husband has held many offices of trust in the city and in politics, and among the Masonic fraternity stands at the head. Her husband's father is president of the Montpelier Savings Bank and Trust Co., the largest bank in the city. Her father is a prominent railroad man. She writes as follows:

"Two years ago we had a terrible experience with La Grippe, and by overwork in taking care of my children and the results of the disease I was left in a very exhausted condition, in fact was nearly prostrated. I was so weak that upon the least excitement I would feel nauseated. I was as near nervous prostration as any one could be.

"Someone recommended Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to me, and I immediately began its use. I am happy to say that it completely cured me. I think it is the best medicine I ever knew of for any form of nervous or chronic disease. I have recommended it to many and shall do so upon every occasion."

This letter is of the utmost importance to you, for it tells you just what to do to be cured. If you are nervous, weak, tired, sleepless, if you have headache, indigestion, kidney or liver complaint, poor blood and weak nerves, you can surely regain your health and be as well as you ever were by taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

The strengthening and curative powers of this remedy are wonderful. Use it and you will be made well and strong. It is the discovery of Dr. Greene, the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted by all at his office, 24 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., free, personally or by letter.

A TWO-MILLION-DOLLAR COMMA.

"Oh, punctuation marks are not of much account. They're just put in for looks. I don't want to bother about them."

Such are the sentiments of a good many school-boys with regard to this branch of letter and composition writing. Others, again, appear to think that all that is necessary is to put in a comma here and there at hap-hazard, to set off the "look of the thing." How risky this way of doing things is may be learned from the following incident:

It seems that some twenty years ago, when the United States, by its Congress, was making a tariff bill, one of the sections enumerated what articles should be admitted free of duty. Among the articles specified were "all foreign fruitplants," etc., meaning plants important for transplanting, propagation or experiment.

The enrolling clerk, in copying the bill, accidentally changed the hyphen in the compound word "fruit-plants" to a comma, making it read, "all foreign fruit, plants," etc. As a result of this simple mistake, for a year, or until Congress could remedy the blunder—all the oranges, lemons, bananas, grapes, and other foreign fruits were admitted free of duty. This little mistake, which any one would be liable to make, yet could have avoided by carefulness, cost the Government not less than two million dollars. A pretty costly comma that?

A 'REFUSAL" OF PROPERTY IS NOT LEGALLY BINDING.

It may not be fully understood than an offer to purchase or to sell a farm for a given price, even though it may be in writing, is not binding on the proposer until actually accepted by the other party; therefore the proposer may retract his offer at any time before it is accepted. This is so, on the authority of Hon. A. M. Spear of Gardiner, Me., even though he should give a certain number of days in which the other party might decide whether to accept the offer or not.

What is ordinarily termed the "refusal" of property, is therefore a dangerous thing to rely upon unless you are dealing with a man whose "word is as good as his bond." This is so, although you may have fully made up your mind to take the farm but have not notified the owner of the fact, and should go to great trouble and expense in buying stock, agricultural implements, etc., or even had moved your family to take possession. Should the owner then refuse to sell, while you have nothing but his oral agreement, you would have no legal remedy, either to compel him to convey, or for expenses you may have incurred.

POET'S INTERRUPTION.

Upon the thunder-blasted cliff, scarred by the storm's resistance, he felt the glamor and the awe and mystery of existence: the magic of the thoughtful night, its endless amplitudes of light, burst on his tranced and raptured sight, that gazed into the distance.

Beneath his feet the ancient sea, its mighty anthem pealing, broke on his shores of consciousness in mighty tides of feeling—visions of mermaids 'neath the waves, sporting in glee o'er sailors' graves, through emerald pearl-emblazoned caves, his fancy was revealing.

And summer islands crowned with flowers burst from the misty ocean, and spicy archipelagoes arose in glad commotion; and dolphins on the sunlit seas were sporting with the porpoises, and sirens sang their soulful glees and mermen vowed devotion.

What voice is this that breaks his dreams between the sky and water? It sounds much like a woman's voice, and not a sea-nymph's daughter. He bent his ear and heard her say: "Now, John, don't mope the time away; come down to McElroy's cafe—two ice creams for a quarter."—New York World.

AN ARTFUL DODGER.—A shrewd old farmer, full of fun and mischief, once overreached a merchant in some transaction, and the merchant complained of the way in which he had been treated.

"Well, I'll tell you what I'll do with you," said the farmer. "I'll sell you all my live stock at a dollar a head, and I'll let you come and count them yourself."

The bargain was struck; the day was appointed to count and hand over the stock. The merchant and his assistants, in due course arrived at the farm. They counted up horses, cattle sheep, hogs and the rest. The merchant then asked when he would remove the stock.

"Wait a little!" said the keen old farmer.

"You haven't seen them all yet."

He then led the party close up to a dozen beehives, overturned one of the hives with his foot, and, amid the yells of the flying party, the farmer was heard shouting:

"Count now, ye rascals! Count! count! count!"

"Good morning, Mr. Dolyers."

"Good morning, Mr. Trivvet. What can I do for you today?"

"Well, the fact is, Mr. Dolyers—I—I—I—er, your daughter referred me to you, sir."

"Oh, she did, did she?" snorted the papa. "Well, all I've got to say is that I'm getting tired of this referring business. You are the fourth that she has sent to me in the last 10 days. I'll put a stop to it. I'll tell her that if she hasn't enough nerve to do her own rejecting, I'll accept the very next dude that she unloads on me in this way, and make her marry him. When the fellow comes along that she wants she'll accept him without taking the old man into consideration, and I don't propose to be made a scapegoat any—Well, I declare if the chap didn't actually walk off before I got done telling him what I had to say."

Mr. Dolyers resumes his work of cutting off coupons.

As for Mr. Trivvet, he never came back.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thos. Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption, tried without result everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

Electric Bitters.

This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise.—A purer medicine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseases of the liver and kidneys, will remove pimples, boils, salt rheum and other affections caused by impure blood.—Will drive malaria from the system and prevent as well as cure all malarial fevers.—For cure of headache, constipation and indigestion try Electric Bitters.—Entire satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded.—Price 50c. and $1.00 per bottle at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

THE TEACHER IS TAUGHT.—The attempt to enforce artificial politeness gives occasion for some amusing incidents. A story is told in the Boston Budget of an English landed proprietor, who sent by his servant, a young lad, a brace of English pheasants for the rector of the parish.

The boy was ushered into the room where the rector was sitting. Throwing the game at his feet, the boy said: "Here is a pair of pheasants my master has sent ye," and without taking off his hat turned to leave the room.

"Hold on," said the rector; "this is not the way to do it. You sit here, and I'll show you."

Taking up the birds the rector put on his hat and left the room. Immediately returning the rector removed his hat and bowed low to the boy, saying: "Your worship, my master has sent a brace of pheasants, which he wishes you to accept with his compliments."

"Thank you sir," said the boy, rising and bowing. "Tell your master I am much obliged to him, and here is a shilling for your trouble in bringing them to me."—Exchange.

Blatant Republican—"You must own, sir, that the Democratic party is retrograting." Honest Democrat. "Well, I'll confess that it seems to be running down Hill, just at present."—Puck.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

THE PRODIGAL PRINCE.

A Strange Reason for a Rise in the Price of Peaches.

A Russian Prince who boasted of his extravagance, so the story goes, squandered a fortune in Paris in one season. In a restaurant one day the waiter charged him three francs apiece for peaches.

"Are peaches scarce?" asked the nobleman.

"No, but prices are," was the reply.

Those who waste their bodily strength as this man wasted his cash, end in physical bankruptcy. The signs of it, which cannot be hidden, are indigestion, nervousness and a steady loss of flesh, consequent upon the weakness of the stomach. In such a case drugs are utterly useless. They are not food, and the patient needs fat.

Paskola makes fat, surely and swiftly. It is predigested, and the system takes it up at once. Mrs. Charles Bock, of 234 Twenty-fourth street, Detroit, Mich., had indigestion and took Paskola. She writes:

"By the time the first bottle was consumed, I had gained five pounds. The circles disappeared from around my eyes, and my complexion showed a marked improvement. I have now taken three bottles and have gained 14½ pounds."

"Through advice of friends," says William T. Ross, of Bridgeton, N. J., "I decided to try Paskola for my daughter who has been in poor health for several months past from loss of appetite and general debility. She had wasted away in flesh and at the time she began taking Paskola weighed 100 pounds. After two weeks' treatment she gained eight pounds. She is gaining in health and strength daily, with increasing appetite for the most hearty food that was repugnant to her before taking Paskola. As a flesh-forming food, I think it far superior to cod liver oil or other similar preparations, and am more than gratified with the results."

Thin folks who want to be fat can get Paskola of any druggist. An interesting pamphlet will be mailed free on application to The Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade St., New York.
O. P. ALLEN, Palmer, Mass.

REASON FOR THIS.

You would call a man a fool to try to run an engine with a crooked piston-rod. Yet you are attempting that when you live with your system in a disordered condition. Whatever you may be mentally, you are physically a machine. Nothing interests you more than keeping it in order. If your digestion is out of condition, or your kidneys are disordered, use Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, a medicine prepared by a famous physician, and tested for years by thousands of persons, who all endorse it.

Have Music in Your Homes.

For music has a power to charm
The social circle round,
And floating there upon the air,
Makes home enchanted ground.

It softens down the harshest mind,
It soothes the soul of all,
A heaven-born guest from out the skies
In gentle strains to fall.

It fills with joy the social hour,
Temptation drives away;
It keeps the wayward youth at home
Beneath its gentle sway.

It has the power to win the mind
To earth's more lovely things,
A precious boon from out the skies,
A dove with snow-white wings.

It never tires, but still as sweet
It echoes here and there,
Till every heart responsive breathes
Its own sweet holy air.

And home is rendered dearer far,
Diviner in its art,
When music like an angel strain
Steals softly to the heart.

O Music sweet! of heaven born!
How holy is thy sway!
The poet lays his pen aside,
The bird forgets his lay.

The world seems flitting like a star,
A charm steals o'er the brain,
For all are wrapped within the spell
Of music's witching strain.

A MOTHER'S HEART.

It seemed months instead of a week since Mrs. Hildreth had come to Balston, the lonesome little Maryland resort, whose only claim to notice was its villainous tasting spring, the waters of which were supposed to help or cure all manner of diseases. It was late in the season too; nearly all the summer guests were gone from the smaller boarding places, and only a few chronic invalids remained in the big hotel. Not that Mrs. Hildreth cared for that; she hadn't come there for society, and she had no disease, except of the mind. Uncharitable people might have insinuated that she had come to sulk, but to herself she had fled to this quiet spot to be alone with her thoughts, and to mourn over the wreck of all her hopes.

There was nothing to live for. It was ten years since her husband died, and now her only child, the little Dorothy she had almost worshipped, had deliberately married a good-for-nothing, fortune-hunting pauper, and she would never see her again. This is how Mrs. Hildreth put it to herself, and she rejoiced that her far-seeing husband had left his property exclusively to her, feeling sure that she could be trusted to do what was right by the child.

"And he shall never have a cent of my money," she said, fiercely, to herself, on one of those long, solitary walks that she took every day. "They may starve, both of them, for all I will lift a finger to interfere." Then, worn out and more miserable than ever, she would drag herself back to her boarding place, where the kindly landlady, seeing that her guest was unhappy, would vainly try to interest and amuse her.

Now there were other ways of looking upon this marriage, which had so changed the whole current of her life for the mother. Dorothy Hildreth had grown up a sweet, lovely girl, full of tender, caressing ways, and never questioning her mother's will until, at nineteen, she had fallen in love with handsome George Raymond, who, in his turn, had surrendered his heart completely the first time he met the beautiful girl. For a year Mrs. Hildreth contented herself with a passive resistance, keeping a watchful eye on her daughter meanwhile, and then appeared a milliomaire, fifteen years older than Dorothy, and he also laid his heart and fortune at her feet. Mrs. Hildreth lent a willing ear to his suit but her daughter would none of him, and then came a long and bitter struggle. The mother finally forbade the obnoxious George Raymond to call at her house, and Dorothy, while still clinging to her lover, refused to marry him without that mother's consent.

To everyone else, George was a bright, hard-working young lawyer, who was bound in time to succeed in life; he had no enemies, and not a man could be found who had a word to urge against him outside of his lack of riches. Dorothy did all she could to break down the wall of opposition, but things grew worse with every month, and finally she yielded to the persuasions of her lover, and, going to the home of her minister, whose wife was heart and soul in their favor, they were quietly married and went directly to housekeeping in the modest little flat which George was able to provide.

It was a manly, straightforward letter that the young husband sent to his new-made mother-in-law; he could not give Dorothy such a home as she had always been used to, but he would do the best he could, and work with might and main to make it a better one. He was sorry for the underhanded way in which they had been married, but he reminded her that he was not allowed to see Dorothy at her home, and though he had done his best to clear away the obstacles in his way, yet things had seemed to grow even harder with each passing month. And he asked her that, now the irrevokable step was taken, if all that was unpleasant might not be forgiven and forgotten, and if in time he might not be as a son to Dorothy's mother.

But this letter, and the tear-stained little note from Dorothy herself, had no power to move the bitterly disappointed woman. She ignored the presumptuous bridegroom entirely, but wrote a few brief lines to her daughter that she would never see her again unless she was ready to leave George Raymond forever. Until then she would try to forget that she even had a child. As for forgivness, she would far rather see her dead and in her coffin than married to a petty-fogging lawyer, whose only aim in the whole matter was the hope of eventually handling her dead father's money, but who would find that he had made a sad miscalculation in his scheme. Naturally she heard no more from George Raymond, and the one other note from Dorothy had been returned unopened. Then, after a miserable month in which she shut herself up and refused to see any one, she suddenly packed her trunk and departed for Balston.

How hard and bitter she felt toward the whole world, as she strolled aimlessly along through the quiet woods, and how pitiless the blue sky seemed as it showed through the tops of the pine trees over her head. After all those years of love and care lavished on the only thing she had to make life worth living, and then to be rewarded by such an act of black ingratitude. She walked back to the quiet Southern home where she had taken refuge, and prepared to spend another of the long nights that so tired her very soul.

"Have you seen Uncle Toby yet, Mrs. Hildreth?" asked the landlady with a pitying glance at the sad-faced woman trying to eat her solitary meal.

"Who is Uncle Toby?" she inquired languidly, with hardly a show of interest.

"Why, he is the only showpiece we have in Balston," answered Mrs. Mason; "an old darky, who used to be a slave when he was a child before the war. He lives in a cabin down the road a piece with his little girl—his wife died years ago—and picks up a living doing odd jobs here and there. But he plays the violin and sings all the odd plantation songs, and the way he dances jigs and breakdowns is wonderful. The summer boarders are always having him up to the hotel to amuse them. He's generally round here every two or three days to see if I have anything for him to do, but I haven't seen him now for nearly a week. Suppose I call him in sometime while you're here. I reckon you might enjoy his music first rate."

Mrs. Hildreth assented indifferently, and then forgot all about it; but a few mornings later as she sat in the living room, looking mournfully out at the misty skies, Mrs. Mason suddenly appeared with a coal black individual, whom she introduced as "Uncle Toby."

"I told Joe to stop at the cabin this morning and tell Uncle Toby to call round with his violin," she said, "and he's just this minute come. I knew it was too wet for you to go out, and I reckoned he might amuse you for an hour or so." Then she bustled off to her work, leaving the two together.

Mrs. Hildreth roused herself from her gloomy thoughts, and gazed curiously at her visitor. He was very tall and very black, dressed in a varied assortment of ill fitting, but scrupulously clean and well patched garments, and might have been any age from forty to sixty.

"So you are Uncle Toby?" said she.

"Yes, Mis'," answered the apparition, as he pulled his woolly forelock, and returned her gaze with a pair of great, solemn eyes. "Mis' Mason she done sent word you might like to have me come up and sing some ob de ole songs."

"Yes, Uncle Toby, sing; perhaps you can make me forget my troubles for awhile," she returned.

The negro gazed at her with a strange look on his weather-beaten face, but made no reply. He tuned his violin, and, after a few wailing minor strains, began a wild, sad plantation song that made the very heart-strings of his listener quiver with agony.

"Not that!" she broke in. "Sing something brighter and livelier."

But though he went from "Ellie Rhee" and "Swanee River" clear through to "Old Jim Crow," there was the same undercurrent of sadness running through the music, and at last Mrs. Hildreth could endure no more.

"Try a breakdown, Uncle Toby," she said. "Mrs. Mason says you can dance all the old jigs."

Laying down his violin, the old darkey rose to his feet, and starting a merry whistle, began an intricate jig full of double shuffles and seemingly impossible twists, that made his audience's head fairly dizzy. For a while she watched the nimble feet, then suddenly looking up, saw the tears streaming down the old man's face.

"Why, sit down, Uncle Toby," she cried; "you are tired out. Does it always bring the tears when you dance?"

"No, Miss Hildreth," he returned; "never befo'. But I ain't feelin' real chipper to-day. My little gal, she ben sick quite a spell wid de fever, and las' night she died. She's down thar all alone in de cabin now, and 'pears like I can't sing and dance no-how to-day."

Mrs. Hildreth sprang to her feet in dismay. "Why didn't you tell me? What made you try to dance?" she demanded.

"I can't be doin' no mo' for Little Lucy now, honey, and I'se got to earn what I can for to bury her," returned Uncle Toby mournfully.

"And you've been singing and dancing for me, while your heart was breaking," and forgetting the rain, her own sorrows, everything else, she hurried down to the cabin by the side of the stricken father.

In a few hours everything was done that was possible, and Uncle Toby was bidden to have no more thought of funeral expenses. Late in the afternoon Mrs. Hildreth stood for a moment beside the body of the little dead girl, and watched the father as his big, toil-worn hand lovingly smoothed the cold forehead.

"Has you any chillun, Mis' Hildreth?" he asked sadly.

"Yes, one daughter," she answered, after a moment's hesitation, in a choked voice.

"I'se glad for you," said the old man; "and don' never do nothin' to her as you'll be sorry for when the Lord tekes her away. I cuffed little Lucy once 'cause she done kep' a-pesterin' me with questions when I was a-tryin' to tune the fiddle"—and the father's voice broke as he lay his face down on the pillow beside his dead. "Toby wouldn't hit his baby no mo'," he sobbed, while the listener laid her hand gently on the bowed head for an instant, and then stole quietly out.

She went straight to her room at Mrs. Mason's, and, drawing out her writing desk, first addressed an envelope. That, perhaps, was the hardest of all, and her face contracted for a moment as she looked at what she had written:—

"Mrs. George C. Raymond,
No. 26 Clifford Street,
Boston,
Mass.

Then she began her letter, and the pen fairly flew over the paper, while ever before her seemed the vision of that father in his lonely cabin, vainly mourning that once in a fit of anger he had struck his baby.

"I said I had rather see you dead, little Dorothy," she continued, "but I don't mean it, nor the other bitter things I wrote. I was hurt and disappointed because I couldn't see you in the grand place I had planned for you. Can you forgive me for sending back your dear little letter, and will George forget the hard, unjust things I wrote him? Mother takes it all back; she is so sorry and miserable, and she wants her little girl so much. Will you be there Saturday to meet me in the old home, you and George, both my children, to stay, during the few years I have to live, with your loving mother?"

Late as it was, she found some one to send her letter so it should go on the first mail in the morning, and then, for the first time in long, weary weeks, she closed her tired eyes and slept a peaceful, dreamless sleep.—Adeline C. Topham in Good Housekeeping.

HE PANTS FOR FAME—A boy in the Wichita schools has been suspended for reading the following essay on "Pants:" "Pants are made for men and not men for pants. When a man pants for a woman and a woman pants for a man they are a pair of pants. Such pants don't last. Pants are like molasses; they are thinner in hot weather and thicker in cold. The man in the moon changes his pants during the eclipse. Don't you go to the pantry for pants: you might be mistaken. Such mistakes make breeches of promise. There has been much discussion as to whether pants is singular or plural. Seems to us when men wear pants they are plural, and when they don't wear any pants it is singular. Men go on a tear in their pants, and it is all right, but when the pants go on a tear it is all wrong."

Gardens.

The wide, fair gardens, the rich lush gardens,
Which no man planted, and no man tills,
Their strong seeds drifted, their brave bloom lifted,
Near and far o'er the vales and hills;
Sip the bees from their cups of sweetness,
Poises above them the wild, free wing,
And night and morn from their doors are borne
The dreams of the tunes that blithe hearts sing.

The waving gardens, the fragrant gardens
That toss in the sun by the broad highway,
Growing together, gorse and heather,
Aster and golden rod all the day.
Poppies dark with the wine of slumber,
Daisies bright with the look of dawn,
The gentian blue, and the long year through
The flowers that carry the seasons on.

And the dear old gardens, the pleasant gardens
Where mother used to potter about,
Tying and pulling, and sparingly culling,
And watching each bud as its flower laughed out;
Hollyhocks here, and the prince's feather,
Larkspur and primrose, and lilies white,
Sweet were the dear old-fashioned gardens
Where we kissed the mother, and said, "Good-night."

THE SAGACITY OF A HORSE.

Deer Island, where our Boston House of Industry is situated, is one of the prettiest in Boston harbor. It can be reached in half an hour by the little steamboat "J. Putnam Bradlee," which runs twice a day between the city and the island.

There is a horse at Deer Island named Sam, who has drawn the 'bus for many years. Joe (the driver) and Sam take the 'bus from the stable to the wharf when the boat comes in, stopping at the Institution building on the way for the Superintendent. They afterwards carry him back to the office and then go to the stable. The boat leaves Deer Island for the city on her second return trip about five o'clock in the afternoon, so the 'bus gets back in time for Sam to have his supper at 6 o'clock.

A few weeks ago the "Bradlee" was unavoidably detained, and did not get away from the Island until after dark—about seven o'clock in the evening.

Joe had driven the 'bus to the office, but the Superintendent was not quite ready to start; there were one or two last things that claimed his attention. He also wished to speak to one of the men, and asked Joe if he would go and find him.

It took the driver some minutes to hunt up the man, and in the meantime the Superintendent had finished his work. It was now quite late. He hastily ran down the steps, jumped into the 'bus and shut the door, which was the customary signal for Joe to go ahead.

The 'bus started, went down to the wharf, steered in and out among the piles of lumber and loads of granite curbing that lay here and there on the way, and upon reaching the boat turned round and "backed up" to the gang-plank, as usual. It was not until the Superintendent was about to step out of the 'bus that he remembered about the man. He then noticed that Joe was not in the box.

Sam alone had brought the 'bus down!

This little incident exhibits something of old Sam's intelligence. But the most puzzling thing of all is this:

"Why didn't Sam go to the stable at that hour of the evening instead of to the boat?"—Cornelia W. McCleary in our Dumb Animals.

A MINER'S LUCK.

The miners of New Mexico tell a queer story which illustrates forcibly the miner's belief in his luck. A miner named John Quincy Adams was prospecting somewhere in the mountains. While wearily trudging along one hot day through a gulch where the sun had a good chance at his back, he suddenly smelled smoke. The phenomenon struck him as odd, and he glanced quickly in every direction to ascertain the origin of the smoke, but, seeing nothing, resumed his journey.

A moment later the smell returned stronger than ever, the breeze just then blowing in the direction in which he was walking, a light wreath of vapor curled about his ears and gave him to understand that his haversack was on fire. Like all miners he carried a large lens for the purpose of examining the specimens and the sand in his pan, and the truth flashed upon him. For want of room he had hung the glass on the outside and the rays of the sun had been concentrated on his haversack, which was thus set fire. As among its contents were twelve or fifteen pounds of powder, he lost no time in dropping the dangerous burden and getting as far away as possible before it exploded.

The haversack fell between two huge stones and cuddled down out of sight. Adams soon reached a safe distance and disconsolately watched the smoke arising from his sole worldly possessions. Suddenly there was a deafening report. The ground trembled, and Adams dodged behind a huge stone to escape the fragments of flying rock. Rising, he went to the spot to gather up what he could find, when his eyes almost started out of his head at seeing the quartz that had been blown up fairly glittering with gold. His powder had done better on its own account than it had ever done on his, and had literally blown open a gold mine for his benefit. He was made a rich man in an instant, and named his mine the "Nick o' Time."—Chicago Times.

PROMPTLY.—Impetuously he pleaded.

"Must I wait?" he demanded. "You have plighted your troth to me. Do not keep me in agony. Is a long engagement necessary?"

She hung her head in sweet confusion and was silent.

"How long?" he cried.

At last her lips moved.

"Long enough"—a wave of color swept across her face—"to get my hat. I can put on my gloves as we go."

That seemed quite satisfactory.—Detroit Tribune.

A WOMAN'S TELEGRAM.—This is the message the telegraph messenger handed to him:

"Come down as soon as you can, I am dying. KATE."

Eight hours later he arrived at the summer hotel, to be met on the piazza by Kate herself.

"Why—what did you mean by sending me such a message?" he asked.

"Oh," she gurgled, "I wanted to say that I was dying to see you, but my ten words ran out and I had to stop."—Indianapolis Journal.

THE RETORT COURTEOUS.—A really polite Frenchman can be complimentary in the face of unkind remarks.

Such a man, who had been bestowing upon a lady many compliments, asked her why she kept a large and apparently savage dog which had just entered the room.

"I bought him only yesterday," she answered, flippantly, "and I am going to keep him in my front hall to eat up my admirers."

"Ah, ze poor animal!" exclaimed the Frenchman, "to die of indigestion!"—Youth's Companion.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 5, 1894.

FREDERICK H. GILLETT of Springfield was renominated for Congress by acclamation at the convention of the second district Republicans in Springfield Wednesday.

NEXT Monday the Democrats will hold their state convention in Boston, and after looking about in vain for some one else to head the ticket have finally induced John E. Russell to run again.

IT is officially announced that the national convention of the Christian Endeavor society in July, 1895, will be held in Boston instead of San Francisco, the railroad managers having failed to make satisfactory rates to the Pacific coast.

DAVID B. HILL of New York is not likely to have all plain sailing in his race for the governorship this fall, and so on to the presidential nomination next year. The independent Democrats are inclined to bolt the nomination, and a number of New York papers are in open revolt against him.

CONNECTICUT cities and towns held their elections Monday, and the result was Republican majorities in almost every instance, very few places being reported where the Democrats were in the ascendency. In some places the Republicans carried the town for the first time in years, and by handsome majorities.

IN the ninth Hampden representative district, which includes the towns of Longmeadow, East Longmeadow, Hampden, Monson, Wales and Wilbraham, the Republican nomination is conceded to what was formerly the town of Longmeadow, and Longmeadow and East Longmeadow are trying to settle which shall name the candidate.

RECORDS in all kinds of speed trials have been taking a tumble this year until one is tempted to wonder if the annihilation of time and space will not be ultimately accomplished. The bicycle record for a mile has been lowered to 1.50 3-5 by John S. Johnson, being made with a flying start, but the nearest approach to this time by a horse is 1.58¼, paced yesterday by "Flying Jib," hitched to a running mate.

THE Republican state convention will be held in Music Hall, Boston, at 10 a. m. tomorrow, and the outcome cannot be foretold with the usual certainty. For some time rumors have been going the rounds that the A. P. A. has decided to show its force in the election this fall, and had marked one of the present officials for a victim in the state election. It was first announced that the one to be slaughtered was Treasurer Phillips of Springfield; then it was secretary Olin, then Governor Greenhalge, and finally all three. Later reports would seem to indicate that either the order has not the strength originally claimed for it, or that its members cannot agree on candidates for the positions named, and it is not unlikely that all the present officials will be renominated.

ACCOUNTS of death by the electric wires can be found in almost every issue of the daily papers, and the fatality at Boston yesterday, with its ghastly details, might well make way for the question whether, after all, we yet know enough about this mysterious force to warrant having much to do with it. A workman engaged in cleaning a lamp received a shock which left him limp across the wires at the top of a pole, a blue blaze emitting from his nose, eyes, mouth and ears. Another man who went to his assistance received a shock which threw him from the pole to the pavement, where he struck on his head and fractured his skull, dying soon after. The accident was caused by a "dead" wire, or one not in use, crossing the live wire and coming in contact with the victims. These "dead" wires are well named, do their work in a sure manner, and give no warning of their presence.

IT is not unlikely that the convention of the first Hampden senatorial district, to be held in the district court room in Palmer at 10 o'clock next Monday, will be of more interest than these occasions are usually. The district sent Edwin F. Lyford of Springfield last year, and he made a good record. It is customary to give a renomination to the senators, and there is no reason why Mr. Lyford is not entitled to one according to custom. But the A. P. A. of Springfield is inclined to run Edward S. Bradford, and his friends are making a push for him. There has been some talk of a candidate from the eastern part of the district in case the Springfield factions could not come to an understanding among themselves, or if neither could summon strength enough to nominate its man, and the name of W. W. Leach of Palmer has been mentioned, but he announces that he will not be a candidate against Mr. Lyford, and that he is in favor of Mr. Lyford's nomination and election. Both sides are claiming enough delegates to nominate their man on the first ballot.

THE 10th Hampden Representative Republican convention will be held in the district court room in Palmer next Monday at noon. The honor of naming the candidate goes to Holland this year, and it is understood that the name of H. E. Wallis will be presented to the convention. Mr. Wallis is a prosperous young farmer, and will no doubt be a credit to the district. All is not harmony in the town, however, which last year cast 25 Republican ballots. There are said to be four others who would like to be the "member from Holland" this winter, and they have apparently started in with the motto: "Anything to beat Wallis." A paper has been circulated claiming that the majority of the voters knew nothing of the arrangement whereby Holland was to name the candidate, that no official notice was sent them and that Holland doesn't want to present any name to the convention. It has received a number of signatures, but it is claimed that not all are those of Republicans and that not all of the names can be found on the voting list. Delegations from both sides have been scurrying over the district during the last ten days, and the delegate who has not been interviewed half a dozen times is fortunate. As the Holland delegate was regularly chosen by the caucus there the convention will undoubtedly nominate the man whose name he presents.

Too many rascals go free because of some slight defect in the papers under which they are indicted, and some pretty small things are made to answer for defects. At the trial of Dr. J. C. Moore, charged with embezzling the funds of the National Bank of the Commonwealth of Manchester," the indictment read the "Commonwealth National Bank of said Manchester, N. H., a "defect" which allowed the prisoner to go free. Where is the sense in this? All concerned knew what bank was meant.

A terrible cyclone swept over Little Rock, Ark., Tuesday night, wrecking the principal business part of the city, the insane asylum and the penitentary, and doing damage to the extent of $1,000,000. A large number of lives were lost.

James J. Corbett has decided that he will give all who wish a chance to meet him in the ring, and will devote the first week in July next to fighting one each night, after which he says he shall retire from prize fighting.

A Westfield man committed suicide last Saturday by drowning himself in a barrel containing only 12 inches of water, after being rescued once.

A Worcester man who had been left only $1 by his mother's will, while his sister had been more fortunate, shot her dead last Saturday.

By an error in the report of the 2.35 race at the fair the time of the fastest heat, won by G. W. Rice's "Taras" of Springfield, was given as 2.27, when it should have been 2.39.

The premiums awarded at the September fair of the agricultural society will be ready for payment the 15th, and those not called for by December 1st will revert to the society.

Miss Emily M. Tucker of Springfield is endeavoring to form a class in china painting in this village, and any who wish to join may learn more of the matter from Mrs. H. W. McGregory.

Rev. John J. Scrubey of Manchester, N. H., is to take charge of the services of the People's church for a few weeks, at the close of which Rev. G. A. Francis of Springfield will begin his pastorate, having accepted a call to the church.

Extra meetings have been held in the Baptist church this week, in charge of Rev. R. B. Esten of Westfield. They commenced Tuesday afternoon, and have continued each afternoon and evening, but will close with the one this evening.

At the quarterly meeting of the Men's Sunday Evening Club of the Congregational church Sunday evening these officers were elected: President, J. B. Shaw; vice president, J. C. Wing; secretary, L. E. Chandler; treasurer, F. D. Barton.

The Stafford fair always attracts large numbers of Palmer people, and special trains will be run next Wednesday and Thursday, leaving Palmer at 9.55 a. m. The fare for the round trip, including admission to the grounds, will be 85 cents.

The directors of the agricultural society find that after all bills are paid they will be about $190 in the hole as the result of the rain and consequent slim attendance on the second day of the fair, a much better showing than they dared hope for.

A number of dishes on which donations of food were received at the W. C. T. U. dining tent on the fair grounds were left there, and have been taken to the house of Mrs. Hubbard Lawrence, where the owners are requested to call and get them.

A Democratic caucus will be held in the town house next Tuesday evening at 7.30, for the purpose of chosing delegates to the representative, senatorial and county conventions, and to choose a town committee for the year beginning January 1st.

W. H. Smail, superintendent of schools, opened a discussion on the outline of a course of studies for the smaller high schools at the meeting of the Massachusetts Town and District Superintendents' Association, held in the state house at Boston to-day.

The Palmer Water Company is so much encouraged over its success in finding water with its first driven well that another is being put down, and has already reached a depth of about 40 feet. Probably several more will be put down before cold weather.

Governor Greenhalge, accompanied by Adj. Gen. Dalton, came to Palmer yesterday afternoon on the 1.17 train, on his way to the Belchertown fair. They were met at the station here by Capt. Anderson, the party being taken to Belchertown in Twiss's hack.

The varnish on the backs of the pews in the Congregational church has been inclined to be sticky this summer, much to the annoyance of ladies with dresses of light color or delicate fabric, and the trouble is to be remedied by having the backs of the pews upholstered.

No street lights were run Sunday evening on account of the scarcity of water in the river, and as the skies were clouded it was decidedly precarious work for travelers on foot or in teams. L. E. Moore's carriage collided with another while on his way home from church, but no particular damage was done.

W. E. Shaw has resigned his position as head clerk in the freight office of the Boston and Albany road at Palmer to accept a more lucrative position under his brother, who is agent for the New York and New England road at Worcester. He leaves to-morrow evening, and will be succeeded by H. N. Fisherdick of Ware.

James H. Canty, formerly in the employ of the New London Northern road at Palmer, and one of the most popular conductors on the line, was married at Norwich Tuesday to Miss Nellie M. T. Doyle of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Canty will be at home to friends after October 15th at 12 North Thames street, Norwich.

The Ladies' Tuesday Social Club met for the first time this season with Mrs. C. B. Ellis Tuesday afternoon, and these officers were elected: President, Miss Brigham; vice president, Mrs. J. C. Wing; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Woolrich. The club will take up the study of Whittier, and the next meeting will be next Tuesday afternoon with Miss Brigham.

There was a sadly disappointed farmer in this village Wednesday afternoon. When the clouds looked like rain he sent some men to rake up a lot of rowen he had cut, but they, being unfamiliar with the ground, raked up that in the next field belonging to his neighbor, leaving his to be cared for in the best manner possible when the owner found out the mistake.

Conductor Tryon of the Ware River road brought an unusually large turtle with him on his return trip last evening, which he had captured beside the track at Williamsville. The shell measured 11½ by 14½ inches across, and the length from tip of nose to tip of tail was 31 inches. The weight was about 25 pounds, and the trainmen declared that this one wasn't more than half the size of another they had seen near the same place.

The following cases have been entered in the superior court at Springfield: Charles Quinn of Palmer against the Central Vermont Railroad for $10,000 damages for injuries received while in its employ; Florence McCarthy of Springfield against the Boston Duck Co. of Bondsville for $10,000 damages for injuries received while in its employ; William O'Connell of Palmer against Marcus D. Sullivan and another of Palmer for $2000, action of contract.

Dr. O. P. Roller, who has been assisting Dr. C. W. Cross in his dental rooms for some time, ceased his labors there Saturday night and has gone to Philadelphia. Dr. Cross is to enlarge his apartments by the addition of the other room on the front of the building, heretofore occupied as an office by the Palmer Water Co., which will have rooms in the rear of the building. New windows will be put in the rooms to be occupied by Dr. Cross, and they will also be freshly painted and papered. With the completion of the improvements he will have a handsome and convenient office.

A peculiarly pathetic case was that of an insame woman who was found a few days ago at the railroad station. After she had been noticed about the place for a good share of the day inquiry was made as to her destination, and her condition discovered. She had been West with relatives, but had become discontented and started for New London, being given a ticket. As she had been somewhat unbalanced at times before a letter was given her stating the facts in the matter and asking that she be given assistance if it became necessary. She was sent to Northampton for treatment.

A meeting of the young men of St. Paul's church for the purpose of forming a Pauline Brotherhood was held last evening in the chapel of the church. The pastor explained the origin and object of the society' which embraces a secret degree and ritual work based on the epistles of the apostle for whom the brotherhood is named. While its chief purpose is to develop literary, moral and spiritual attainments among its members, yet it aims to reach young men in all classes and help them into a higher life, both secular and religious. Another meeting will be held next Tuesday evening in the same place at 8.15. All young men of the village are invited, as this brotherhood will be non-denominational.

The annual "Visiting Day" of St. Paul's church Sunday school will occur next Sunday. All friends of the schoo are invited to attend the special services of the morning session and inspect its work. The church quartette will assist in the singing, short speeches will be made by several, and a "Sunday School Thermometer" will be presented. The full programme of the exercises will be as follows:

Opening service.
Singing. Quartette.
Teaching of Lesson—"Jesus at Nazareth."
Remarks by the pastor. "The excellencies and small defects of the International, and the excellencies and large defects of the Blakeslee and other systems of lessons."
Remarks by officers and others. "What can we do to make our Sunday school a greater power in the life and work of our church?"
Presentation of Sunday school thermometer.
Closing exercises.

While the JOURNAL is always ready to publish legitimate news items, no matter from what source they are received, and will gladly receive items from others than its regular correspondents, persons who send such to the office by mail are reminded that no attention is paid to anonymous communications. The name of the writer must accompany the item, or it goes into the waste basket, no matter how much it may savor of genuineness. The name of the sender will not be published, but it must be known in order that the editors may protect themselves from imposition. Several unsigned items have been consigned to the waste basket within the past few weeks, and those who have sent such and wondered why they did not appear in the JOURNAL'S columns will now know the reason.

The registrars of voters will be in session at the district court room in this village next Friday from 2 to 4 p. m., for the purpose of revising the voting list. The new box for use in determining the fitness of applicants for registration has arrived. In the test for reading it has been customary to try all applicants on the same sentence, and it was possible for an illiterate person to be taught the test so that it could be repeated from memory with every appearance of reading. By the new arrangement slips bearing different paragraphs are put into a hexagonal box having a length of 14 inches and a diameter of 13 inches, with hinged doors on alternate sides, mounted in a framework with a pivot at each end so that it can be revolved. The slips are thoroughly mixed by turning the box, and the applicant for registration must be able to read the slip drawn at random.

James Barbour intends to open a meat market in the basement of Shaw Bro's. store as soon as the vacant rooms can be set in order. Mr. Barbour has purchased a meat cart and horse, and will make the rounds as usual, being sure to obtain a fair portion of the meat trade in this place.

The Baptist church presented a very pretty appearance last Sunday morning in consequence of the tasteful decorations, which were intended to greet the pastor on his return from a few weeks' vacation. The chancel was festooned with evergreens and wild flowers, and the pulpit was adorned with some handsome plants. During the morning service a number of little girls in chorus sang a welcome to the pastor, and the morning's devotions were as enjoyable as any which have been held in the church for some time.

The observance of "Rallying Day" by the U. E. church Sunday school last Sunday was a successful occasion. The church was filled to its utmost capacity with an attentive audience, which was delighted with the review and blackboard illustration of the quarter's lessons by George Pease of Springfield. Mr. Morse of Belchertown also gave a very interesting talk on Sunday school work, which in addition to unusually good singing rendered the day one of the best "Rallying" Sundays which has been held by this school.

An incident occurred last Saturday evening while the usual mission meeting was in progress which was very disagreeable to those who are interested in mission work in this place. It seems that Mr. Allen, who was formerly pastor at Ludlow Center, was conducting the meeting, and during his remarks made some injudicious statements regarding a religious denomination which embraces a large proportion of the community, which caused a number of those present to resent the imputations by hooting and otherwise interrupting the service. However this conduct may appear to some people, it is the opinion of the peaceable citizens that those who are desirous of giving spiritual admonition ought not to confine themselves to sectarian censure, and that our night policeman ought to disperse unruly crowds of people when found on the sidewalks or in any place.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 5, 1894.

FREDERICK H. GILLETT of Springfield was renominated for Congress by acclamation at the convention of the second district Republicans in Springfield Wednesday.

NEXT Monday the Democrats will hold their state convention in Boston, and after looking about in vain for some one else to head the ticket have finally induced John E. Russell to run again.

IT is officially announced that the national convention of the Christian Endeavor society in July, 1895, will be held in Boston instead of San Francisco, the railroad managers having failed to make satisfactory rates to the Pacific coast.

DAVID B. HILL of New York is not likely to have all plain sailing in his race for the governorship this fall, and so on to the presidential nomination next year. The independent Democrats are inclined to bolt the nomination, and a number of New York papers are in open revolt against him.

CONNECTICUT cities and towns held their elections Monday, and the result was Republican majorities in almost every instance, very few places being reported where the Democrats were in the ascendency. In some places the Republicans carried the town for the first time in years, and by handsome majorities.

IN the ninth Hampden representative district, which includes the towns of Longmeadow, East Longmeadow, Hampden, Monson, Wales and Wilbraham, the Republican nomination is conceded to what was formerly the town of Longmeadow, and Longmeadow and East Longmeadow are trying to settle which shall name the candidate.

RECORDS in all kinds of speed trials have been taking a tumble this year until one is tempted to wonder if the annihilation of time and space will not be ultimately accomplished. The bicycle record for a mile has been lowered to 1.50 3-5 by John S. Johnson, being made with a flying start, but the nearest approach to this time by a horse is 1.58½, paced yesterday by "Flying Jib," hitched to a running mate.

THE Republican state convention will be held in Music Hall, Boston, at 10 a. m. tomorrow, and the outcome cannot be foretold with the usual certainty. For some time rumors have been going the rounds that the A. P. A. has decided to show its force in the election this fall, and had marked one of the present officials for a victim in the state election. It was first announced that the one to be slaughtered was Treasurer Phillips of Springfield; then it was secretary Olin, then Governor Greenhalge, and finally all three. Later reports would seem to indicate that either the order has not the strength originally claimed for it, or that its members cannot agree on candidates for the positions named, and it is not unlikely that all the present officials will be renominated.

ACCOUNTS of death by the electric wires can be found in almost every issue of the daily papers, and the fatality at Boston yesterday, with its ghastly details, might well make way for the question whether, after all, we yet know enough about this mysterious force to warrant having much to do with it. A workman engaged in cleaning a lamp received a shock which left him limp across the wires at the top of a pole, a blue blaze emitting from his nose, eyes, mouth and ears. Another man who went to his assistance received a shock which threw him from the pole to the pavement, where he struck on his head and fractured his skull, dying soon after. The accident was caused by a "dead" wire, or one not in use, crossing the live wire and coming in contact with the victims. These "dead" wires are well named, do their work in a sure manner, and give no warning of their presence.

IT is not unlikely that the convention of the first Hampden senatorial district, to be held in the district court room in Palmer at 10 o'clock next Monday, will be of more interest than these occasions are usually. The district sent Edwin F. Lyford of Springfield last year, and he made a good record. It is customary to give a renomination to the senators, and there is no reason why Mr. Lyford is not entitled to one according to custom. But the A. P. A. of Springfield is inclined to run Edward S. Bradford, and his friends are making a push for him. There has been some talk of a candidate from the eastern part of the district in case the Springfield factions could not come to an understanding among themselves, or if neither could summon strength enough to nominate its man, and the name of W. W. Leach of Palmer has been mentioned, but he announces that he will not be a candidate against Mr. Lyford, and that he is in favor of Mr. Lyford's nomination and election. Both sides are claiming enough delegates to nominate their man on the first ballot.

THE 10th Hampden Representative Republican convention will be held in the district court room in Palmer next Monday at noon. The honor of naming the candidate goes to Holland this year, and it is understood that the name of H. E. Wallis will be presented to the convention. Mr. Wallis is a prosperous young farmer, and will no doubt be a credit to the district. All is not harmony in the town, however, which last year cast 25 Republican ballots. There are said to be four others who would like to be the "member from Holland" this winter, and they have apparently started in with the motto: "Anything to beat Wallis." A paper has been circulated claiming that the majority of the voters knew nothing of the arrangement whereby Holland was to name the candidate, that no official notice was sent them and that Holland doesn't want to present any name to the convention. It has received a number of signatures, but it is claimed that not all are those of Republicans and that not all of the names can be found on the voting list. Delegations from both sides have been scurrying over the district during the last ten days, and the delegate who has not been interviewed half a dozen times is fortunate. As the Holland delegate was regularly chosen by the caucus there the convention will undoubtedly nominate the man whose name he presents.

Too many rascals go free because of some slight defect in the papers under which they are indicted, and some pretty small things are made to answer for defects. At the trial of Dr. J. C. Moore, charged with embezzling the funds of the National Bank of the Commonwealth of Manchester," the indictment read the "Commonwealth National Bank of said Manchester, N. H., a "defect" which allowed the prisoner to go free. Where is the sense in this? All concerned knew what bank was meant.

A terrible cyclone swept over Little Rock, Ark., Tuesday night, wrecking the principal business part of the city, the insane asylum and the penitentary, and doing damage to the extent of $1,000,000. A large number of lives were lost.

James J. Corbett has decided that he will give all who wish a chance to meet him in the ring, and will devote the first week in July next to fighting one each night, after which he says he shall retire from prize fighting.

A Westfield man committed suicide last Saturday by drowning himself in a barrel containing only 12 inches of water, after being rescued once.

A Worcester man who had been left only $1 by his mother's will, while his sister had been more fortunate, shot her dead last Saturday.

James H. Canty, formerly in the employ of the New London Northern road at Palmer, and one of the most popular conductors on the line, was married at Norwich Tuesday to Miss Nellie M. T. Doyle of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Canty will be at home to friends after October 15th at 12 North Thames street, Norwich.

The Ladies' Tuesday Social Club met for the first time this season with Mrs. C. B. Ellis Tuesday afternoon, and these officers were elected: President, Miss Brigham; vice president, Mrs. J. C. Wing; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Woolrich. The club will take up the study of Whittier, and the next meeting will be next Tuesday afternoon with Miss Brigham.

There was a sadly disappointed farmer in this village Wednesday afternoon. When the clouds looked like rain he sent some men to rake up a lot of rowen he had cut, but they, being unfamiliar with the ground, raked up that in the next field belonging to his neighbor, leaving his to be cared for in the best manner possible when the owner found out the mistake.

Conductor Tryon of the Ware River road brought an unusually large turtle with him on his return trip last evening, which he had captured beside the track at Williamsville. The shell measured 11½ by 14½ inches across, and the length from tip of nose to tip of tail was 31 inches. The weight was about 25 pounds, and the trainmen declared that this one wasn't more than half the size of another they had seen near the same place.

The following cases have been entered in the superior court at Springfield: Charles Quinn of Palmer against the Central Vermont Railroad for $10,000 damages for injuries received while in its employ; Florence McCarthy of Springfield against the Boston Duck Co. of Bondsville for $10,000 damages for injuries received while in its employ; William O'Connell of Palmer against Marcus D. Sullivan and another of Palmer for $2000, action of contract.

Dr. O. P. Roller, who has been assisting Dr. C. W. Cross in his dental rooms for some time, ceased his labors there Saturday night and has gone to Philadelphia. Dr. Cross is to enlarge his apartments by the addition of the other room on the front of the building, heretofore occupied as an office by the Palmer Water Co., which will have rooms in the rear of the building. New windows will be put in the rooms to be occupied by Dr. Cross, and they will also be freshly painted and papered. With the completion of the improvements he will have a handsome and convenient office.

A peculiarly pathetic case was that of an insame woman who was found a few days ago at the railroad station. After she had been noticed about the place for a good share of the day inquiry was made as to her destination, and her condition discovered. She had been West with relatives, but had become discontented and started for New London, being given a ticket. As she had been somewhat unbalanced at times before a letter was given her stating the facts in the matter and asking that she be given assistance if it became necessary. She was sent to Northampton for treatment.

A meeting of the young men of St. Paul's church for the purpose of forming a Pauline Brotherhood was held last evening in the chapel of the church. The pastor explained the origin and object of the society' which embraces a secret degree and ritual work based on the epistles of the apostle for whom the brotherhood is named. While its chief purpose is to develop literary, moral and spiritual attainments among its members, yet it aims to reach young men in all classes and help them into a higher life, both secular and religious. Another meeting will be held next Tuesday evening in the same place at 8.15. All young men of the village are invited, as this brotherhood will be non-denominational.

The annual "Visiting Day" of St. Paul's church Sunday school will occur next Sunday. All friends of the schoo, are invited to attend the special services of the morning session and inspect its work. Presentation of Sunday school thermometer.
Closing exercises.

While the JOURNAL is always ready to publish legitimate news items, no matter from what source they are received, and will gladly receive items from others than its regular correspondents, persons who send such to the office by mail are reminded that no attention is paid to anonymous communications. The name of the writer must accompany the item, or it goes into the waste basket, no matter how much it may savor of genuineness. The name of the sender will not be published, but it must be known in order that the editors may protect themselves from imposition. Several unsigned items have been consigned to the waste basket within the past few weeks, and those who have sent such and wondered why they did not appear in the JOURNAL'S columns will now know the reason.

The registrars of voters will be in session at the district court room in this village next Friday from 2 to 4 p. m., for the purpose of revising the voting list. The new box for use in determining the fitness of applicants for registration has arrived. In the test for reading it has been customary to try all applicants on the same sentence, and it was possible for an illiterate person to be taught the test so that it could be repeated from memory with every appearance of reading. By the new arrangement slips bearing different paragraphs are put into a hexagonal box having a length of 14 inches and a diameter of 13 inches, with hinged doors on alternate sides, mounted in a framework with a pivot at each end so that it can be revolved. The slips are thoroughly mixed by turning the box, and the applicant for registration must be able to read the slip drawn at random.

A valuable horse belonging to J. Dupree was killed by falling in a well last Saturday.

Mrs. L. B. Kendrick spent Sunday in Springfield with her daughter, Mrs. Crossman.

Mr. and Mrs. Merritt of New Bedford are spending this week with Mr. and Mrs. Durand.

Mrs. Robert Johnson of Lynn spent a part of this week with Mr. and Mrs. Johnson in this place.

John F. Twiss's hack conveyed Governor Greenhalge from Palmer to the Belchertown fair yesterday afternoon.

Station Agent Hillman sold 77 round-trip tickets to Belchertown yesterday, in consequence of the annual fair.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eaton and son Harry of Springfield were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Barnes over Sunday.

Mr. Landeau is about to open a livery stable on a small scale, and will keep only a few choice teams for the use of his friends.

Mrs. Sibley and son of Ware called on Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Kendrick this week, on their way to San Francisco, where they intend to spend the winter.

Mrs. Green, who has been spending the summer in Providence, has returned to this place, and will spend the winter with her daughter, Mrs. Lavine.

Mrs. Ware of Amherst, Mrs. H. Kendrick of Beaver Lake, and Mrs. Thompson of Wilbraham were the guests of Miss Jennie Kendrick over Sunday.

Several persons in this place have received wedding cards from Mr. and Mrs. Cooley of Mittineague, whose daughter, Sarah Luella, is to be married to Albert Henry Bogue of Palmer, a former resident of this place.

For some time past efforts have been made to organize a kindergarten in this place, and now it seems as though the movement will materialize as soon as suitable rooms can be procured. Miss Cook of Palmer is to take charge of the little ones.

Next Sunday morning at the Baptist church Rev. E. C. Weeks will take as his subject "The Dedication of the Bodily Powers to God, or, The True Meaning of Consecration." Revival meeting in the evening, to which all are invited.

James Barbour intends to open a meat market in the basement of Shaw Bro's. store as soon as the vacant rooms can be set in order. Mr. Barbour has purchased a meat cart and horse, and will make the rounds as usual, being sure to obtain a fair portion of the meat trade in this place.

The Baptist church presented a very pretty appearance last Sunday morning in consequence of the tasteful decorations, which were intended to greet the pastor on his return from a few weeks' vacation. The chancel was festooned with evergreens and wild flowers, and the pulpit was adorned with some handsome plants. During the morning service a number of little girls in chorus sang a welcome to the pastor, and the morning's devotions were as enjoyable as any which have been held in the church for some time.

The observance of "Rallying Day" by the U. E. church Sunday school last Sunday was a successful occasion. The church was filled to its utmost capacity with an attentive audience, which was delighted with the review and blackboard illustration of the quarter's lessons by George Pease of Springfield. Mr. Morse of Belchertown also gave a very interesting talk on Sunday school work, which in addition to unusually good singing rendered the day one of the best "Rallying" Sundays which has been held by this school.

An incident occurred last Saturday evening while the usual mission meeting was in progress which was very disagreeable to those who are interested in mission work in this place. It seems that Mr. Allen, who was formerly pastor at Ludlow Center, was conducting the meeting, and during his remarks made some injudicious statements regarding a religious denomination which embraces a large proportion of the community, which caused a number of those present to resent the imputations by hooting and otherwise interrupting the service. However this conduct may appear to some people, it is the opinion of the peaceable citizens that those who are desirous of giving spiritual admonition ought not to confine themselves to sectarian censure, and that our night policeman ought to disperse unruly crowds of people when found on the sidewalks or in any place.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

A Good Sized Building Boom.

Some of our prominent townsmen, noting the call for houses and tenements, have negotiated for the buying of a part of the Main street property owned by St. Patrick's society, and have made plans in regard to opening streets and cutting up the land into building lots. A stock company known as the Park Avenue Syndicate is proposed, with a capital of $3000, which has been divided into 300 shares at $10 each, nearly all of which have been taken, and the shareholders are to meet in Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening to make plans for action in regard to grading the street and the sale of lots, and to choose managers. The land, which has a frontage on Main street of about 108 feet, lies between Mrs. Parker's property on the north and the house occupied by John Collins on the south. Although the street plans are not fully matured, it is now thought that there will be besides Park avenue, which runs easterly, Park Square, lying on the north of the avenue. There will be about fifteen lots. Those on the avenue will be 60 feet front and from 80 to 90 feet deep; park lots 60 feet front and 130 feet deep. This is not intended to be a money-making scheme, but a safe investment, and it seems to be the idea of those interested to sell the lots at low prices.

It really seems as if quite a building boom had struck town, when one counts up the number of houses there are in various stages. To be sure, some of them are only on paper as yet, while others are nearly completed, Michael Cunningham's house on the old Bogan place is nearly done. William G. Meacham is building a house on Harrison avenue which, when completed, will be the property of Amos Anderson; George A. Harvey is boss carpenter, and the work is all done by the day. Arthur D. Norcross has sold a house lot on State street to Edward Cantwell. Jason Keep has brought a lot on Harrison avenue of the Smith heirs, and expects to build a house thereon. Frank A. Bills is to erect a block north of Simmons's store. Homan Osborn has the contract to build a barn for Wilson Tucker, to take the place of the one recently destroyed by fire. Mr. Butler's barn is nearly completed, and he intends to build a house on the adjoining lot. Alfred Mumford has bought a lot on Harrison avenue and will build a house this fall, and Thomas Mills is building a house for John Hurlihy on Pearl street. Then there are a number of houses undergoing extensive changes. Morris Hitchcock's house has been enlarged; Mrs. Maria Bradway, who recently bought the Frank M. King place on Depot street, is to have the house so altered as to make two tenements; Dr. P. W. Soule is making changes in the lower tenement of his house; the old Colton house is being remodeled, and slight repairs are being made in the Heimann & Lichten tenement occupied by Alexander Murphy.

Strike Among the Water Works Italians.

Work on the water works system, which had been progressing so rapidly, was at a standstill Monday on account of a strike among the Italians. A house had been built for them on the Wales road, but since the recent cold nights they have been making for themselves mud huts, using for the framework branches cut from trees on the land near by. The owners of the land objected and compelled the contractor to pay $50 damages. The contractor then forbade the men to cut any more branches, and announced that any caught doing so would be fined 50 cents. Sunday 20 of them were caught and fined, and Monday morning they refused to go to work, threatening to kill any of the others who did. The most of them wanted to work, but were afraid that if they started in the ringleaders would knife them during the following night. Another grievance was that the bread which has been furnished them by the boss was neither in as large loaves nor up to the quality promised, though this was the fault of the baker, who was short of help for a day or two, and only one lot of bread had been below the standard. A warrant was issued for the arrest of one who did the most threatening, but no one dared serve it for some time, though he was finally nabbed and taken to Palmer, where he was sent up for three months. All the men were at work again Tuesday morning, and everything is harmonious once more.

A Store Burglarized.

Simmons's clothing store was entered by thieves Sunday night, and two full suits of clothes, two overcoats and other articles were taken, amounting in value to about $60. As a suit, very much worn, was found in the store and another on the highway, it is thought that tramps are the guilty parties.

In accordance with the provisions of the statutes of the commonwealth Fred D. Rogers and William H. Bugbee have been appointed inspectors of animals and provisions.

The Ladies' Social Circle of the Universalist church will have its annual harvest supper next Tuesday evening, from 6 to 8, to be followed by a short musical and literary entertainment.

Charles Harrison of Litchfield, Ct., formerly employed in the Palmer office, takes Herbert M. Shaw's place as assistant postmaster. Mr. Shaw left Tuesday for the Philadelphia Dental College.

The topic for the Y. P. S. C. E. next Sabbath is: "The Duty and Rewards of Church Going," Heb. x:25. Frank M. King will have charge of the meeting at the Methodist church, and Rev. F. S. Hatch at the Congregational.

Miss Clara A. Wood, superintendent of schools, spent yesterday visiting Quincy schools with the science teacher, Miss Brassil, and attended the superintendents' meeting in Boston to-day.

Marcus Keep Woman's Relief Corps meets next Wednesday evening, and a large attendance is desired, as the annual inspection will take place at the following meeting, October 27th. Mrs. Helen Packard, of Springfield, will be the inspecting officer.

Misses M. and M. Gavin had their fall and winter millinery opening Wednesday and yesterday. They have fitted up their former work room into a pretty parlor for their millinery, having added with other furnishings a pier glass. Miss Annie King of Worcester is clerking for them this season.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Methodist church gave a chicken pie supper and entertainment in the vestry Wednesday evening which was a great success. As the chickens were given there was no expense for the society, and $32 was the sum cleared.

Rev. W. H. Marble attended the meeting of Springfield District Ministerial Association at Warren Tuesday and Wednesday, and read a paper on "The Holy Spirit in Revivals." Mr. Marble gave in last evening's prayer meeting a summary of the papers read.

The Ladies' Social Circle of the Universalist church held its annual meeting Monday evening, and chose the following officers: president, Mrs. Marvin Bradway; vice president, Mrs. William J. Ricketts; secretary, Mrs. Harlow Chapin; treasurer, Mrs. A. A. Babbitt; directors, Mrs. L. W. Rood, Mrs. E. C. Hatch, Mrs. George Seymour.

The annual branch meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church is to be held in Worcester next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and two delegates from the Monson society will be present. Miss Lilla B. Neale of this town will lead devotions Wednesday afternoon

The itinerary includes Gettysburg, Harper's Ferry and Washington. Mr. Chapin is one of the committee of arrangements. He expects to be away from home a week.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Congregational church held a very enthusiastic annual meeting at the home of Mrs. Rufus P. Cushman Wednesday afternoon, and the following officers were chosen: president, Mrs. Rufus P. Cushman; vice president, Miss Esther R. Holmes; secretary and treasurer, Miss Mabelle L. Anderson; entertainment committee, Miss Alice A. Morris, Mrs. Fred W. Ellis, Miss Mabelle K. Flynt.

The Center cemetery, which has been so nicely kept through the past season, is undergoing many improvements. That part of it which fronts on North Main street is being laid out according to an architect's plans; a winding roadway—dividing to make entrances at both the northeast and southeast boundaries—intersects the avenues in the part now open, and will add much to the convenience of entering and leaving, as their slope is gradual; the road is to be hardened with material from the quarry. The work planned cannot be completed this year for lack of funds, but it is hoped that the town will see fit to continue it another year.

Bentley L. Rice of Boston has been engaged to give instruction in music at the Congregational church. He will act as leader of the singing in the Sunday school, the Endeavor societies and the prayer meeting, and will teach music on some week evening to those who desire such instruction. Mr. Rice has taken a broad training in music, having studied with leading artists for several years. He comes to Monson highly recommended by the Boston Conservatory of Music and by Prof. Chadwick, the leader of the Springfield chorus. His engagement is largely for chorus work, though he is familiar with other musical specialties, having trained private pupils for several years.

Miss Almira L. Alden died at the age of 52 years at her home on Green street last Friday evening. She had been a sufferer from nervous trouble for about three years, and her death was due to a culmination of the same in acute congestion of the brain. She leaves a sister, Miss Martha, with whom she lived, and a brother, whose home is in Springfield. The funeral was held Monday afternoon, Rev. W. H. Marble officiating. Miss Alden, so long as her health permitted, was prominent in church and charitable work, being a member of the Methodist church, of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of which she was at one time secretary, and was also a member of the Woman's Relief Corps. She will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends.

C. G. Thompson will run a 'bus from Wales to the Stafford fair next Tuesday and Thursday. Fare for the round trip, 75 cents.

C. G. Thompson lost a valuable horse Monday night with colic. J. C. Burley has another horse sick with what seems to be colic. There seems to be some kind of disease prevalent among the horses this fall, and several horses have died in this vicinity. They are taken with violent colic, but after relieved of it a fever sets in which often has carried away the horse.

The large force of men at work on the Leach crossing will complete their labors this week. The Boston and Maine road has postponed its part of the work until spring.

A. B. Howard has given his work as general agent for the New England Homestead this week. He is now traveling in Maine, and expects to be absent some time.

The funeral of George W. Longley took place at the Dwight homestead Sunday afternoon, and was very largely attended. The circumstances of Mr. Longley's death, coming without the slightest warning, aroused the sympathy of the whole community. He had been postmaster, and was at the time of his death town clerk and treasurer. He was also musical director at the Congregational church. The services were conducted by Rev. V. C. Harrington, who spoke feelingly of his deep regard for Mr. Longley, and repeated Tennyson's last poem, "Crossing the Bar." The Ludlow male quartette, led by Wilbur F. Miller, sang "Rock of Ages," "God is Love," and "Abide in Me." They also rendered several other pieces at the grave. The floral tributes were many and beautiful, and the line of business men who marched to the cemetery was a testimony of the regard which was felt for the departed. The following were among the relatives and friends present from out of town: Chalmers Longley of Boston, Mrs. Henry Longley of Northampton, Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Blake of Springfield, Warner Smith of Haydenville, Mrs. Bray of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Marsh and Mr. and Mrs. Paige of Amherst, Mr. Demond, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Walker and Col. Myron P. Walker of Springfield.

WARREN.

H. S. Chapman has moved his family to Holyoke.

Miss Helen Demond has been spending a few days at East Greenwich, R. I.

Joseph Hastings returned Monday from his trip to Washington and New York.

Rev. Harris Hale exchanged with the Congregational minister of North Brookfield last Sabbath.

The Brookfield Association of Ministers held its regular meeting at the chapel of the Congregational church Tuesday, taking dinner at the hotel.

Mrs. Wakefield of Schenectady and Mrs. Fred Hitchcock of Lynn have been the guests of Mrs. E. H. Hitchcock this week.

The Democratic voters of this place will hold a caucus in Hibernian Hall next Tuesday night to elect delegates to the county, senatorial and representative conventions, and also to choose a town committee for 1895.

Minnie Demond, daughter of Everett Demond, met with a painful accident Tuesday afternoon. She was playing on a haymow in the barn belonging to Washington Gould, and fell to the barn floor, breaking her left thigh. She was taken to the house in great pain.

Mrs. M. H. Amidon has been called suddenly to New York by the death of her brother-in-law, George D. Hastings. Mr. Hastings and his wife visited here only a week ago, and Mr. Hastings gave quite a number of valuable books to the library.

On Monday, October 15th, at 7.30 p. m., state agents George A. Walton, Henry T. Bailey and A. W. Boy Killed by the Cars.

Stanley Hodgkins, a lad 15 years of age, was killed by the 3.30 train to Boston Tuesday afternoon between Ware and Gilbertville. The engineer whistled but as the lad was partially deaf and dumb he paid no attention to it. Both legs and his jaw were badly crushed. Medical Examiner Miner and Chief of Police Fitzgerald were notified, and viewed the body. Hodgkins's home was at 5 Indiana street, Boston, but he had been attending school at Northampton the past four years, and was left there by his sister on Monday afternoon. He has had spells of being extremely homesick, and it is supposed one of these spells came on at being left by his sister, and so he started to walk to Boston. His parents say he was a very affectionate boy, and had run away from school once before because he was homesick. His mother had marked all his clothing, so he was readily identified.

Invitations are out for the marriage of William N. Newcomb, paymaster at the Stevens mill, and Miss Clara P., daughter of Mrs. A. C. Todd, to take place at his new residence on Church street.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Pleases Because It Is Free.

When a thing is free and at the same time contains great value, being just what everybody wants, it is eagerly sought by all. Every weak, delicate or sickly person will be pleased with the great and generous offer of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the noted and successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He has established a system of free letter correspondence, whereby all may write him about their complaint and receive in return a complete description of their ailments, explaining thoroughly the meaning of each symptom, and telling just what to do to be cured. The doctor makes a specialty of treating patients through letter correspondence, giving most careful and explicit attention to every letter, and explains your case so minutely you understand exactly what your trouble is. All this costs nothing. All those who cannot afford the time or expense of visiting the city can now have the most skilful consultation and advice free of charge, and without leaving their homes. The method is successful. Thousands are being cured by it. Try it. Write the doctor and it will undoubtedly be the means of your getting well.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria

SPRINGFIELD.

Fur Capes at One Third Off Their Regular Prices.

Listen, while we tell the story: At the beginning of the present season everybody talked furs. Manufacturers of cloth garments rushed into the fur garment making business, and the result is a glut in the fur market.

A first-class manufacturer got caught in the rush. Couldn't compete with other makers. No way left for him but to swallow his loss and sell out the stock, bag and baggage, and everything at what he could get.

Having bought sparingly of furs while retailers everywhere were laying in large stocks, we were in excellent shape to take advantage of just such an unexpected opportunity. Can't help the manufacturer's misfortune, we're as sorry for it as anybody, but it was left for us to secure the plum for Springfield, and we did it.

And the garments are all new and first-class in every respect, honestly and scientifically put together, and guaranteed to be made of whole skins—not small pieces patched together. Qualities and prices for everybody.

$4.65 to $250 the Garment.

And you get them at the right time; just when you need them most, and have the whole seaon to enjoy them. Everybody will want them, and there won't be any other fur capes sold in Springfield while these last. Can't tell how long they will last, but when this news becomes thoroughly known the rush will begin.

"On or off the line, we're with the majority—'stuck' on Pearline!" And they're right—you will observe that their heads are level. Millions of women sing the same song as the clothes-pins. They may express it differently, but they mean the same thing. They mean that their work is easy and sooner done—and better done. No clothes worn out with the endless rub, rub, rub on the washboard. No backs tired out with it, either. These millions of women mean that they're using Pearline, saving labor, time, and money with it, and have proved it to be perfectly harmless. Now, what do you mean? Do you mean to try to do without it?

The Rooster he Wore on His Hat.

Come pause for a while in your play,
My boy,
And put down your ball and your bat.
Attend to me well
While a story I tell
Of a man who was tempted astray,
My boy,
And the rooster he wore on his hat.

This man was a laborer skilled,
My boy,
Contented and happy thereat;
For his job was secure,
And his wages were sure,
But his heart with a longing was filled,
My boy,
For a rooster to wear on his hat.

One day some demagogues came,
My boy,
(For demagogue read Democrat)
And spouted and brayed
In behalf of free trade,
Till they set all his fancy aflame,
My boy,
For a rooster to pin on his hat.

He whooped like an imbecile loon,
My boy,
For a candidate fussy and fat,
Whose inflated renown
Soon collapsed and came down;
And it fell like a punctured balloon,
My boy,
On the rooster that sat on the hat.

Now his partisans float in the soup,
My boy,
Along with the bill they begat.
The cuckoos all sigh
For their vanishing pie;
And the rooster is sick with the croup,
My boy,
Poor rooster that rode on the hat.

And poverty sits in the seat,
My boy,
Where competence formerly sat,
And the laboring man,
Through this fatuous plan,
Is now left with nothing to eat,
My boy,
But the rooster he wore on his hat.

Then take warning and never forget,
My boy,
Free-traders are blind as a bat.
Their promise of good
Is adversity's food,
And the laborer long will regret,
My boy,
The rooster he wore on his hat.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

AN HONEST QUAKER.—A sheriff was once asked to execute a writ against a Quaker. On arriving at his house he saw the Quaker's wife, who, in reply to the inquiry whether her husband was at home, said he was, at the same time requesting him to be seated, and her husband would speedily see him. The officer waited patiently for some time, when, the fair Qakeress coming into the room, he reminded her of her promise that he might see her husband. "Nay, friend, I promised that he should see thee. He has seen thee. He did not like thy looks. Therefore he hath departed from the house by another path."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A SIMPLE RULE.

How to Make a Really Good Cup of Tea.

Well-made tea is a scarce article, but is really an easy thing to make. Use only the best package tea, a heaping teaspoonful for each three cups. Use only fresh boiling water, and be absolutely sure the water is boiling. Steep not more than five minutes, and never allow the tea to boil.

HEART DISEASE!

Fluttering, No Appetite, Could Not Sleep, Wind on Stomach.

"For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought that every minute would be my last. There was a feelling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I could not sweep a room without resting. My husband induced me to try and am happy to say it has cured me. I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. Its effect was truly marvelous."

MRS. HARRY E. STARR, Pottsville, Pa.

Dr. Miles Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. All druggists sell it at $1, 6 bottles for $5, or it will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

FURNITURE DEPARTMENT.

A remarkable illustration of the rapid and successful growth of the Furniture Business in Western Massachusetts is found in this department of our establishment.

Starting in a moderate way with a few rooms devoted solely to Parlor work, it has grown and expanded until now, six floors, containing sixty thousand square feet, are given up to this branch, which is famed throughout New England, and is the largest department of the kind outside New York or Boston.

Our business is not confined alone to Springfield trade, of which we enjoy a large share, but extends over a radius of many miles in every direction.

Visitors are always welcome, and an elegant passenger elevator renders each floor easy of access.

The extensive lines carried in Parlor, Library, Chamber, Dining room, Kitchen, Club and Office Furniture will at once convince our patrons of the immensity of this part of our business, and buying as we do in great quantities we are enabled to quote prices much lower than those met with elsewhere.

Here you may make your selections with the assurance that no deception is tolerated, and that the motto long known, "If you want the best, go to Meekins, Packard & Co's," enthuses us just as much as ever.

Oh! For Strong Nerves.

What Does That Dreadful Feeling Mean?

Can It Be That Insanity is Staring Me in the Face?

That Tired and Exhausted Feeling Means More Than You Think.

The nervous system is fearfully delicate. It is easily deranged, and when it is, beware. The symptoms are debility, tired feeling, inability for much work, trembling, anxiety, depression of mind, nervousness and often sleeplessness and dull feeling head in the morning.

These lead to nervous prostration, paralysis or insanity. You run a terrible risk in neglecting any of these symptoms. You can be cured now. If you neglect yourself you will soon become a hopeless wreck, as Mrs. W. A. Pinkham of Stowe, Vt., did. She writes the following about herself:

"About six months ago I found myself in an extreme nervous condition. This had been gradually growing upon me for several years and I cannot tell what I suffered, it was beyond description. I got no rest or sleep nights and my work was done in constant agony.

"I imagined there was some impending evil constantly hanging over me and I could not rid myself of the idea that insanity was in store for me. I knew better than to do lots of things that I did do but could not help it.

"I was indeed a wreck and was on the point of giving up in despair. I employed physicians who did me no good and my condition continually grew worse.

MRS. W. A. TINKHAM.

"Finally a friend advised me to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I commenced taking it and before using the first bottle up there was a decided improvement. I have now used most three bottles and am entirely cured of all my troubles.

"I sleep well and my work is easily and comfortably done. In fact, I do all my work for a large family, which I was unable to do before and have not done for five years before taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"I attribute my cure entirely to this wonderful medicine, and most cordially recommend it to all mankind. Please publish this letter for the good of others."

There are countless numbers of persons in different stages of nervous complaints. They are not sick, but are just out of order, have weak nerves and tired bodies. You are one of them and you need Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It cures all such diseases quickly and permanently. Try it, and feel your nerves grow strong and your health return.

It is the discovery of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

W. P. HARRISON & CO., Clerk No. 12, Columbus, O.

ENTERPRISE.—A clerk in the War Department went out to look for lodgings the other day, and called at a nice looking house on Eleventh street, in the window of which was a placard. "Rooms for rent." The landlady showed him a large, front room, the rental for which, she stated, was $16 a month.

"That is more than I can afford to pay," said the clerk.

"Well," responded the landlady, apologetically, "would you object to occupying a room in which a lady had died?"

"No," replied the clerk, "I guess not. What caused the death?"

"Consumption."

"That is not a contagious disease. How long since the lady died?"

"Why," she isn't dead yet, but it is only a question of a few days. Can't I engage the room for you?"—Washington Post.

CAREFUL HORACE.—The stately steamer plowed its way through the blue waves of Lake Michigan.

"Oh, Horace," moaned the young bride, who a minute before had paced the deck with smiling face and love-lit eye, the happiest of the party; "I feel so queer! Let me lean on your shoulder."

"No, dearest, don't do that!" exclaimed Horace, hastily, lean over the side of the steamer."—Chicago Tribune.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER'S QUARREL ON THE QUESTION OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

"Well, this a curious case!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he looked up from his paper the other evening after an interval of silence.

"What is it, dear?" sleepily queried Mrs. Bowser.

"Why, a husband in Ohio applies for a divorce because his wife insisted upon having opinions of her own about things. If I were the judge in that case, I'd give that chap a nice, large piece of my mind and put him to all the cost I could."

"Where did their opinions differ?"

"On almost every question, it seems. He is one of that sort of husbands who marry a woman for a valet or slave, and she is expected to believe the world is flat just because he does."

"Yes, there are such husbands," quietly replied Mrs. Bowser.

"In the first place," he continued, casting the paper aside, "the ordinarily intelligent woman may be credited with holding just as sound and reasonable opinions as the ordinarily intelligent man."

"Yes."

"And marriage does not make a man an owner or master, but only a husband."

"That is true."

"He has no more right to expect the wife to surrender her opinions than she has for him to do the same. She may advance an opinion which he may convince her by argument is erroneous, and in that case, of course, she would abandon it."

"Yes, she would."

"The idea of an old bulldozer browbeating a wife like that! Let's see. In his complaint he alleges that she wilfully and maliciously insisted that a woman should have the right to vote. Now, instead of bulldozing and browbeating, why didn't he sit down and calmly argue the point and convince her the idea was untenable?"

"How could he?" asked Mrs. Bowser.

"Why he could have called up a thousand reasons. Of course no woman should have the right to vote.

"But I think they should all have that right."

"What! What's that, Mrs. Bowser?" shouted Mr. Bowser, as he bobbed up in a state of excitement.

"I hold," calmly continued Mrs. Bowser, "that every female in this country who has arrived at the age of 21 years should have the right to cast a ballot. As a class, they are far more intelligent than men."

"Do you mean to tell me," said Mr. Bowser, as he took a step nearer and waved his spectacles in the air, "do you mean to tell me that you, for instance, could cast a vote intelligently?"

"Certainly."

"As intelligently as I do?"

"Certainly. At the last election you voted for two aldermen who have since been convicted of corruption in office; a county official who has turned out an embezzler, a judge whom you yourself declare ought to be impeached and a sheriff who—"

"That will do, woman—that will do!" interrupted Mr. Bowser, dancing around. A human being with the intelligence of a chickadee knows that politics is not a woman's sphere. To vote intelligently——"

"You have only to vote the straight ticket," she quietly interrupted.

"Are you talking to me?" he sternly demanded.

"Of course."

"Then remember who I am. Take this tariff question, for instance. While every man intuitively understands the matter at issue, no woman——"

"I have read up on it and understand it very thoroughly," she interrupted.

"You read politics, do you?"

"Certainly."

"And you insist that a woman should be entitled to vote?"

"Yes, sir; but I am willing to listen to argument. Please sit down and calmly advance your reason why I shouldn't be allowed the ballot."

"I won't do it!" he shouted as he walked up and down. "It is not for a husband to argue such nonsensical matters. It should be enough for you that I say you do not possess the necessary qualifications."

"What are those qualifications?"

"What are they? Why, woman—why—why——"

"You voted for a state senator who sold himself for $6000. What particular qualifications were demanded?"

"You are talking to me, are you?"

"And you help to elect a county clerk who stole the funds, a city treasurer who suicided on account of a $20,000 shortage, and a coroner who could not write his own name. Did you have to be peculiarly qualified, Mr. Bowser?"

"Mrs. Bowser, I see now how that Ohio wife drove that Ohio husband to apply for a divorce," said Mr. Bowser, as he started for the library.

"He was afraid she knew more than he did," answered Mrs. Bowser.

He opened the library door, looked in, and then returned to his rocking-chair and sat down. Not another word was said for an hour. Then instead of saying that his lawyer would be ready to consult with her lawyer right away after breakfast, he nearly scared the life out of her by calmly observing:—

"You may possibly possess the necessary qualifications, but of course you wouldn't care to mix up in politics. Of course not!"

And Mrs. Bowser can't make up her mind whether she got the better of him or his nature is undergoing a great change.—St. Louis Republic.

NO RULE AGAINST THAT.—Richard is a rather clever colored boy in the billiard-room of a certain noted club in New York. Like many others of his race, he is possessed of a readiness of repartee which some of the club members find not entirely unenviable. A few days since, at the pool table, one of the players, having made an execrable shot, exciting the derision of the spectators, turned to the boy and said:

"Well, Richard, you'll stand by me, anyhow. It wasn't so bad, was it?"

"It was awtul, suh," said Richard.

"What?" cried the player. "You criticise too, do you? I shall report you to the house committee."

"Yes, suh," said Richard; "but 'twon' do no good, suh. De house committee has rules prohibitin' eve'yt'ing but tellin' de druth. Dat's all I's done."

He was not reported.—Harper's Magazine.

Why does the air of the pine woods have such a beneficial effect on consumptives? It is on account of its purity and of the antiseptic substances contained in the exhalations from the trees.

Guaiacol

represents these exhalations in a concentrated form. Administered through the stomach, in instead of being breathed in, as in the pine woods, it is taken up by the blood from the stomach and carried to the lungs, producing the most beneficial effects. Pleasant to take and a perfect remedy for consumption.

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

UNITED HOSPITAL AND DISPENSARY, Boston, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

FOR SALE.

A small place for $700. Five acres good land, good house of 5 rooms, barn and hen house. A short drive from Palmer.

The Kelliher place in Thorndike Village is for sale with 30 acres of land or less to suit purchaser. Being near the mills and with a prospect of more manufacturing still nearer, the land may be desirable for building lots. At the price for which it can be bought and on terms favorable to any one who can make a fair payment, said place is a bargain.

In Three Rivers I have for sale a house of 8 rooms, with hen house, plenty of fruit, best location in the village. I also have another cottage with barn, either of which can be bought for less than $1600.

A TEST OF BEAUTY.
Only the Fairest and Freshest Faces Can Stand It.

Next time you go to a party, watch some of the women as they stand under the chandeliers. Notice how a light shining from above brings out unsuspected lines and angles in all but the youngest and freshest faces. It is a severe test of beauty.

Perhaps you will wonder at the number of thin, lanky women. They all want to be plump. Why are they not? They get enough to eat, surely. Oh, yes, but they don't digest their food, and there's no fire without consumption of fuel. A pre-digested food called Pasko'a is welcomed by these women. They find in it flesh-forming properties.

They are told that it is nourishment, not medicine, and that its good effects are lasting. Such letters as this one tell the story:

"Gentlemen—For the past five years I have suffered from gastric indigestion and have tried all so-called remedies for indigestion, besides courses of treatment from physicians all over the country, from which I received only temporary relief. My symptoms were heartburn, flushes of heat, dizziness, bloated feeling after eating, depression of spirits, severe and acute attacks of cramps and inflammation and chronic constipation.

"About two months ago I resolved to give Pasko'a a trial, although without any faith in it, owing to my past experience with so-called remedies for indigestion. After taking one small bottle of Paskola I felt better, very much better. I have now taken only seven small bottles, and have never felt better in my life. I have gained ten pounds and now eat anything my appetite craves. All my friends say, 'Why how fat and well you look; what have you been doing?' My answer is always, 'Pasko'a.' A friend of mine has taken only three small bottles and says she feels like a new woman. This may seem rather fulsome praise, but I conscientiously feel that I cannot say too much in praise of Paskola.

Yours respectfully,
MRS. CHAS. E. LOTHIAN, 111 W. 45th St., N. Y.

AN ANARCHIST'S NIGHT OFF.

"Patsy's going to dine with the 'old man!'"

This information concerning Patterson, commonly known to his friends as "Patsy," created a sensation in the group of news paper men who heard it.

They were at supper—the welcome two-or-three-o'clock-in-the-morning supper of the day laborers in journalism, the men who grind wearily, wearily, and are seldom heard of by the outside world.

Patterson was one of the group made up of the "late" men—the telegraph editors, night editors, news editors, two or three night city editors and men who had been doing late details or writing late on special articles—men from all the morning papers. Patterson was indeed a conspicuous member of the party; it indulged him in his crankiness and that cemented him in the circle.

Patterson was an anarchist. There was no doubt about it, for he declared the fact pugnaciously—he was against government. However, he could—and upon instruction did—write convincing editorials exalting the everlasting necessity of law and order. He generally made himself anarchically drunk after much such writing, and so, as a temperance measure, he had abandoned editorial and had taken up special writing, in which he rapidly made himself popular on his paper.

One day, after an especially good piece of work, the managing editor sent for him. Patterson affected a violent dislike of Mr. Rogers, the managing editor. In the first place, he represented the paper's government; next, he received a yearly salary of $10,000!—a crime in itself, Patterson contended.

Little Tommy Paget, a disciple of Patterson, and who did very good about-town stuff, argued that the story of Rogers's $10,000 a year was a manifest fiction, because there was not so much money in the world. He had once seen the printers paid off, when a man from the business office took $1800 in gold and silver up to the composing-room, "and for any sane man to tell me that there is more money in the world than that is absurd," said Tommy Paget.

Besides being a governor and a $10,000-a-year man, Mr. Rogers was quite a swell in clubdom and popular in a very good set in society. This was hateful to the anarchist.

"That was a very good story of yours this morning," said Mr. Rogers in the hearing of half-a-dozen men.

Patterson was silent.

"Mrs. Rogers and my daughter both spoke of it, and liked it, and it's always pleasant to hear women praise the paper. Get the women of a household in favor of your paper, and you there have a steadfast subscriber."

"Very kind of you and the ladies," growled Patsy; "anything special for me to-day?"

"Yes. I want you to go the Moss-estate trial, and when the shorthand man's stuff is written out, take it and lighten it up. By the way, Patterson, my wife would like to have you up to dine with us some Sunday evening."

"Very kind of her, but—"

"But you never 'do the society act,' you were going to say. Well, it'll do you good. Say a week from Sunday.

Mr. Rogers was smiling good-naturedly, a dozen men were waiting for orders on a hundred dozen things about the next day's paper, and Patterson felt he would look foolish persisting in the refusal of such an invitation. He bowed his thanks and acceptance and left.

"Patterson is going to dine with the 'old man'!" Nothing else was talked about at supper that night. A society editor swore he would write it up in his "Notable Events;" Griggs, the paper's "sketched-on-the-spot" artist, exhibited a drawing of Patterson, in a dress suit, haranguing a mob of wild-eyed anarchists; and little Paget roared with delight at his own suggestion that Patsy should wear a red necktie and handkerchief.

The subject of this chaff growled out that it would be paying enough for the privilege of being near the throne to have to lose one night's work, and he'd be hanged if he'd wear a dress suit even if he could get one. "What the 'old man' wants," said he, to his supper companions, is to exhibit a live crank, and I'll just fool 'em. I'll be more of a crank than they like."

"The red tie! The red tie!" shouted Paget.

"Yes, the red tie, and the wildest kind of anarchist talk," continued Patsy; "if I am played for a freak to make an old man's holiday, I'll just go him one more than he expects."

Patterson thought over this determination as he climbed the hills to his room that night, and it did not please him. After all, he would be doing only what was expected of him, and there was very little independence in that. He took out his old dress-suit and put it on. The effect was more amusing than satisfactory. Not only was it a bad fit and mussy with the strangely mixed service it had seen in Patterson's two years at Berkeley university, but it was so like the Tivoli waiters' in cut that Patterson threw a towel over his left arm and served himself with a bottle of beer to complete the likeness.

"It would be so much more fun to fool the 'old man' the other way that if I could I would."

The next day Patterson sought a man he had become acquainted with through interviewing him, and had afterward come to know well, and like, despite the man's misfortune of wealth. Newspaper men have few acquaintances outside their own ranks. Their hours of labor and leisure would make it difficult, even if their inclinations were less intensely clannish. Still, Patterson did meet and dine with Millionaire Barker often enough to keep up a friendship that had considerable warmth. During their acquaintance, Patterson had asked for no "favor" such as the millionaire was accustomed to grant with perfect good nature and great frequency to scores of companions less agreeable than Patterson.

Patsy always earned good pay. He wrote on space, and having tremendous facility and some ability, ground out vast quantities of copy and sold most of it. So he did not have to borrow, yet there never came a payday when he could buy his dinner without first collecting for his week's work. It never occurred to him that there was evidence of faulty economics in the fact that his financial condition was exactly the same now as when his earnings were not one-fifth as much. His was the case of nearly every one of his companions. Mind you, I am not speaking of the great men on the newspapers, but only of the unnamed, the soldiers in the ranks, the multitude of impersonals, who have not been long in their beds when you, sir, over young coffee, are reading their work and giving the praise or blame for it to "the paper," not the man.

But this has nothing to do with the story. I felt in the mood for explaining that my friend Patterson was no more improvident than his kind. Do not be shocked—the next day he asked his friend Barker for credit with his tailor. Barker—he was a young man—wrote something on a letter-head, put it in an envelope, addressed it to his tailor, and handed it to Patterson, with the remark:

"Going to get married, Patsy?"

"No," he answered; "perhaps some of us do get married when we have to get credit for the clothes to do it in, but I am even more to be congratulated; I'm going home to dine with the 'old man,' and I'm going to fool him."

"Fool him?"

"Yes; he wants to show his set a crank, and I'm going there as a drawing-room model Sunday week."

Barker laughed. "Then I shall see you, for I'll be there."

"Will you? Oh, by the way, you dine there often—what's their game?"

Patterson talked a long time with his friend about the Roger's dinners, and went away thoroughly posted on the people he would probably meet, what they talked about, and their present fads. He learned, for one thing, that the set was just then interested in hypnotism, which he considered a fortunate accident, as he had a medical friend who was making a special study of it, and he could cram on that conveniently. He went into some theater every night for the double purpose of supplying himself with small talk of the shows and studying the dress of men he saw come in with the theater parties.

He gorged himself with recent novels and magazine discussions, and, in fact, put in ten days' hard persistent work in preparing to fool the "old man."

"Emma," said Mr. Rogers on that Sunday afternoon, on his return from the editorial rooms, to which he had just run down to see how things were going,—"Emma, I am a little worried. I know from the way he lives that he saves nothing, and I am half-afraid he has no dress-suit."

"Then," replied Mrs. Rogers, decidedly, "he won't come. I knew his people very well, and they were very nice. I went to school with his eldest sister, who married that New Yorker, and if he has any of the family traits you need not fear about his dress."

"But they were rich then, and now Patterson—but from some jokes going around the office, I fancy he will try and show off his crankiness, and, to tell the truth, I hope he will. He amuses himself by pretending to be an anarchist and—"

"Frank, dear, you dress for dinner. If he is a crank, he is a well-bred one, and he will merely amuse us all."

Mrs. Rogers was well-bred herself, and put great stress on that phase of fortune. She also had an independent income equal to her husband's salary, and adopted a little air of authority which you may have observed in wives who have independent incomes.

The "old man," the terror of his staff, obeyed the order to dress meekly enough, staying only to say: "Whom will you send Patterson in with?"

"Fannie."

"Fannie? Really, dear, don't you think that Barker——"

"Mr. Barker needs a little discipline to remind him that he has not yet asked for the right to be always paired off with Fannie, and she can be trusted to keep your anarchist within reasonable bounds."

If Patterson's name had not been announced so distinctly, Mr. Rogers would not have known him when he entered the reception-room. The wild, weird beard had gone with the mustache in the transformation, and the anarchist stood confessed in clean-shaven, strong, handsome face, in faultless dress from tie to shoe—self-possessed, quiet, suave. Mrs. Rogers gave a quick look of surprise from Patterson to her husband. The anarchist saw it and grinned inwardly—so far, he had fooled the "old man."

He was introduced to Fannie by mamma, and even before dinner was announced, he and that charming young lady were in a most animated conversation about—nothing. He was progressing finely. Barker, from Mrs. Roger's side at dinner, was amazed and delighted. He had hoped to go in with Fannie, to be sure, but he took consolation in regarding Patterson somewhat as his protege, and when he noticed the ever-widening circle included in the listeners to Patterson's rattling small talk, he determined to be wholly unselfish and assist the success.

Barker was a clever man, and besides had an intimate knowledge of Patterson, so he was able to adroitly force the outside talk into the anarchist's circle, and had the satisfaction of finding that surprising young man the acknowledged center of the whole table's animation.

Rogers alone seemed outside the charm. As he observed his daughter's manifest delight in the new guest, he glanced with furtive alarm at his wife and Barker. Everything appeared serene in that quarter, yet Rogers felt resentful—at what he hardly knew. He tried once to trap Patterson into turning his crank by an allusion to anarchy, made directly at the young man.

"Oh, I went in for anarchy myself once," said the intrepid Patsy, lightly, "but the difficulty of finding any one who understood what I was after bored me, and I dropped it. Anyway, fads should be treated only as temporary expedients for entertainment, and when they are in the nature of an ism they should not be given much serious thought,—unless, by the way, it is hypnotism.

"Now, a medical friend of mine——" and in a moment Patterson had the whole company listening with undisguised interest to stories of strange experiments in hypnotism.

His success lasted all the evening. After dinner there was music, and Patterson sang with Fannie—the beggar had a melting baritone voice. He even managed a tete-a-tete with that winsome young woman, and the exhilaration of his success gave a tender tremor to the nothings he said, and—well, Fannie was young and I have said he was handsome.

Poor Patsy! He sat a long time in his room that night in his soft, clinging dress-suit. He hated to take it off; he was another man in it; he almost felt that he had a right to think of Fannie, so long as he retained the conventional garb that was a part of his evening's experience.

He changed his dress slowly and went down-town to supper with the boys. When Paget heard the story of how Patsy fooled the "old man"—there was no mention of Fannie in the story—the little chap yelled with delight and declared it was a better fake than the red necktie.

"You see, Frank, there was some wisdom in my sending Fannie in with your reformed anarchist—the handsome young rascal—instead of with Mr. Barker," said Mrs. Rogers, when the managing editor came home shortly after the following midnight; "it brought Mr. Barker around here this evening, and he will ask you for Fannie to-morrow."

"And Fannie?"

"Oh, she has been talking sentimental nonsense to-day about that Mr. Patterson, but we need not ask him here any more; let him return to—anarchy."

Fond Wife—"Here, dearest, is the bill of my new evening dress." Loving Husband—"Great Scott! Doesn't it come rather high?" Fond Wife—"Why, no, darling. It is the most delightfully decollete of any I ever had."—New York World.

TWO STATE CONVENTIONS

It is Greenhalge and Russell Once More.

Republicans Renominate all the Present Officials—Some New Names on the Democratic Ticket.

The Platforms of Both Parties—Sentiments Which the Leaders Ask the Rank and File to Endorse.

The old state ticket was renominated by the Republicans at their state convention at Boston last Saturday, and the nominees are:

For Governor—FREDERIC T. GREENHALGE of Lowell.
Lieutenant-Governor—ROGER WOLCOTT of Boston.
Secretary of State—WILLIAM M. OLIN of Boston.
Treasurer and Receiver-General—HENRY M. PHILLIPS of Springfield.
Auditor—JOHN W. KIMBALL of Fitchburg.
Attorney-General—HOSEA M. KNOWLTON of New Bedford.

It was a remarkable convention in many respects. With all the previous talk of hostility to Governor Greenhalge and other of the officials a lively time was looked for. But the A. P. A. element had been interviewed by Senator Lodge and had secured recognition in the platform planks, and not an atom of dissent cropped out. The ticket was nominated by acclamation, and the whole business was over in less than two hours,—one of the shortest conventions on record. Gen. Cogswell, who was to have presided, was ill and unable to attend, but his address was read by Curtis Guild, Jr. The platform which was adopted is:

The principles of the Republicans of Massachusetts are as well known as the commonwealth itself, well known as the republic, well known as liberty, well known as justice.
Chief among them are:
An equal share in government of every citizen.
Best possible wages for every workman.
The American market for American labor.
Every dollar paid by the government, both the gold and the silver dollars of the constitution, and their paper representatives, honest, and unchanging in value, and equal to every other.
Better immigration laws.
Better naturalization laws.
No tramp, anarchist, criminal or pauper to be let in, so that citizenship shall not be stained or polluted.
Sympathy with liberty and Republican government at home and abroad.
Americanism everywhere.
The flag never lowered or dishonored.
No surrender in Samoa.
No barbarous queen beheading men in Hawaii.
No lynching.
No punishment without trial.
Faith kept with pensioners.
No deserving old soldier in the poorhouse.
The suppression of dram drinking and dram selling.
A school at the public charge open to all the children, and free from partisan or sectarian control.
No distinction of birth or religious creed in the rights of American citizenship.
No devotion paramount and supreme to the country and to the flag.
Clean politics.
Pure administration.
No lobby.
Reform of old abuses.
Leadership along loftier paths.
Minds ever open to the sunlight and the morning, ever open to new truth and new duty as the new years bring their lessons.

The Democrats held their convention on Monday, and John E. Russell was again chosen to lead the party. The full ticket nominated is:

For Governor—JOHN E. RUSSELL of Leicester.
Lieutenant-Governor—CHARLES E. STRATTON of Boston.
Secretary of State—CHARLES A. DECOURCEY of Lawrence.
Treasurer and Receiver-General—JAMES S. GRINNELL of Greenfield.
Auditor—ALFRED C. WHITNEY of Boston.
Attorney-General—HENRY F. HURLBUT of Lynn.

Messrs. Russell and Stratton were nominated by acclamation, and a committee brought in the rest of the ticket. The platform, after reiterating loyalty to the president and other party leaders, congratulates the country on the repeal of an odious and tyrannical election law, on the repeal of a silver inflation measure which was responsible for the recent financial panic, the repeal of the McKinley tariff, the abolition of bounties, the firm, dignified and conservative conduct of our foreign affairs, the reform of abuses in the pension system, the large reductions in the appropriations of congress, and numerous economies and improvements in the administrative branches of the government. The defeat of the Wilson bill is regretted, the Democratic senators who assisted to prevent its passage are branded as traitors to the party and their retirement demanded. The new tariff is recognized as an improvement over the old in almost every schedule, but the party is called upon to immediately place on the free list all raw materials, to abolish all duties which tend to maintain trusts and monopolies, and to reduce all duties which are still prohibitory in effect. The election of United States senators by direct vote of the people is demanded. All the currency troubles of the past 25 years are laid to the door of the Republican party, and the government is called upon to provide a standard of value and to coin metallic money, every dollar of which shall be of equal intrinsic value, and that nothing but this coined money shall be legal tender. Untaxed notes of state or national banks are demanded as the only paper money, and the government called upon to retire its legal-tender paper money as fast as possible. The income tax is approved, and the recommendation made that the post offices be brought under the workings of the civil service law. Opposition is made to any distinction of birth or religious creed in the rights of American citizenship, also to any organization which attempts to introduce such into politics, and condemns any party which forms an alliance with such organizations. A new method of representation in legislative bodies, whereby each political party shall be represented by neither more nor less than the number of members to which their voting strength entitles them, is advocated, and some machine or system which shall make the process of voting quicker and the counting more accurate.

WHEN TO STOP.—The following answers were received by an English paper in response to a request for opinions as to when to stop advertising:—

When the population ceases to multiply and the generations that crowd on after you and never heard of you stop coming on.

When you have convinced everybody whose life will touch yours that you have better goods and lower prices than they can get anywhere else.

When you perceive it to be the rule that men who never advertise are outstripping their neighbors in the same line of business.

When men stop making fortunes right in your sight solely through the direct use of the mighty agent.

When you can forget the words of the shrewdest and most successful business men concerning the main cause of their property.

FOLLOWING ADVICE.—Minister (to Tipsy Tim, who is just entering a saloon to get a drink)—"Now, my good man, don't go in there and drink that vile stuff to-day. Let it go till some other time."

Tipsy Tim—"Be you one of those Prohibitionists?"

Minister—"Yes."

Tipsy Tim—"Well, there was another fellow like you around here, and he told me to stop drinking. I told him perhaps I would at the end of the month, and he said, "You should never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day." I didn't like to leave off as sudden as that, but I am hanging on to his saying. "Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day;" so I'll have to take this drink."

FRIDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 12, 1894.

VARIOUS POLITICAL MATTERS.

First Hampden Senatorial Republican Convention.

The Republicans of the first Hampden senatorial district held their convention in the district court room in Palmer Monday forenoon at 10 o'clock. L. D. Boyington of Springfield was chairman, and H. E. Shaw of Wales was clerk. J. D. Gill of Springfield moved that an informal ballot be taken without speeches, but it was suggested that a committee on credentials was first in order, and Dr. R. V. Sawin of Brimfield, D. M. Pease of Springfield and E. D. Cushman of Monson were appointed. They reported 58 delegates present. It was agreed that nominating speeches should be made, and C. H. Barrows of Springfield presented the name of Edwin F. Lyford, reading from Lodge's address in renominating Gov. Greenhalge the reference to the policy of the party in returning faithful servants to office a second time. The opponents of Mr. Lyford should show why he should not be returned. The two most important special committees of the last Legislature were those on the gas monopoly and the question of the unemployed, and Mr. Lyford had been chairman of both. He alone of the Springfield representatives voted against the scheme of the Bell telephone company to inflate its stock. What can be said against him? Nothing. He is not a believer in a proscription which would have kept Gen. Phil. Sheridan out of the army, but he was true to all American principles. He voted against the appropriation of money for the Carney hospital, and also against an appropriation for a Protestant institution in Worcester. His faithfulness as a public servant was shown by his absence from only one session of the Legislature, and his answering to 154 out of 166 roll calls.

J. D. Gill presented the name of Edward S. Bradford. Mr. Bradford had been a candidate for the Senate before Mr. Lyford, but had stood back when it was thought best to nominate Mr. Lyford. He was a high-minded, conscientious and straightforward man. He had many friends, and what was to prevent them from voting for him in the convention if they chose? Mr. Lyford had had two years in the House and one in the Senate, and Mr. Bradford had had one year in the House and his friends proposed to give him two in the Senate. An informal ballot was ordered, G. F. Amidon and E. T. Davis of Springfield and L. C. Flynt of Monson being tellers. The result was 32 for Bradford, 25 for Lyford and one blank. Mr. Lyford's friends refused to make the vote unanimous and formal, in view of Mr. Bradford's published letter stating that "If he (Lyford) at any time should withdraw, or for any reason turn his support to others, then and only then could I feel at liberty to allow my name to be used in the convention," and a formal ballot gave Bradford 35 and Lyford 23. Col. A. H. Goetting of Springfield was reëlected a member of the state committee from this district.

Tenth Hampden Representative Republican Convention.

The Republican convention for the 10th Hampden representative district was held in the court room in Palmer at noon Monday. L. E. Chandler of Palmer was made chairman and A. H. Halford of Ludlow secretary. Dr. R. V. Sawin of Brimfield, J. O. Hamilton of Palmer and John Hobson of Ludlow were appointed a committee on credentials, and reported the presence of 14 delegates, the full number. It was voted to proceed to an informal ballot for candidate for representative, and G. L. Webber of Holland presented the name of Horace E. Wallis of that town. J. Reed Brown of Brimfield presented a petition signed by a number of the voters of Holland protesting against that town's naming the candidate, but no other name was presented to the convention, and the informal ballot gave Mr. Wallis 12 votes, with one for Dr. Sawin of Brimfield one not voting. W. H. Brainard of Palmer and J. A. Tilmosse, Jr., of Ludlow, were tellers. On motion of Dr. Sawin the informal ballot was made formal and unanimous. It was voted that the chairmen of the several town committees comprise the district committee, of which the Palmer member should be the chairman, with power to call the convention next year without further notice. Hardly had the motion to adjourn been voted on when Francis Wight of Holland sprang to his feet and addressed those present, claiming that the whole matter was an underhanded proceeding, that scarcely any of the voters of Holland knew that the town was to name the candidate, no official notice to that effect having been sent them, that there were only a few at the caucus which chose the delegate, and that the names on the petition—19—ought to have had some weight with the convention. It is understood, however, that several of the names on that petition are those of voters who were not registered at the time of the caucus, and that others are open to the suspicion of not being bona fide Republicans.

Hampden County Republican Convention Nominations.

The Republican county convention was held in Springfield Tuesday, and resulted as follows:

County commissioner, 3 years, Timothy M. Brown of Springfield.
County commissioner, 1 year, James M. Sickman of Holyoke.
County treasurer, 3 years, M. Wells Bridge of Springfield.
Register of deeds, James R. Wells of Springfield.

All of the 126 delegates were present or represented by proxy. When nominations were in order it was announced that Leonard Clark declined a renomination for county commissioner, and J. D. Gill presented the name of Timothy M. Brown of Springfield, referring to his ability, judicial temperament and common sense, and the nomination was made unanimous. W. S. Loomis of Holyoke then presented the name of James M. Sickman of that city, pointing out his ability as a civil engineer, his experience on the board and his general thoroughness and painstaking. The name of Mr. Ellsworth of Holyoke was presented by A. S. Kneil of Westfield. A ballot gave Sickman 102 and Ellsworth 22 votes.

Mr. Gill presented the name of James R. Wells of Springfield for register of deeds, and he was renominated.

For county treasurer N. S. Hubbard of Brimfield presented the name of M. Wells Bridge of Springfield, the former treasurer, whose long record of faithful service was extolled. It was also stated that the prohibitionists would endorse Mr. Bridge this year, they having gone against him three years ago. The name of George E. Miller of Springfield was presented by D. E. Webster of that city. The convention was asked to endorse the present Democratic incumbent, William C. Marsh, but the delegates were reminded that they were sent there by their constituents to nominate a Republican, and a ballot gave Mr. Bridge 64 votes, Miller 54, W. H. Foote of Westfield four and Mr. Marsh three. J. C. Burleigh of Hampden was chosen on the county committee in place of H. A. McFarland of Wales.

The ninth Hampden Representative Democratic convention will be held in Memorial Hall, Monson, next Monday afternoon at 2.30.

Frank M. Sibley of Ware was nominated for representative by the Republicans of the fifth Hampshire district at the convention in Enfield Tuesday, the nomination being by acclamation.

The Worcester-Hampshire Democratic senatorial convention will be held in the town hall at Ware to-morrow at 11.30 a. m. The district includes the towns of Athol, Barre, Dana, Gardner, Hardwick, Hubbardston, Petersham, New Braintree, Oakham, Phillipston, Enfield, Granby, Greenwich, Hadley, Pelham, Prescott, South Hadley and Ware.

There was a heavy fall of rain Tuesday night, accompanied by high wind, which did considerable damage to trees about the village. Numerous branches were broken off, and several good sized trees were snapped in two.

Dr. W. H. Stowe, who has been recovering from his severe attack of blood poisoning last winter, was stricken last Saturday night with congestion of the brain, and has been seriously ill this week, but is somewhat better now.

The rooms of the Business and Social Club in Holden's new block are fast approaching completion, and a meeting of those who have expressed a desire to join the club is called for next Tuesday evening at 7.30 in the district court room.

F. A. Wood, living on the Hines farm in Brimfield, picked eight quarts of fine huckleberries Monday, an unusual thing for this time of year. The fruit was large, and full of fine flavor, as the quart left at the JOURNAL office bore evidence.

Holden, Tufts, Knowlton and Kent of the Palmer Bicycle Club went to the Stafford fair Tuesday to take part in the bicycle races there. Kent was the only one to qualify in the preliminaries, but in the finals the others were too fast for him.

H. N. Sager & Co., who were announced to open a store in the Nassowanno block about September 15th, but who failed to come at that time, have now shipped their stock here and expect to be open for business in a short time. The delay has been caused by the illness of Mr. Sager.

The selectmen have designated the following as polling places for the state election November 6th: Precinct A, Palmer, in the engine house on Park street; B, Thorndike, in the basement of Loftus's block on Commercial street; C, Three Rivers, in the room over the office of the Palmer Mill; D, Bondsville, in Liberty Hall.

Next Sunday will be "Autumn Sunday" at the Universalist church. The audience room and chapel will be decorated with autumn leaves, and the pastor will preach an appropriate sermon on "The Autumn Leaves—Their Message to Us about Growing Aged." The church quartette will arrange music in keeping with this special occasion.

Mrs. Angeline Parks, wife of F. P. Whittemore, died at her bome in Nashua, N. H., on the morning of the 1st. Mrs. Whittemore was born in Palmer, and was the sister of W. R. Parks. Her death was very sudden, she having retired to her room but expired before she could disrobe. She was 66 years old, and leaves a husband, son and daughter.

C. H. Clark, who has sung bass in the choir at the Congregational church since the first of April, has resigned that position, and has entered the employ of the Investor of Boston as travelling editorial correspondent. His headquarters for the present will be Columbus, Ohio, where he has gone to write up the wool industry. Mr. Clark's fine voice will be greatly missed at the church services.

Albert Henry Bogue of Palmer and Sarah Luella Cooley of Mittineague were married at the home of the bride on Wednesday. The ceremony was performed under an arch of laurel and ferns, the bridal couple standing under a horseshoe of sweet alyssum and white carnations. The bride was attired in cream Lansdowne en traine, and carried 27 bride roses. After a collation the young couple left for a trip to Washington, D. C., and on their return will reside in Palmer.

Numbers of huge trees have been hauled into the village from the west during the past two weeks, and many people have wondered where they were going. They are from the wood lot near Three Rivers recently bought by Keith Brothers of Stafford, and are shipped over the New London Northern road to Belchertown, where they are sent over the Central rord to Boston, to be used by the Boston and Maine road as piles in constructing wharves in the harbor.

Deputy Sheriff Studley has been looking after the children between the ages of 8 and 14 who have not been enrolled on the school registers, and in the Depot village found only one. Two were found in Bondsville, but the canvass of the villages of Three Rivers and Thorndike has not been finished yet, as it is difficult to find who of those not in the public schools are in the parochial schools, the scholars there being enrolled under their French names, while to the taker of the school census they gave the American equivalent.

The young men interested in the formation of a "Pauline Brotherhood" met in the chapel of St. Paul's church Tuesday evening and formed a temporary organization with these officers: President, Scott French; vice president, H. M. Graves; secretary, Walter Brown; executive committee, Walter Goodes, Frank Keith and Joseph Paige. Last evening these officers, with several young men, met and voted to invite Rev. George Huntley of South Framingham to organize them into a "Pauline Brotherhood." The next meeting will be held next Thursday evening at 8.15, in the same place.

E. W. French, who went to the insane hospital at Hartford some time ago for treatment, returned Monday, and on Tuesday was before the district court to have the question of his sanity determined. He was examined by two physicians who declined to pronounce him insane. Mr. French stated, however, that he had been troubled with a nervous affection for some time, and had narrowly escaped nervous prostration, he was fearful that if nothing were done for it he might in time become distracted, and volunteered to go to Northampton for treatment. He was accordingly sent there.

The Democratic caucus at the town house Tuesday evening resulted in the choice of these delegates: Senatorial, Homer C. Strong, James J. Manning, Morris Moriarty, Michael Riley, F. F. Marcy and George E. Buck; county, Thomas W. Kenefick, James P. Galleher, Thomas J. Moran, William Regan, Charles K. Gamwell and Arthur Grise; representative, E. P. Brown, John W. Molloy, Michael Collins, David J. Hartnett, William H. Smith, John F. Hanifin, Daniel Graves, Frank A. Royce, George W. Lyman and William F. Moran. The following town committee for 1895 was chosen: J. F. Foley, F. L. Pierce, D. J. Sullivan, James Manning and Morris Moriarty, Jr.

The Boston and Albany railroad company, through its counsel, appeared in the superior court Monday and pleaded guilty to the indictment charging it with causing the death of Frank E. Sedgwick of Palmer, who was a messenger in the employ of the American Express Company, and was killed in the Chester wreck. A fine of $2700 was imposed, and the money will go to his widow, Mrs. Ella Sedgwick of Palmer. An agreement had been reached between the counsel for both parties, whereby this result was attained. The company pleaded guilty to the charges of carelessness in its corporate capacity, but not on counts against its servants, which were quashed.

In the district court last Saturday Frank T. Curby of Springfield paid $5 for having been drunk. On Monday Patrick J. Riley, for the larceny of a pair of shoes from the shop of F. M. Eager, was sent to the house of correction for three months. James Ferguson, a vagrant, was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for two years. Herbert Wright of Monson, for attempted rape, was bound over to the superior court in the sum of $1000, which he could not furnish. On Wednesday Alsonale Marien of Three Rivers paid $3 for assaulting a fellow countryman. Oliver Julien of Palmer, charged with drunkenness and assault, had his case continued until the 27th. Yesterday morning W. H. Williams was charged by the Waterloo Carriage Co. of Waterloo, N. Y., with obtaining goods under false pretense by having given an untrue statement as to his financial standing. Examination was waived and the case goes up to the superior court.

The boys of St. Paul's Universalist church, with others, met at the Universalist parsonage yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock to organize a "Boys Brigade." They had explained to them its objects of physical training and Bible instruction, and also the conditions of membership namely: They must not drink liquors, nor use tobacco, nor swear, and that they must go to this church Sunday school with a reasonable degree of regularity. The boys are to be trained in the United states army tactics for drilling, etc., later they will have some kind of a uniform and muskets. Horace Paine is to be the drill instructor, and Rev. H. F. Moulton will be the Bible instructor. A temporary organization of the brigade was formed for the securing of members and the transaction of other business, with these officers President; Willie Goods; vice president, Frank Weeman; secretary, Walter Small. These constitute an executive committee. The next meeting will be held next Thursday at 4 o'clock, in the chapel of St. Paul's church.

A Word for the Quaboag Literary Circle.

Editor of the Journal:—Kindly permit me to call attention through the JOURNAL to the opportunities offered by the Quaboag Literary Circle, which opens its second session this evening. The meetings last year were full of interest and most profitable to all who attended. The papers presented were the fruit of long and patient investigation and preparation, and were worthy of large audiences. This circle may be made of as great benefit to the intellectual life of many as to that of a few. I would suggest that as many as can join the circle for work, and that others, who for any reason feel that they cannot do the work, come to hear the papers and discussions, and thus learn many things at these meetings. The lighter social life would lose nothing by more attention to intellectual life but would rather be the gainer in elements truly enjoyable. Village social life often runs to seed for the want of intellectual stimulus. When a community has the social, intellectual and religious elements in due proportion and all interpenetrating each other, it is at its best as a place in which to live. Let us combine from all social and religious circles to benfit the intellectual life of ourselves and of the town.

Yours truly,
FRANK E. JENKINS.

William Noble was called last week to Boston to attend his mother's funeral. His wife, who has been spending the summer in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, met him in Boston and returned home with him Monday night.

Quite a joke on one of the Democratic delegates to the state convention at Boston. He forgot his credential and had to telegraph home for it. The same man went to Boston a year ago on a visit, and on reaching the city went to a restaurant and ordered dinner, but when he came to pay the bill found he had only just enough change, having left his money in his other clothes when he changed before leaving.

Mrs. Charles Crouch and son Leon of West Warren spent Thursday with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. James Fuller, it being her mother's birthday. Mrs. Fuller is 82 years old and does all her own work, takes care of the milk of two cows, sews, does fancy work, goes visiting and to church, and takes as much interest in the current news of the day as many younger women. She is a good mother, a faithful wife and a kind neighbor, and a large circle of friends wish her many happy returns of the day.

THREE RIVERS.

Mrs. Wilbur Bliss is visiting in Collinsville, Ct.

Fred Paine is spending his vacation in Southbridge.

Henry Geer commenced work in his horse radish factory yesterday.

Elbridge Tenny has a number of barrels of Baldwin apples which every one who has seen concedes to be the finest here this season.

Rev. T. G. A. Cote of Lowell and Rev. Mr. Provost of Springfield are expected to hold a French service at the U. E. church next Sunday evening.

The registrars of voters will be at the office of the Palmer Mill next Wednesday, from 2 to 4 p. m., for the purpose of revising the voting list in precinct C.

Miss Aggie Pilou of this place, and Jerry Grinier of Bridgport, Ct., were married at St. Anne's church Tuesday, and have gone to Bridgeport, where they intend to make their home.

Rev. E. C. Weeks will take as his subject next Sunday morning "Judgment at the House of God, and the End of the Sinner." In the evening an evangelistic meeting will be held.

J. C. Moody, supervisor of penmanship in the public schools of Ware, will open an evening writing class in the rooms over the Otis Co's. office about Nov. 1st. This is an opportunity which all should avail themselves of.

The bell which was hung on St. Anne's church a few years ago is badly split, and has been useless for several days But as the western firm which furnished it gave a five years guarantee, a new one has been forwarded by them, and will replace the injured one as soon as possible.

Mr. Hood, who has resided here for several years, has purchased a grocery business in Claremont, Vt., and will move to that place next week. Gustave Eckhart, who has also lived here for many years, has resigned his position in the weaving room in the mill, and will accompany Mr. Hood, in order to assist with the business.

An amusing occurence took place last Saturday afternoon, which placed in a ludicrous position a certain person who thought something was transpiring which would invidiously affect conjugal felicity in one of the homes in this village. It seems that one of the good husbands was going, in company with his wife, to Springfield in order to do some shopping, and was observed by one of his neighbors, who knew the husband but not the wife, it being inferred that an elopement was in progress. Accordingly this sapient individual went in haste to notify the forsaken wife, but found the house locked and none of the inmates anywhere visible. Then a season of deliberation followed, at the conclusion of which this patron of connubial integrity resolved to await a favorable opportunity to acquaint the unfortunate wife. The opportunity arrived, the happy wife listened attentively to the narrative, and then complacently replied: "Though my husband is not a railroad conductor, he and I went to Springfield to-day."

DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES died at his home in Beverly Farms Sunday evening at the age of 85 years.

IT is suggested by the Bunker Hill Association that June 17th, "Bunker Hill Day," be made a legal holiday. But aren't we liable to overdue the legal holiday business?

THOSE New York Democrats who do not like Hill have nominated Everett P. Wheeler of New York city for governor, with a likelihood of giving the state a Republican governor next year.

ANDREW CREGG MARTIN, the war governor of Pennsylvania, died at his home in Bellefontaine Sunday morning at the age of nearly 80, having never recovered from the strain upon his constitution of the toil and anxiety of war time.

OF all the state legislatures next year none will attract greater attention at the start than that of Colorado, where, whichever party wins, 8 or 10 women will have seats. All three parties have a woman candidate for state superintendent of public instruction. Not less than 39,000 women have their names on the voting lists for this fall's election.

AT the convention of humane societies held in Albany, N. Y., last week, a resolution was adopted advocating the restoration of the lash as a punishment for the brutes who abuse children. The whipping post seems to have a more deterrent effect on some kinds of crime than any other punishment, and is working well in Delaware. If there is anything which will tend to greater protection of children who are unable to defend themselves, let us have it, by all means.

THE platform committee of the Republican state convention is somewhat sharply criticised for truckling to the A. P. A. by the insertion of the planks expressly formulated to conciliate that element. The order is of doubtful strength at best, and while some of the principles set forth by it are worthy the adoption of every American citizen, the prime object for which the order is supposed to exist should have no place in the tenets of any party which aims at the best welfare of all, and the Republican party cannot afford to lay itself open to any suspicion of indorsement of the A. P. A. as a whole.

THE shake-up which resulted Monday in the turning down of Edwin F. Lyford, who has served so acceptably one term in the Senate, and the nominating of Edward S. Bradford is greatly to be deplored, and those who worked hard to bring about this result will very likely regret it in the near future. The result may easily be traced to the desire of Col. Young and his friends to run him for the Legislature in the district which Mr. Bradford represented last year, and in which he was a candidate for renomination. Had he been renominated there would have been no opposition to a second term for Mr. Lyford, next year Mr. Bradford would have stepped up a peg and Mr. Young would have had a much better chance of election than he does now with C. C. Spellman running against him. It looks very much as though Mr. Lyford had been set one side to appease Mr. Bradford for the loss of the representative nomination. In view of Mr. Bradford's statements this is still more apparent. Before the convention he said in a published letter: "If he (Lyford) at any time should withdraw, or for any reason turn his support to others, then and only then could I feel at liberty to allow my name to be used in the convention." And also: "I cannot for a moment think of permitting the present mixed condition of political affairs to result in making me an obstacle to his renomination this year, for he deserves it and should receive it." After the convention he said: "From the first I have been for Mr. Lyford. I did not know that my name was to be presented in the convention. I have continually told my friends that I was for Mr. Lyford, and would not run against him for the nomination." If Mr. Bradford had really meant what he said it would have been very easy for him to "refuse to run against Mr. Lyford" in a way which would have left no question in the matter. Mr. Bradford has left Springfield for a ten-days' trip in the woods, but if it is true that person's ears tingle when uncomplimentary remarks are made about them, he is not having an entirely enjoyable vacation.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Dancing and Deportment.

Mr. T. H. Treadway respectfully announces the opening of a class for instruction in the Waltz, Schottische, Newport and the latest society dances, in Memorial hall, Monson, Tuesday evening, October 16. Terms, $5 for 12 lessons.

Assult on a Seven-Years-Old Girl.

The victim is little Leda Chouinard, and the brute who was guilty of the crime is Herbert Wright, about 30, an unkempt, ill-favored fellow who has never been a credit to the community. Sunday the Chouinard girl and a younger brother and sister, with a neighbor's girl of 10, went on the hills for chestnuts. While there they met Wright, who told the other children that if they would stay where they were he would take Leda to a place where there were lots of chestnuts, and would then come back and help them fill their baskets. He took the little one out of sight of the rest and attempted an assault. Wright admits everything but the assault, which he strehuously denies. On examination the child was found not to be seriously injured, though there were evidences of attempted assault, and Wright was bound over to the grand jury in $1000 bonds, which he could not furnish. Wright's record is not of the best. He has been before the court at Palmer numerous times, first as a stubborn child, then for stealing, vagrancy, and other crimes.

There will be a union temperance rally in Memorial Hall next Sunday evening at 7.30. The address will be delivered by John R. Anderson of Clinton, who is said to be an excellent speaker, very popular with the young people and accustomed to meet large audiences on this theme. He has just spoken in Marlboro, where 700 people crowded the hall to listen.

About twenty neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Tower Moulton of Moulton Hill, made them a surprise visit Monday evening, to remind them of their tenth wedding anniversary. Cake and ice-cream were served, and dancing was indulged in. Among the presents carried were a rocking chair, handsome glass set, picture throw, nut cracker, and numerous tin articles.

Prof. T. H. Treadway will open a series of dancing lessons at Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening, when those wishing to become familiar with the latest ball-room dances and etiquette should be present. Parents desirous of having their children instructed in plain and fancy dancing are invited to meet Prof. Treadway at that time, when arrangements can be made for afternoon lessons.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Methodist church held a meeting Monday evening. It was voted to accept the invitation of the Congregational Endeavors to meet with them on their sixth anniversary, which will be the last Sunday in the month. It was also voted to join the Congregational society in the missionary extension movement, which has had such great popularity among the young, especially in the West.

There are two articles in the October number of the Amateur Sportsman written by Frank G. Nelson, a former resident of Monson, entitled "The Lake St. John Ouaniche," and "Trout and Salmon in Nova Scotia," which are very entertaining. They are profusely illustrated with wood-cuts made from photographs taken by Lyman C. Flynt of Monson, who accompanied Mr. Nelson on the trip which he describes.

The Republicans of the ninth Hampden representative district held their convention in Monson Monday afternoon. The nomination was conceded to Longmeadow, and the fight came between the two towns. The convention was organized by the choice of Francis Clark of Willbraham as chairman and Wilson Tucker of Monson as clerk. The names of J. M. Burt of East Longmeadow and Charles A. Birney of West Longmeadow were placed in nomination, and an informal ballot taken, which resulted in eight votes for Mr. Burt and seven for Mr. Birnie with one blank. Another informal ballot gave each candidate eight votes. A formal ballot was then taken and Mr Burt received nine votes and Mr. Birnie seven. The convention refused to make the nomination unanimous.

A meeting of the Park Avenue Association was held Tuesday evening and George H. Newton, R. M. Reynolds and Rev. John F. Lee were appointed a committee to formulate a basis of organization for future action, and report at the adjourned meeting to be held at Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening, at which time the permanent organization will probably be completed. The shares have all been taken. It is thought that after the next meeting an executive committee will be chosen which will soon develop plans and methods which will open up the new avenue and place much-needed building lots on the market. Inquiries are already being made about lots. The water commissioners will put on a T joint in anticipation of patrons.

Academy Notes.

Dr. N. W. Rand is having his house wired for electric lights.

The severe storm of Wednesday blew over a large oak tree in the rear of the Academy, somewhat damaging the old laboratory building.

Miss Alice E. Carpenter of the class of '90, who has been spending a year at the Westfield Normal School, has returned to the Academy to prepare herself for admission to Smith college.

As Wednesday, the day selected by the students to attend the Stafford fair, was stormy, the regular session was held that day and the session of Thursday omitted. For the same reason but one session was held on Wednesday.

People who have occasion to pass the Academy are pleased to see that the campus, already beautiful by its surroundings, is being made still more attractive by the regular use of a lawn mower.

After chapel exercises Tuesday morning Principal Burke called the attention of the school to the death of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, and paid a fitting tribute to his genius. Miss Pease then read Whittier's tribute to Holmes, written shortly before Whittier's death, and also a part of Holmes's poem, "The Chambered Nautilus," a poem especially dear to the author, and one by which he desired to be remembered.

The Democrats chose these delegates at the caucus Wednesday evening: Senatorial convention, George H. Newton, Omar E. Bradway, John P. Herlihly, Jr., Joseph F. Coyle; county (same as senatorial); representative, George H. Newton, A. M. Guilford, John P. Herlihly, Jr., Nelson A. Bugbee, W. M. Sutcliffe; town committee, Nelson A. Bugbee, Omar E. Bradway, Joseph F. Coyle, Herbert E. Thompson, David D. Meaney, Nicholas L. Hanley, Herbert M. Smith.

The following children in Green street primary school have been neither absent nor tardy during the month of September: Nellie Beckwith, Isabel Bogan, Mamie Bogan, Lilla Bradway, Lizzie Bradway, Bertha Cantwell, Lizzie Hanson, Lida Hathaway, Mamie Hynes, Maggie Kearns, Greta Merrick, Alice Noble, Florence O'Brien, Kittie O'Brien, Jennie Prue, Grace Thayer, Roscoe Thayer, Arthur Connolly, Frank Cushman, Carl Rand, Clifford Miller, Frank Gath, Howard Gath, Eddie Hanley, Willie Hanson, Frank Holloway, Raymond Holloway, Peter Kearns, Henry Neville, Herbert Howe, Eddie Lambert. The per cent of attendance was 98 7.

BRIMFIELD.

Mrs. E. T. Sherman and family left last week for New York, where they will spend the winter.

Walter Lowe and family from Cleveland, O., arrived in town last week. They expect to make their home here this winter.

The Democrats chose these delegates Tuesday evening: Senatorial, C. S. Tarbell and C. E. Bacon; county, F. E. Cook and E. W. Potter; representative, Frank R. Newton, F. E. Cook, C. E. Bacon and O. F. Brown. The following town committee for 1895 was chosen: C. S. Tarbell, O. F. Brown and F. E. Cook.

WEST WARREN.

Mrs. John Shaw has been sick with a severe cold.

Miss Bridget O'Neill of Rhode Island has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Mary Danahey.

There will be a series of revival services in the M. E. church, to begin next Tuesday.

Isaac Stearns' bus carried the West Warren Brass Band to Belchertown last week Thursday. The boys feel greatly honored, as they met the governor and were highly complimented.

The Epworth League gave a sociable in the M. E. church vestry Wednesday evening, and Rev. A. M. Osgood of Ware gave an outline of the Epworth League Convention in Manchester, N. H., to which he went as a delegate.

BELCHERTOWN.

J. R. Gould is spending a few days in New York.

The ladies of the Methodist church cleared $125 at their dinner on the fair grounds.

H. D. Hoag has the contract for repairing and rebuilding the old Draper place.

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Lauree of Indian Orchard are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Lauree.

The Guild has decided to hold a fair at Christmas time, and also to give an entertainment soon if the assistance of L. E. Bullock can be secured.

L. W. Dillon of the Belcher House, president of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Club, gave a supper to the officers of the club and their wives Tuesday evening.

Lyman Worden has been appointed acting town clerk in place of the late George W. Longley. The store lately occupied by Mr. Longley will be continued under the management of Mr. Worden.

Mrs. Louise Graves of Somerville has agreed to buy the Root property provided the town will agree to give up all claim to the road crossing the premises in front of the building site. An article to that effect will be one of the things in the town warrant to be acted upon at the meeting this fall.

WALES.

Miss Alice Pepper is spending a few weeks in Charlton among relatives.

There will be a harvest concert at the Methodist church next Sunday evening.

Salem J. Shaw of West Sutton has arrived in town, as is his custom evey fall, to visit friends and harvest his apples.

Cards are out for the marriage of Evalena Roberts of North Adams to Herbert W. Eager of Wales, the ceremony to be performed at North Adams next Wednesday, at 4 p. m.

Alvin Converse and a Leno boy both tried their axes on their feet last week, making bad gashes. Both were attended by Dr. Kinsman, several stitches being taken in each, and they are doing well.

H. A. McFarland has raised 213 bushels of corn on a trifle over 1½ acres, besides several loads of pumpkins and a few bushels of turnips. On the whole, corn has greatly surprised people, considering the dry weather.

The rain on Wednesday caused great disappointment, as a large number of people had arranged to attend the Stafford fair. The Hegan mill stopped for the day to accommodate those who desired to attend. It is needless to say there were some tears shed among the younger ones, and it is said some older ones cried, so great was the disappointment.

WILBRAHAM.

The following officers have been selected by the junior class of the Academy: President, H. L. Hannah; vice-president, Miss E. Belle; secretary and treasurer, Miss Mabel Johnson.

Manager Roy E. Clark has arranged the following schedule of games for the Academy foot-ball team: October 15, Suffield Academy at Wilbraham; 25, Hartford high school at Hartford; 27, Williston at Wilbraham; November 3, Worcester high school at Wilbraham.

The Young People's Cattle Show.

The Young People's Agricultural Club held its annual cattle show last Friday on the green, a mile south of the Academy. The attendance was very good and the exhibition unusually fine. Owing to the dry season the vegetable exhibit was not as large as usual, but the show of horses and cattle was excellent, there being over 200 head. The poultry exhibit was the finest the fair has had for several years. The prize for the best double team of draft horses was awarded to D. F. Shumway of Hampden, and for the best exhibit of horses and colts to C. P. Bolles. J. S. Richards received the prize for the best herd of not less than five cows, and E. Bliss received the premium for the best herd of cattle. The best exhibit of poultry was by E. N. Fisher of Ludlow. The prizes for the best peck of Rochester rose potatoes and for the best exhibit of fruit were awarded to W. M. Bliss. In the art exhibit Miss Lizzie J. McGuire received the premium. The afternoon was devoted to sports, and the first was a two-mile handicap town bicycle race, won by E. D. Tufts, the scratch man, in 6 minutes and four seconds. The club one-mile handicap was won by C. H. Calkins in 8 minutes 24 seconds, and the four-mile handicap by E. D. Tufts, the scratch man, his time being 15 minutes, 10 seconds. There was also one horse race. The afternoon closed with a ball game between the Wilbraham and North Wilbraham teams, resulting in a victory for the former, the score being 6 to 5.

WARREN.

WARE.

The new telephone exchange is in full operation.

John Kennedy has returned from the hospital, very much improved in health.

The new arrangement of electric lights with reflectors gives a fine effect in the store windows.

C. P. Nelson has remodeled his store, putting his work room in the rear, giving a better front store.

A skunk got into the cellar of Donnelley's stove store last Friday night, and that part of the street was highly perfumed.

J. W. Stockwell, lecturer of the state Grange, gave an address at Ware Center Monday evening. Supper was served.

The services of Miss Mary Lawton have been secured to assist in the singing at the dedication of All Saints' church Nov. 4.

H. C. Kalich of Boston is expecting to open to-morrow a stock of small wares, notions, etc., in the store in the Hampshire House block.

Mrs. Harty's dining rooms are open to the public. Neat, bright and attractive, with food in great variety, the place is worthy of patronage.

One of the largest sales of property at auction is that of George B. Canterbury next Wednesday, when he will sell his farm and personal property.

"Old Jed Prouty" will no doubt draw a big house at the town hall next Tuesday evening. He has been here before, and playgoers know there will be lots of fun.

The new bridge near the residence of Mr. Richards on the Gilbertville road is completed, at a cost of $1100. It is reported that it will stand a weight of fifteen tons moving over it.

The Unity club has elected the following officers: President, Rev. V. E. Southworth; vice presidents, Henry Allen, Dr. G. M. C. Barnard; secretary, J. G. Lincoln; treasurer, F. R. Cunningham.

J. C. Dexter has resigned his position at the News office, and entered the employ of the Estey Organ and Piano Company, and will canvass all the towns in this vicinity, including Palmer, Amherst, Warren and the Brookfields.

B. F. Davis is showing a nice lot of peanuts on the roots, grown by him on his farm here in Ware. They are quite a curiosity, as many people can hardly believe that they grow under ground.

Rev. E. L. Rivard, pastor of the French Congregational church, is having 2000 copies of his illustrated primer printed. This is a second edition, showing the favor with which it has been received.

A very happy reunion of sisters took place at the home of Mrs. H. G. Snow near Gibb's crossing September 28, the occasion being the birthday of Mrs. Lucius M. Pomeroy of South Deerfield. The other sisters present were Mrs. Harriet B. Green of South Deerfield and Mrs. Adelphia M. Root of Springfield. The day was very pleasantly spent by the four sisters, who had not all been together for some time.

At the Democratic caucus Wednesday evening W. J. Reilly was chairman and H. A. Mongrain secretary. The following delegates were elected: Senatorial, M. W. Buckley, E. P. Morse, E. R. Foster, Geo. S. Marsh, Adelard Duboise, Dr. J. A. Gendron; representative, F. A. Spencer, W. F. Godfrey, J. C. Byrns, W. J. Reilley, James M. Moran, Geo. S. Marsh, Dr. D. M. Ryan, H. M. Clark; county, Maurice Fitzgerald, W. F. Godfrey, Felix Bombard, F. W. Farrar, James Harrison, David Rohan; town committee, Geo. D. Storrs, J. A. Byrns, John Brosnahan, E. R. Foster, F. A. Spencer, James M. Maloney, Dr. J. A. Gendron.

Mrs. Isabelle B. Gilbert, aged 86 years, died on Tuesday morning at the home of her son, Adolphus H. Gilbert. Her husband, Baxter Gilbert, died about eight years ago, since which time she has lived at her home on South street, keeping house, until a few weeks ago, when she had a fall and was taken to the home of her son to be cared for. She has lived in Ware nearly all her life, coming here from Hardwick when quite young. Besides the son mentioned above she left three daughters, Mrs. W. E. Bullard and Mrs. Thomas Tobin of Ware, and Mrs. A. S. Hare of North Brookfield. The funeral was on Wednesday, the services being conducted by Rev. A. B. Bassett.

In the death of Fred O. Rugg Tuesday morning the community has lost one of its most estimable young men. Known to a large circle of friends, he will be greatly missed, and the place he occupied in active, earnest Christian work will be hard to fill. Mr. Rugg was the son of Addison Rugg, and was born in Ware December 2, 1859. For several years he was assistant overseer in the Otis Company's dyeing department, and was a prominent member of the East Congregational church. He was vice president of the Christian Endeavor society, treasurer of the Sunday school, secretary of the Ware Christian Workers, and superintendent of the Hardwick district Sunday school. He was one of those open, manly Christian characters, whose life told for good wherever its influence went, and though it seems to us cut off at the very threshold of its power and usefulness, we believe it is living and will live in the lives of many others who knew him. The funeral services were held this afternoon in the Congregational chapel, conducted by Rev. A. B. Bassett, and were attended by a large number of friends and acquaintances. The floral tributes were very fine, not only from the immediate relatives and friends, but also a handsome piece, "Gates Ajar," from the associates in the employ of the Otis Company, a cross from the Christian Endeavor society, star and crescent from the Ware Christian Workers with the inscription on satin ribon, "He giveth His beloved sleep," entwined with a spray of forget-me-nots, and a beautiful Maltese cross from the King's Daughters "Circle of Gleaners," of which Mrs. Rugg was treasurer, and a bunch of roses from the Hardwick district Sunday school.

Last Saturday was a day of celebration by the Ware fire department, it being the the annual inspection. The weather was favorable, and the town generally turned out to see the parade and contests. At 1.30 p. m. the members of the several companies assembled with their apparatus at the engine house on Water street, where the line was formed, and proceeded with the police officers in the lead. The prudential committee was represented by Col. E. H Gilbert and F. P. Clark, who were both mounted on fine chargers. The following companies were in line: Hose No 1, Eugene McCarty foreman, 13 men; hose No 2, John Gleason, foreman, 12 men; hose No 3. Michael Shea, foreman, 10 men; hose No 4, William Charboneau, foreman, 10 men; hook and ladder No 1, Waldo Cheever, foreman, 15 men; Otis hose, Thomas Studd, foreman, 18 men; Gilbert hose, John Montgomery, foreman, 15 men; board of engineers, Thomas C. Gleason, chief, M. J. Dillon and M. J. Reilley assistants. Music was furnished by the Ware Cornet Band, Harry Smith, leader, and the Columbian Band of Thorndike. Mr. McKenzie, leader. After the march through the principal streets of the village the column was halted on Main street, where the contests took place. These were heartily entered into by the men, and the time made was quite satisfactory. The hook and ladder company ran 150 feet to the truck, took extension ladder from it and placed a man on roof of the Hampshire House, the time being 30 seconds. The hose contest was to run 400 feet, connect hose to hydrant, make three couplings, attach nozzle and get water through 200 feet of hose. The times were: No. 2, 23½ seconds; No. 2, 24 seconds; No. 3, failed; No. 4, 23 seconds. The steamer threw water 209 feet against a strong wind. At 6 o'clock the firemen and a few invited guests formed at the engine house and marched to the Methodist vestry on Church street, where they partook of the annual banquet, furnished by the ladies in their usual generous manner. Several of the invited guests were present only on the condition that they should not be called upon for remarks, therefore only F. P. Clark of the prudential committee and and Rev. A. M. Osgood were heard from. Selectman Storrs was present, and through Chief Gleason promised the department a supper at the Mansion House at a date to be fixed later in the month. The company broke up with good feelings, and all were well pleased with the programme of the day. Later in the evening a large number attended the social dance in Firemen's Hall, under the auspices of Hose Co's. 1 and 2. The music was by the Symphony orchestra. The companies cleared a little over $40.

Charles E. Lynch of Springfield has succeeded in a remarkable way in improving the standard of so-called ready-made clothing. He has done so by producing a class of goods that compare favorably with fine custom clothing. It would have been deemed impossible, a few years back, to manufacture such perfect fitting garments except at extravagantly high prices. Charles E. Lynch has done so. The fall suits exhibited by that firm cannot be too highly commended.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Very Valuable and Free to All.

If you have not already accepted this great free offer, don't lose another minute. It tells you how to be well and strong. This most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, is Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who makes the following generous offer. Write him about your complaint, tell him just how you feel, and he will answer your letter, describing your case and telling exactly what your trouble is. He gives most minute attention to every detail, and makes you understand instantly just what ails you. And think of it, all this costs you nothing. He makes a specialty of treating patients through letter correspondence and is having wonderful success. He is the discoverer of that world-renowned medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which is constantly curing thousands of people. Any one not living in the largest cities will appreciate this splendid opportunity to consult, entirely free, the highest medical authority, without leaving their homes, thus saving the time and expense of a trip to the city, and also the large fee charged by other and less skillful physicians. Write him at once, and the probabilities are you will be made well and strong.

BLANKETS.

What kink of a blanket will I buy for the coming cold weather? is the absorbing question with many housewives just now. The question must be largely decided by yourself. There are hundreds of blankets here, and we could write columns about them; but you don't want that. You want to see them, to heft them, and to measure them. Perhaps you can best examine them at the counter.

But the list will help; it will tell you about how good a blanket you can get for your money. Carry it to the store with you.

Here's two special ones, bought as seconds. Haven't examined them close enough to find out what's the matter with them; an oil spot perhaps:

Size 68x80, weight 5 lbs., $2.12½, regularly $2.75.
Size 70x80, weight 5 lbs., $2.37½, regularly $3.

The regular stock, white blankets:

Size 54x74, weight 2½ lbs., 50 cents.
Size 56x76, weight 3 lbs., 75 cents.
Size 60x76, weight 3½ lbs., $1.
Size 64x74, weight 4½ lbs., $1.25.
Size 64x74, weight 4½ lbs., $1.50.
Size 68x78, weight 5½ lbs., $1.98.
Size 60x78, weight 4½ lbs., $2.50.
Size 68x78, weight 5½ lbs., $2.50.
Size 62x78, weight 4½ lbs., $2.75.
Size 68x70, weight 5½ lbs., $2.75.
Size 70x80, weight 5 lbs., $3.
Size 62x87, weight 4½ lbs., $3.50.
Size 70x80, weight 5½ lbs., $3.50.
Size 70x80, weight 5 lbs., $4.
Size 70x80, weight 5½ lbs., $4.50.
Size 68x82, weight 7 lbs., $4.50.
Size 70x80, weight 5½ lbs., $5.
Size 70x80, weight 5½ lbs., $5.50.
Size 70x80, weight 5 lbs., $6.50.
Size 76x82, weight 6 lbs., $6.50.
Size 76x82, weight 6 lbs., $7.50.
Size 70x80, weight 5½ lbs., $7.50.
Size 76x82, weight 6 lbs., $9.50.

Gray blankets:

Size 54x74, weight 2½ lbs., 50 cents.
Size 58x76, weight 4 lbs., 85 cents.
Size 58x76, weight 4½ lbs., $1.25.
Size 64x76, weight 5 lbs., $1.50.
Size 58x78, weight 4 lbs., $2.50.
Size 68x80, weight 5 lbs., $3.
Size 60x78, weight 4½ lbs., $3.50.

Cleaning House.

Hard work or easy work, just as you choose. If you find it hard work, it's because you won't use Pearline. You'd rather waste your time and your strength with that absurd rubbing and scrubbing. Of course it's hard—that's why Pearline was invented, that's why Pearline is a household word. You don't know how easy it can be, until you let Pearline do the work.

Then house-cleaning slips right along. It is over before you know it.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 333 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

Minding the Baby.

Youse betcher life dis ain't no cinch t' hustle here all day,
An' do d' work an' tend d' kid an' have no time to play,
While all d' udder kids is out a-playing 'round d' block,
An' dough me work is finisht, yet I has t' sit an' rock.

Says ma: "Now rock d' cradle, Kitty Ann,
An' look out fer d' baby, Kitty Ann,
Fer he's yer little brudder,
An' youse hasn't got no udder;
Be sure t' mind d' baby, Kitty Ann."

Dey'r playin' ring-a-rounder, an' at hop-scotch I kin tell,
I wonder 'f I took a sneak would he wake up an' yell.
Cheewizz! I'se been a-hustlin' here since almost 8 o'clock,
An' now it's 1, but still I s'pose I'll haf t' sit an' rock.

I wish dere wasn't any kids. D'y ain't no use at all,
Except t' boulder folk and keep dem in all day, an' bawl;
Aw naw, dat's all a bluff! Fer he's d' bes' kid in d' block,
An' dough its radder tough on me, I'll ches' sit still an' rock.

An' so ches' rock d' cradle, Kitty Ann,
An' look out fer d' baby, Kitty Ann,
Fer he's yer little brudder,
An' youse hasn't got no udder,
So ches' youse min' d' baby, Kitty Ann.

The Parson Called Down.—He was a very learned man as well as a shining light in his church, and when he was invited to address the East Cambridge mission he felt that it would be necessary to "talk down" to his congregation. So, after reading the parable of the tares and wheat, he glanced over his spectacles and remarked, in his most gracious manner: "I do not suppose any of you know exactly what a tare is."

Johnny O'Brien, who was in the class on probation, with a shrewd view to the treasures of the Christmas tree, pricked up his ears and rising in his seat answered: "We'se calls it a jag in dis ward!"

A stifled laugh rippled through the class, the reverend gentleman hesitated, and then continued: "To resume my discourse, beloved."

The Usual Result.—Yesterday a gentlemen met a small boy of his acquaintance on the street with his arm in a sling and a rag tied around what he supposed was his thumb.

"Hello," he said, as men do who are on terms with boys, "what's the matter with your thumb?"

"Nothing the matter with my thumb,' replied the boy easily.

"What have you got that rag around it for then?"

"Haven't got that rag around it."

The gentleman thought the boy was guying him.

"Haven't got the rag around it?" he said. "Well, what have you got it round?"

"Round the place where the thumb was."

"Where it was?' repeated in a shocked tone, "what do you mean?'

The boy smiled and winked.

"Fizz, bizz, biff, bang, no thumb," he said sententiously, and the gentleman remembered that the Fourth had recently been celebrated in that town.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

Tea Has Many Names and Prices, And One Origin.

How shocked the frequenters of Delmonico's would be could they be made to realize that the expensive tea they drink is manufactured from the same leaf from which the Bowery poison is made? Yet it is a fact that all teas of every variety of form, color, and taste are manufactured from one and the same leaf; for all tea is a manufactured article.

Right Arm Paralyzed!

Saved from St. Vitus Dance.

"Our daughter, Blanche, now fifteen years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. We feared St. Vitus dance, and tried the best physicians, with no benefit. She has taken three bottles of Dr. Miles' Nervine and has gained 31 pounds. Her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid."

STARTLING G. A. R. STORY.

Captain George H. Davenport, the Popular and Well-known G. A. R. Veteran Relates an Experience. A Leader and Power in Grand Army Circles.

CAPT. GEO. H. DAVENPORT.

Captain George H. Davenport of Bernardston, Mass., is a most popular and widely known man, especially in Grand Army circles. He is pension agent and everybody knows him. He is best known to the whole country through his discovery of "Davenport's Silver Pomade," probably the best article of its kind in the world.

Captain Davenport is a most entertaining speaker, and his relation of the following incident will be interesting to everybody.

"I had been troubled severely for several years with heart disease, and the effects of malarial poison contracted in the army. I was so nervous and weak that I was unable to do any hard work for years.

"I consulted many doctors but have found no good results from them. I finally used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and can say that it has done great things for me.

"I have been helped in the heart trouble more than from any and all other things I ever used. I find that for weakness and nervous excitement it is a great help. For instance, on Memorial Day I addressed the G. A. R. at Northfield, and on the following day at Whateley, I gave an address before their G. A. R. without any apparent fatigue, which I could not have done before I used Dr. Greene's Nervura.

"I have often recommended this wonderful cure for disease to my friends, and shall be happy to answer any further inquiries from anyone."

The experience of the gallant captain is the experience of everybody. All who use this great curer of diseases, the restorer of health and strength, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, report that it invariably makes them well.

The weak, nervous and ailing should try it on the strength of what everybody who has used it says of its wonderful curative powers. It will cure you.

Why waste time in trying uncertain and untried remedies, when here is a physician's prescription, a discovery made by the greatest living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. If you take this medicine you can consider yourself under Dr. Greene's direct professional care, and you can consult him or write to him about your case, freely and without charge. This is a guarantee that this remedy will cure, possessed by no other remedy in the world.

October.

This is the golden season of the year!
In large profusion round appear
The varied products of the ground;
And plenteous stores
Enrich the thrifty farmer's floors,
Crammed through the windows and the doors.

The earth, exhausted, sinks
Into a dreamy languor and repose!
The flower no longer grows
'Mid stalwart grasses by the riverbrinks.
The trees stand musing on the hill,
And like a sluggard creeps the drowsy rill.
Thou mighty matron sleep!
We would not have thee raise thy weary head
Till winter's driving tempests sweep
And drift a snowy mantle o'er thy bed.
Sleep on, and take thy rest!
For teeming nations dwell upon thy breast,
And look to thee for next year's daily bread.

* * * * * * *

Along the winding side-hill road,
By choking, crowding oxen drawn,
Rolls creaking down the huge potato load
And creeps along the shaven lawn.
On either hand
The yellow pumpkins lie,
Sprinkled about the half-denuded land,
Suggestive of delicious pie,
Whose charms a home-bred, hungry soul cannot withstand.

The cabined schoolboy, on uneasy seat,
By slow degrees
Prepares his dreary lesson to repeat;
While through the glass he sees
How gorgeous are the forest trees,
With soldier plumes all red and bright,
And crimson ensigns on the air;
And dreams with mad delight,
How nimble squirrels frolic there;
Half thinks he hears the walnuts on the leaves
Let go their hold,
Like lamps of gold,
And for the woody mazes all day grieves.

ANIMALS THAT LOVE MUSIC.

A writer in Chamber's Journal has something interesting to say concerning the musical sense in animals. Her father, she says, lived on a model farm, and there she detected the singular influence of music on various animals. There was a beautiful horse, the pride and delight of us all; but like many others he had an unconquerable dislike to be caught. My father had so trained him to obedience that he gave very little trouble, a whistle and a wave of the hand and Robert would come to be saddled. But if left to our old gardner Willy, he would lead him a chase, generally ending in a defeat. One very hot summer day I was sitting at work in the garden, when Willy appeared streaming with perspiration.

"What is the matter, Willy?"

"Matter enough, Miss. There's that Robert, the uncanny beast; he won't be caught, all I can do or say. I've given him corn and one of the best pears off the tree; but he's too deep for me; he snatched the pear, kicked up his heels, and off he is, laughing at me at the bottom of the meadow."

I was very sorry for the old man; but I do not clearly see how to catch the delinquent. I could well believe he was laughing at our old friend, for he was a curious animal.

"Well, Willy, what will I do? He won't let me catch him, you know."

"Ay, but, miss, if you will only just go in and begin a toon on the peanner, cook says he will come up to the fence and harken to you, for he is always a-doing that; and may be I can slip behind and cotch him."

I went in at once, not expecting my stratagem to succeed. But in a few minutes the saucy creature was standing quietly listening while I played "Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled." The halter was soon round his neck, and he went away to be harnessed, quite happy and contented.

There was a great peculiarity about his taste for music. He never would stay to listen to a plaintive song. I soon observed this. If I played "Scots wha hae," he would listen, well pleased. If I changed the measure and expression, playing the same air plaintively, as, for instance, in the "Land o' the Leal," he would toss his head and walk away, as if to say, "That is no sort of music." Changing to something martial, he would return and listen to me.

In this respect he entirely differed from a beautiful cow we had. She had an awful temper. Old Willy used to say, "She is the most contrariest beast under the sun." If she were in one of her ill-humors it was with the greatest difficulty she could be milked. She never would go with the other cows at milking time. Nancy be milked with them!—that was a thing not to be thought of. She liked the cook; and when not too busy cook would manage Miss Nancy. But if she were not very careful up would go Miss Nancy's foot, and over would go the milk-pail and its precious contents. When the cook milked her it was always close to the fence, near the drawing room. If I were playing she would stand perfectly still, yielding her milk without any trouble, and would remain until I ceased. As long as I played plaintive music—"The Land o' the Leal," "Home, Sweet Home," "Robin Adair," any sweet, tender air, she seemed entranced. I have tried her, and changed to martial music, whereupon she invariably walked away.

I was sitting in the drawing-room one evening, singing to mamma. It was a double room, with folding-doors. She was in one where there was a lamp. In my room, which was unlighted, the window was open, and close to the window was a stand for music. When I ceased playing I heard a peculiar sound, and was conscious there was something in the room. I called for a light. There, sitting on the stand was a large white owl. He looked far less surprised than we did. In a minute or two he stepped quietly out of the window and flew away. After this we did not leave the lower sash open; but the owl still came and sat upon the stone outside, listening.

DON'T LAUGH AT YOUR DOG.

An extremely human characteristic of our canine friends is shown in their susceptibility to ridicule. Faint traces of this quality are to be found in monkeys, and perhaps even in the more intelligent horses, but nowhere else save in man, and hardly there, except in the more sensitive natures, do we find contempt, expressed in laughter of the kind which conveys that emotion, so keenly and painfully appreciated. With those dogs which are endowed with a large human quality, such as our various breeds of hounds, it is possible by laughing in their faces not only to quell their rage, but to drive them to a distance. They seem in a way to be put to shame, and at the same time hopelessly puzzled as to the nature of their predicament. In this connection we may note the very human feature that after you have cowed a dog by insistent laughter you can never hope to make friends with him.—Professor N. S. Shaler, in Scribner's.

It May Do as Much for You.

Mr. Fred Miller, of Irving, Ill., writes that he had a Severe Kidney trouble for many years, with severe pains in his back and also that his bladder was affected. He tried many so called Kidney cures but without any good result. About a year ago he began use of Electric Bitters and found relief at once. Electric Bitters are especially adapted to cure all Kidney and Liver troubles and often gives almost instant relief. One trial will prove our statement. Price only 50c for large bottle. J. POTT'S GENEROUS GIFT.

George M. Pullman's great diversion is a game of poker. He loves poker.

He was playing one Saturday night, and so deep was he in the game—so deeply interested, of course—that Sunday morning came before anybody knew it, and caught them in the middle of the jack pot.

"Look here," said some one at the table, "this is setting a mighty bad example to the servants."

"I'll tell you what," answered Pullman, "we'll play out this pot and whoever wins it must send it to his church."

When it came to a show down Pullman won. Next morning he sent the money, some $300 or $400, to his pastor in a note that begged the reverend gentleman to apply the money to the church's needs, and was signed "J. Pott." From the pulpit that day the minister informed his congregation of the generosity of J. Pott, who, he much regretted to say, he did not know.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Cholly (in his sophomore year). "What sport should you suppose a fellow like me would go in for, Miss Manson—boating—or—football—or——" Miss Manson (eyeing him carefully). "I thing you'd probably go in strong for parlor croquet.'"—Chicago Record.

It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

PALE, THIN, EMACIATED PEOPLE.
The country is full of them. They do not know what it is to feel well like other folks. Medicines of all kinds have been tried without good results. Cod Liver Oil and the preparations of Malt have all failed. What is the reason? These emaciated people cannot digest starchy foods. The fat of the body is produced with bread, potatoes, and other starchy food. If they will eat food that is artificially digested, they will grow fat, strong, plump and robust. They will commence gaining flesh at once. This Flesh Forming Food is called Paskola. You can buy it at any drug store. Send your name to The Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade St., New York, and get their interesting pamphlet.

My Daughter.

When first her hands were held to me,
My bosom swelled with manly glee,
My little one with form so wee,
My daughter.

But that was many years ago;
She's getting big, is little Clo—
In fact, she's looking for a beau,
My daughter.

Her hands to me she holds out still,
But now, alas! it is to fill
With many a crisp five-dollar bill,
My daughter.

So now I do not feel that glee
When she holds out her hands to me,
For, every time, I've got to fee
My daughter.

BROTHER SAM'S DAUGHTER.

"Twelve o'clock, and the washing ain't out yet!" said Nancy Norton with a glance at the clock. "But I've had such a sight o' setbacks! I'll have to wait a spell now till the hired men have had their dinner."

She blew the horn at the back door, then made all haste to set the plentiful, if plain, meal on the table, which feat she had barely accomplished before Uncle Peter and three stalwart helpers appeared on the scene.

"Nancy does make A number one pies!" said Hiram Jenifer, reaching for a second slice.

"I don't mind if I drink another cup o' coffee, observed Noah Johnson, "with plenty of sugar, Nancy, please."

While Hezekiah Hopper made a plunge at the butter with his own knife, remarking, sotto voice: "that to his taste there wa'nt no butter like June butter, an' it didn't come but once a year!"

"No hot bread," said Uncle Peter with a comprehensive glance around the board, "nor riz biscuit—eh, Nancy?"

"I couldn't manage it to-day," said Nancy, with a conscience-stricken look.

"With the washin' and all"—

"Nancy's yesterday's bread's good enough for me!" observed Hiram philosophically.

"For my part," said Uncle Peter, "I don't see how these women folks contrive to put in the time, puttering around all day, a-doin' next to nothin'."

"Oh, now, that ain't fair!" spoke up Noah Johnson, good naturedly. "'Taint no joke to cook an' wash an' iron for four men."

The color had risen in two round spots to Nancy's cheeks; a quick retort hovered on her lips, when Uncle Peter interrupted the unspoken words.

"Oh, by the way," said he, I'd most forgotten to say anything about it, but brother Sam's girl's to be here to-day."

"Brother Sam's girl?"

"Why, yes—your cousin Nannie, from Bridgeport—your Uncle Sam'wel's gal, that's to teach the district school here. Sam, he was inquirin' round for a place, an' I calculated we could board her here, so I told him to send her on. He's willing to pay five dollars a week, and that counts up."

Nancy looked at her uncle with startled eyes.

"But there ain't no room for her to sleep in," said she.

"She can have your room, and you can take the little corner chamber in the garret. One person more or less in the family don't make no difference, and five dollars is five dollars. Have some more of the dried peach sass, Johnson?"

Nancy said not a word.

Of what avail was it to remind Uncle Peter that the little garret chamber was cold in winter and hot in summer, that the roof leaked and the rats played high carnival there?"

She only helped Hiram Jenifer to a cucumber pickle, and replenished the coffee pot for the third time.

"There's a gal, now—Brother Sam's darter, reflectively observed Mr. Norton, as he sprinkled pepper and vinegar over his summer beets—"as is worth her salt. Airn-in' twenty dollars a month at teachin'. If Nancy could make money like that! But Nancy hadn't had no faculty!"

"I never had a chance!' cried Nancy, with rising color and tear-brimmed eyes.

"I've been kept hard at work since I was a child, and—and"—

"There, there, don't get excited!" said Uncle Peter, waving his hand in a patronizing manner. "Gals is queer creturs. You can't so much as speak to 'em but they fly off at a tangent. Get things ready for Sam's gal, that's all I ask of you—and mind you have some fried chickens for supper. Hi Jenifer hasn't had a bite of fried chicken since he's been here. And look arter the young goslins that's comin' outen the shell down to the barn—I suspicion ther's a weasel abroad somewheres—and mind the calves don't get into the corn. I reely must mend that gate pin some o' these days. Come, boys, if you are sure you can't worry down no more vittles"—

It was not until the four men had shuffled off to the barnyard to look after Uncle Peter's latest investment in a Durham cow, ere they returned to the hayfield, that Nancy sank wearily down into a patch-cushioned rocker and burst into tears.

"I'm worked harder'n any slave," said she, "and don't never have no chance to go nowhere nor see nothin, and yet Uncle Peter thinks I ain't worth my keep."

"Why, what's the matter, Nancy? You're Nancy Norton, aren't you?"

A sweet cheery voice sounded on her ear—a light hand touched her shoulder.

Nancy jumped to her feet.

"Are you Uncle Sam's daughter?" she cried.

"Why, of course I am! Nancy Norton, just like yourself. Named after our dear old grandmother—only they call me Nannie."

A smoldering feeling of resentment had possessed Nancy's heart toward this unknown relation; but it was all dispersed now in the light of those clear hazel eyes—the sunshine of that smile.

In a second she knew that she should like her new cousin.

"Nothing is the matter," said she, "except that the washin' is behind to-day, and I'm clean discouraged and tired out."

"Where's the girl?"

"I'm the girl!" Nancy answered.

"Then I'll be girl too," Nannie laughed out, taking off her gloves and unfastening her piquant little cape. "You go and hang out the clothes and I'll see about clearing off this table. Because I'm to board here father says, and you and I are to be great friends."

Nancy looked wistfully at her.

"Kiss me, won't you," said she.

"Oh, yes, I'd so like to be friends with you! I haven't had no girl friends."

And Nannie kissed her with a kiss that carried a whole heart full of love with it.

The three hired men were overcome with embarassment, when, on arriving in time for the fried chicken and hot waffles that evening, they found themselves confronted with such a daintily dressed young lady.

Even Uncle Peter himself was momentarily abashed at the style and beauty of brother Sam's daughter.

"The new deestrict school ma'am," whispered Hiram Jenifer to Noah Johnson.

"Earns twenty dollars a month," uttered Hezekiah Hopper. "Twenty dollars!"

"Dresses up like a fashion plate!" inwardly reflected Johnson. "Proper nice looking, though."

Nannie would not hear of banishing Nancy to the garret chamber.

"Why can't we share the same room together?" she coaxed. "I should like a companion, and there's plenty of room."

Uncle Peter evinced ostentatious approval of his new niece, and it required all Nancy's hearty affection for the new comer to preserve her from the stings of jealousy.

"I don't see," said Uncle Peter, "why Nancy can't earn money like you do."

"How much do you pay her?" asked Nannie, lifting her eyes to his face.

"Me? Pay Nancy? Why, her board an' clothes, to be sure. It's all she's worth?"

"And what does she do?"

"Just odd turns around the house. She did pester me for an allowance once, but I soon laid it down to her that I wan't goin' to hev no such nonsense."

"Oh!" said Nannie.

Never in her life had Nancy Norton had a genuine sympathetic woman friend before, and it was an indescribable relief to pour out her troubles in Nannie's ear.

"It's a shame!" cried warm-hearted Nannie. "Why, you do the work of three women in this house. You rise early and lie down late; you have no recreations, no holidays, and you work harder than ever, because Uncle Peter likes to invite people here for their noonings to see how nice he has things. Oh, you needn't think I am blind! You are pale and thin because you are overworked. You don't like to go anywhere, because Uncle Peter won't give you any new clothes until you have worn out Aunt Hepsy's old wardrobe. It's an imposition, that's what it is, and I wouldn't submit to it if I were you."

"But," sighed Nancy, "what can I do?"

"Tell him once again how matters stand!" cried Nannie, her lovely eyes flashing. "Insist upon fair wages for fair work."

Thus instigated, Nancy made her plea, but Uncle Peter's brow grew dark.

"I don't want to hear no such nonsense as this," he roared. "Wages! Ain't you got your home, and board and clothes? What else d'ye want? Why, I never heard such talk in my life!"

"Is it yes or no?" persisted Nancy.

"It's no-o-o!" thundered Uncle Peter.

That same evening Nannie incidentally alluded to the fact that they would all rise betimes the next morning, for she was going to give them their breakfast, and hadn't much time before school hours began.

"Why, where's Nancy?" asked Hiram.

"Oh, don't you know? She's gone."

Uncle Peter dropped the gate pin he was whittling; Hiram let the two-days-old copy of the Wakefield Eagle slip to the floor; Noah stared with wide open mouth.

"She wants to make a living for herself," serenely added Nannie—"to earn a little money. Every girl wants that, you know."

"Humph!" growled Uncle Peter. "I'd like to see her make money! Why she never had no more gumption than a katydid! She'll be back quick enough, you'll find."

"But in the meantime," said Nannie, coolly, you must look around for some one to fill her place, for, as you can easily imagine, I have got my hands full."

"I guess that's easily done," said Uncle Peter, beginning to whittle afresh.

But to his infinite amazement, it was not so easy a task as he had fancied, and after many vain efforts and stinging disappointments, he found himself with two wasteful, complaining, inefficient hired girls in possession, for every one had resolutely refused to do the work alone.

"It was too much," they averred, "for one."

"It'll ruin me—it'll clean ruin me!" groaned Uncle Peter, wringing his hands.

"Ten dollars a month for one and eight for t'other—and every Thursday afternoon and every Sunday evening out! And look at them half slices o' bread in the pig's pail, and my best towels, not three years old, took for cleanin' cloths, and a broom a week stumped through; an' they don't wash unless I get 'em a new patent wringer, and the fat scraps all throwed away, an' nothin' half took care of! Don't you know any one I could get, Nannie, as would look arter things as Nancy used to do? I declare to goodness I can't live so!"

Nannie knit her brows and reflected.

"There's a young woman working for father," said she—"a capital housekeeper and the best economist in the world—at least, so he says. And since my married sister is coming back from Nebraska next week, he may be able to dispense with her. But she has fifteen dollars a month."

"It's wuth it—its wuth it!" breathlessly cried Uncle Peter. I'll go to Bridgeport and see brother Sam at once and secure her. This hired gal business will be the death of me."

Brother Sam was sitting on his porch reading the newspaper, as Mr. Norton drove up.

"Yes," said he, "she's a smart gal. The best gal I ever had. Thorough going New Englander. P'raps you may be able to get her—though I doubt if she'll come to you for fifteen dollars a month."

"I'll make it eighteen," gasped Uncle Peter, "since you say she's a New Englander."

"Well you can try," said Brother Sam. "Here she is!"

He flung open the door of the kitchen, and there making a blackberry shortcake at the whitely scoured table, stood—his own niece, Nancy Norton!

"Why—it's—Nancy," cried he.

"Yes," nodded Brother Sam, "Nancy it is! The best, smartest creetur that ever stepped, and worth her weight in gold."

Uncle Peter swallowed something like a lump in his throat.

"Nancy," said he, "will you come back"—here he swallowed a second lump—"to me for eighteen dollars a month? For I do verily b'lieve you will earn it."

Nancy went up to him and kissed him.

"Yes, Uncle Peter," said she, I'll come back."

For the old man had learned a lesson, and his teachers had been Nancy Norton and Brother Sam's daughter.—Saturday Night.

REMEMBER AT DINNER THAT

Rapid eating is slow suicide.
Plenty of time should be taken.
Fish and oysters are easily digested.
An hour or two of rest should be taken after the meal.
Mere gratification of the appetite is very likely to shorten life.
Dinner should be of a lighter nature in summer than in winter.
It is not good to dine when in a state of mental or physical weariness.
A quart of wheat contains more nutriment than a bushel of cucumbers.
There is a happy mean between eating everything and being squeamish.
Two pounds of potatoes contain as much nutriment as thirteen pounds of turnips.
Light soups, light desserts, and light meats should have the preference in warm weather.
Abuse of the stomach at dinner will be repaid sooner or later by that punishment which comes to the glutton.
Vegetables and fruits are to be used most generously at that season of the year in which they naturally mature.
Beginning the dinner with soup is the very best way to get the whole system in condition for assimilating a hearty meal.—Good Housekeeping.

The Happiest Heart.

Who drives the horses of the sun
Shall lord it but a day;
Better the lowly deed were done,
And kept, the humble way.

The rust will find the sword of fame;
The dust will hide the crown;
Ay! none can nail so high his name
Time will not tear it down.

The happiest heart that ever beat
Was in some quiet breast
That found the common daylight sweet,
And left to Heaven the rest.

MARY DRAKE'S TEMPERANCE BOWER.

"Confound this strike, it's just my luck, was the not very gentle expostulation of John Drake, as he threw the lines to his hired man upon his return from town.

"Why, what is it now, John?" asked his modest little wife.

"Why, this miserable strike prevents my getting the beer that the harvesters will expect when they come on Thursday, and I shall not be able to get half the work out of them now that I should," and John sat down on a porch chair in not a happy mood.

Mary Drake said not a word; but she could not sympathize with him, and she dared not express her own satisfaction. She had three years before tried to urge him not to provide the beer, as was his custom, but his outburst of reprimand wounded her sensitive nature and taught her that she must wield her influence strategically.

John Drake was one of the most prosperous farmers out of the city of P., in southern Illinois. His large, white farmhouse and red barns were situated on a little knoll, and could be seen for miles around. He was known as a dominant man, but every one admired his thrift and the business ability he manifested in the management of his farm.

Five years before his first wife had died, and the following summer he had married Mary Mandell, the district school teacher, thinking he saw in her just the guide his motherless children needed. She was an orphan with no special ties, and was rather won by the rugged virtues of Mr. Drake. She was a woman of twenty-nine years, and thought there must be much to admire under John's plain exterior. He kept his four children, two girls—nearly grown now—and twin boys, younger, at school in the city of P., for John said he should give his children the advantages he had learned in the saddest way to value—by the want of them.

Mary could not comfort him for the loss of the beer, but she commenced to revolve in her mind some plan for satisfying the thirst of the harvesters. She thought long and late that night. The next morning she said "John, I will serve hot coffee to the men all day to-morrow, if you like, and think they will enjoy it."

"All right," said Mr. Drake, "If you want to, but I doubt their caring much for it."

After he had gone to the field she called the girls in and revealed her plan. They were very fond of her, and always in sympathy with anything she wanted to undertake, and ordering their driving horse which Mr. Drake called "the ladies pony," they hurriedly dressed and were soon on their way to town to purchase an oil stove. They were back by dinner time and all the afternoon were busy, with the help of the boys, gathering daisies and small branches with which to make a bower under a great oak tree at the edge of the field.

"We will put our daisies in water over night," said Mary, "that they may be fresh to-morrow, for we must have a great deal of 'white ribbon' color, you know, for just between ourselves this is a temperance booth that we are enabled to set up here, thanks to the strike."

It was a very busy day, and between directing and helping in the house and the new bower, she was tired that night; but her heart was most light that she at last had an opportunity to carry out some plan to supplant the beer.

The next morning she was up bright and early; after seeing that things were well in progress for dinner she went to the field, and with the children's help served coffee until eleven o'clock, carrying it to the mowers boiling hot from the little stove. The cream was delicious as only country cream can be, and the men seemed wholly satisfied. They had a sumptuous dinner in the farmhouse dining room at noon, and at half-past one Mary was at her post again out of doors ready to serve coffee. She was delighted to hear one of the men say, "Well, I believe this is the best thing I ever drank in a harvest field; it may be because it's hot."

"I believe so too," responded another, "it is kinder stayin' to a man's stomach."

That night as they were filing out from supper, a small man who was known to love his beer, said: "Mrs. Drake, I think that's the best coffee I ever tasted. It keeps a feller satisfied, same's food."

"We shall be anxious for harvest next year, so that we can have some more of Mrs. Drake's good coffee," chimed in "Big Dick," the great roisterer of the neighborhood, and center of every fight.

Mary smiled a quiet "thank you" and "good night," but she felt a tumult of joy that her coffee booth had given such satisfaction. The children had retired and Mr. and Mrs. Drake were sitting on the porch after their busy day, enjoying the quiet country scene, bathed in moonlight, and the gratification of a successful day for the mowing.

Mr. Drake said: "Mary, I never thought daisies were pretty until to-day. They have been such a pest [illegible] but in your bower they looked very d[illegible] I think I'll let that pesky daisy field alone. The men did more work to-day than ever before in one day. I wonder if your coffee and cream don't keep them kinder built up like so that they can keep steady? I think I'll give the beer a go-by next year an' sorter test the two."

And he did, and never again furnished beer in haying or harvest time. And when the next election day came round he said to Mary, "I can't see any sort o' good these saloons are doing. I think I'll test your vote, wife, as well as your coffee."—Florence Higginson Chicago, Ill.

THE BEST CLAIM TO THE BED.—One night a judge, a military officer, and a minister, all applied for a night's lodging at an inn, where there was but one spare bed, and the landlord was called upon to decide which had the best claim out of the three.

"I have lain fifteen years in the garrison at A—," said the officer.

"I have sat as judge twenty years at R—," said the judge.

"With your leave, gentlemen, I have stood for twenty-five years in the ministry at M—," said the minister.

"That settles all disputes," said the landlord. "You, Mr. Captain, have lain fifteen years; you, Mr. Judge, have sat twenty years, while this old gentleman has been standing for the last twenty-five years, so he certainly has the best claim to the bed."—The Advance.

PALMER NEWS.

A PRECIOUS GANG OF RASCALS

Who Would Rather Steal than Work, but Finally Came to Grief.

For some time the farmers living along the line between the towns of Holland and Wales have been aware that their crops were being harvested by some one other than themselves. Corn and potatoes would disappear from the fields, sometimes 20 bushels in a night, and it was hardly thought possible for wild animals to accomplish so much in so short a time. An examination of the various premises raided revealed certain peculiar signs and tracks, the latter all leading toward a certain house. A search warrant was procured and Wednesday morning was served by Deputy Sheriff Studley. He arrived at the rendezvous about 7 o'clock in the morning, where he was met by the farmers who had suffered most, and they proceeded to the house of Peter Dion, who carries on his father's farm on shares. Peter was found and told the object of the visit. He protested his innocence and claimed that he too had suffered from the thieves, inviting the officers to search the premises. This they did and found two lots of corn in separate buildings, which Peter claimed had all been raised on the place and represented his own and his father's shares. But as some of it corresponded with samples of the kind of corn stolen from one of the farmers his story seemed a little fishy. On a haymow under a lot of hay was also found some corn. This Peter claimed was raised by him, but that in a quarrel with his brother about the corn fed the brother's horse this had been set one side for that purpose. This story was even more fishy than the other, and it was decided to arrest all four of the brothers. When the party assembled it was learned that last Saturday a man was seen to drive from the Dion place with a number of well-filled sacks in his wagon. This man was Napoleon Porter of Spencer, a vegetable peddler, and it was decided that he might know something of the matter, so handcuffing the Dions together Sheriff Studley started for Fiskdale, where Porter does business. He was not found and the officer took his prisoners to Palmer. He then got a warrant for Porter and went to Fiskdale for him, returning with him that evening. Porter has a hard reputation, is lame and walks on the toes of one foot with the aid of a cane, and tracks of this kind were found in the fields from which the property was stolen. A hearing in the matter of the search warrant was held yesterday, and the corn found was declared to be the property of G. L. Agard and ordered returned to him. The cases of Porter and Edward Dion for the theft of the stuff were continued to this morning, and the cases of Peter, Cyprian and Napoleon Dion were continued until the 30th, Peter furnishing $300 bail, Cyprian and Napoleon $100 each. The principal losers have been H. A. McFarland of Wales, G. L. Agard & Son of Brimfield, and Livingston Webber of Hollard, and it is expected that other charges will be brought against the suspected parties.

A Vermont Wedding of Interest to Palmer People.

The following account of the wedding of Miss Alice, daughter of J. S. Holden, formerly of Palmer, which took place at Bennington, Vt., on the 9th inst., will be of interest to many Palmer people:

George Hamilton Bickford of New York, and Alice Almira, eldest daughter of John S. Holden, of the firm of Holden, Leonard & Co., were married Tuesday evening. The ceremony took place in the Second Congregational church at 7 o'clock. The front of the platform was quite prettily decorated with ferns and plants. The Rev. Charles R. Seymour, pastor of the church, officiated.

Promptly at 7 o clock, the attendants marched down one aisle of the church to the vestibule, met the bride and her father, and escorted them to the pulpit platform, where the groom and his best man were in waiting. The procession was led by Eliza and Hildred Hart, daughters of E. E. Hart of Bennington.

The bride was attired in an ivory satin gown, en train, trimmed with duchess lace, the veil being held by a wreath of orange blossoms. The gift from the groom to the bride was a marquise ring with diamond encircled by pearls. The maid of honor was Lulu J. Holden, a sister of the bride. The bridesmaids were Florence Holden, a sister; Carrie B. Davis of Philadelphia; Alice Johnson of Mansfield Centre, Ct.; Bertha Cushing of Jamaica Plain, Mass.; Alice Shortle of Provincetown, Mass.; Rose Hall of South Wellingtown, Mass.; Flora Bardwell of Cambridge, Mass. These were all gowned in white dotted Swiss muslin, and carried pink carnations. Their favors from the bride were evening party fans of unique design. The best man was Herbert Bickford, brother of the groom. The ushers were Arthur J. Holden, brother of the bride; Alonzo Atkinson of Jersey City, N. J.; Frederick Floy of Elizabeth, N. J.; Lineus Lafetra of Washington; Thomas B. Lalor of Worcester, Mass.; Collins Graves of Bennington. Their gifts from the groom were gold scarf pins in the form of a wishbone, set with pearls. Among those who occupied seats in the church, reserved for the family and especial friends, was the Young Women's Club of which the bride was one of the founders, and always an active member. Their wedding gift was a handsome Roger's group of statuary. The walk from the pavement to the church door was carpeted, and only the centre doors were opened for the admission of guests. Following the ceremony was a reception at the home of the bride, at which only relatives and immediate friends were present.

One room at the house was given up for the display of the presents, which were many, elaborate and costly. Among them the most important was a deed of the new house on Dewey avenue, now nearly completed, which, with a handsome seal skin cloak, was from the bride's father. C. W. Leonard and wife of Newtonville gave a solid silver dinner and tea set; Mrs. Eldredge, a handsome inlaid mahogany table; the class of the bride at Wellesley College, silver oyster forks; Ginn & Co., New York, an inlaid French clock; Amy Wood, Peru, S. A., a painting. The bridal couple left for Hoosick Falls, N. Y., by team, at 9.30 o'clock, where they were to take the Fitchburg sleeper. After the wedding trip they will reside here, and until the new residence is completed will make their home with the bride's parents.

The New Business and Social Club's Organization.

About 40 of those who had signed the agreement to form a business and social club met at the court room Tuesday evening to perfect the organization. H. W. McGregory called the meeting to order and was chosen temporary chairman, A. E. Fitch being made temporary secretary. The objects of the club were outlined by the chairman, who then read the proposed constitution and by-laws, which were unanimously adopted. It was voted to proceed to the election of officers, with this result: President, C. B. Fiske; vice presidents, C. E. Fish and E. G. Hastings; secretary, H. W. McGregory; treasurer, Rufus Flynt; trustees, in addition to the president, secretary and treasurer, C. E. Fuller, C. H. Hobbs, C. E. Getchell, G. M. Atkins; committee on membership, in addition to the secretary, C. F. Grosvenor, J. F. Holbrook, C. K. Gamwell, N. W. Chandler, Dr. G. H. Wilkins and W. E. Stone. It was voted to become incorporated, and the officers, were instructed to take the steps necessary to that end. It was reported that the rooms which have been in preparation for the club in Holden's new block would be ready in about a month, and the trustees and vice presidents were made a committee on rooms and furnishings, with power to fit up the apartments as they saw fit. It is expected that the club will start off with an active membership of about 75, and while the rooms will be open to members at all times the house rules will be such as will work for the best good of all. No intoxicating liquors are to be allowed in the rooms, all games for stakes of any kind are prohibited, and no games of any kind are to be allowed after 12 o'clock Saturday night until Monday morning. The name of nearly every business man in the place is affixed to the original agreement to form the club, which will be called the Palmer Business and Social Club.

C. L. Holden of Bondsville the Democratic Nominee for Representative.

The Democrats of the Tenth Hampden representative district held their convention in the district court room Tuesday afternoon. F. E. Cook of Brimfield was chosen as presiding officer, and made a long speech on the tariff on taking the chair; H. C. Strong of Palmer was secretary. As there were only a small portion of the delegates present it was voted that all Democrats in the room be considered delegates, and a count showed a possible eight votes, including that of the chairman. The name of Charles L. Holden of Bondsville was presented by F. A. Royce of Palmer, and he was nominated by acclamation. The district committee chosen consisted of F. E. Cook of Brimfield, Wesley Alden of Ludlow, William Lilly of Holland, J. P. Gallegher and J. F. Foley of Palmer.

Miss Hannah Dodge of Willimantic is the guest of Mrs. L. E. Chandler.

Mrs. J. W. Bray and children of Florence are guests of Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Bray.

Washington Council, R. and S. M., will hold its annual meeting next Monday evening.

Chas. N. Blake & Co. will open their shoe store in Holden's block a week from to-morrow.

J. A. Palmer has bought the place known as the Justus Hitchcock farm, on Baptist Hill.

G. E. Buck is taking a vacation of a week in Connecticut, and will spend the time gunning.

Mahlon Fosket of Belchertown has taken a position in the Boston and Albany freight house.

Mrs. Mary Langevin of Three Rivers was adjudged insane this morning and sent to Northampton.

The registrars of voters have added five names to the voting list in precinct A, and three in precinct C.

Mrs. Hancy Burr has moved to C. W. Johnson's house on the corner of Thorndike street and Foster avenue.

Rufus Flynt has been in the Adirondacks this week on a business and pleasure trip, but will return to-morrow.

Miss Cook has commenced her kindergarten at Three Rivers, and the session here is now held in the afternoon.

Ernest L., son of Nelson Whiton of Palmer, was married Monday afternoon to Miss Annie Marian Gates of New London, at that city.

T. W. Kenefick and H. C. Strong have been chosen members of the Democratic senatorial committee for the first Hampden district.

H. N. Sager & Co. of Ayer are moving their stock into the store in the Nassowanno block, and expect to be open for business to-morrow.

Miss Belle Fisk is taking a vacation from duty in the office of the Postal Telegraph Co., and Miss Effie Sibley of Warren is the operator during her absence.

C. A. Royce is building a greenhouse on his recently-purchased property on Maple street, and will provide cut flowers and potted plants for the retail trade.

Thomas W. Kenefick has been appointed assignee in the insolvency case of F. F. Fillmore, recently of Palmer. The next hearing in the case will be November 9th.

W. S. Tricket, who has been employed in the bicycle department of E. A. Buck & Co. during the summer, has gone to Three Rivers, where he has a position in the mill.

A number of the Masonic fraternity went to Monson Tuesday evening to pay a return visit to Daysprings lodge of that place, the occasion being the visit of the district deputy.

George Lee, a painter, was thrown from a wagon on Walnut street Tuesday and was at first thought to be dead, but proved to be only stunned and sustained no serious injuries.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins, L. H. Gager and J. B. Shaw of the Congregational church attended the annual conference of Congregational churches of this section at Westfield Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Hampden county convention of King's Daughters and Sons will be held in the State street Methodist church in Springfield next Wednesday afternoon and evening, the evening session being open to the public.

Andrew Pinney has made the public library a valuable present in the shape of the new atlas of Hampden county, which will be highly appreciated by all who have occasion to consult a work of that kind.

The towns and cities of the county have paid their county tax to the county treasurer. Palmer paid $3346, Brimfield $567, Hampden $510, Holland $113, Ludlow $1106, Monson $2581, Wales $369, Wilbraham $1021.

The officials of the Boston and Albany road passed west Tuesday in Dudley's dynograph car on a tour of inspection. Today they came down the Ware River, road and then went east on the main line to Boston.

In spite of the frost which ruined the fruit crop in some sections, and the dry summer, apples seem to be plentiful this fall, and the fruit is as fine as could be desired. Choice apples can be had for $1.50 a barrel delivered at your door.

The supper and social given by the Ladies' Union of St. Paul's church Wednesday evening was well attended. At a business meeting all arrangements were made for the harvest festival to be held Thursday evening, November first.

F. O. Munger, Dr. Ellery, J. M. Allen and Thomas Blanchard went on a coon hunt to State Line Tuesday night and captured two coons weighing about 10 pounds each. The party had a dinner Wednesday with Mr. Munger at his house.

Mr. Hamilton, who recently bought Thomas Blanchard's coal business, has leased the building between the Cross block and the store of E. Goodes on Main street, and has his office there. He will also keep a stock of grain and baled hay.

Robert W. McGregor of Bondsville, who had not drank before for four years and had forgotten just what the effect would be on him, was before the district court Tuesday for experimenting too much on the day before, and paid $5 for his experiment.

There was a pleasant whist party at the New Weeks House last evening, at which the first prizes, a handkerchief and tie, were won by Miss Lena Warriner and E. P. Peck, and the booby prizes, a beet and a bottle of ketchup, went to Miss Pierce and Mr. Wetmore.

Chestnuts are very plentiful this fall, and searchers after the nuts usually return home with good supplies. Many nutting parties have been out during the week, and the winds of the past few days have brought the nuts out of the burrs so that large quantities have been gathered.

Governor Greenhalge, accompanied by the lieutenant governor and a large portion of the staff, came to Palmer on the 9.42 train yesterday morning, and with the board of charities, the trustees and the auxiliary board paid a visit to the state primary school, the governor and party returning to Boston at 1.50 p. m.

The selectmen have this week been viewing the boundary marks between this town and the town of Monson, all bounds having to be viewed once in five years in order to comply with the law. One was found broken off, a stone post east of the village at the corner of the towns of Palmer, Monson and Brimfield. Next Monday the bounds between Palmer and Brimfield will be gone over.

The Central Massachusetts Electric Co. started the street lights at Warren for the first time Wednesday night from their plant at Blanchardville, and the working was very satisfactory. The company has the steam connections completed, and can now use both steam and water, or either alone. The water wheel can be started and then the steam coupled on, or the engine can be started first and then the wheel coupled on, as desired.

Merchants who do any trust business run many chances of getting swindled unless they are extremely sharp and watchful, and even then will get imposed upon more or less, as in the case of a shoe dealer who was asked by a woman a few days ago to let her take a pair of shoes home for her husband to try on, promising to bring back the money or the shoes the next morning. The dealer gave her a pair, and that night the couple shipped all their household goods to Vermont and followed on the night train, the man wearing the shoes, which evidently were a good fit.

C. A. Brown was kicked by his horse last Saturday evening, and sustained painful though not serious injuries. With his wife he had driven to Douglas to spend the Sabbath, reaching that place in a rain. After taking the horse from the carriage into the barn Mr. Brown approached without speaking to throw a blanket over him, when the horse kicked. One hoof hit him in the chest and the other hit his right elbow a glancing blow. Fortunately Mr. Brown was close to the horse and did not get the full force of the stroke; had he been a little futher away the results might have been serious.

The Quaboag Literary Circle met in the reference room of the library building Friday evening and Mrs. M. S. Lawson read a paper on "America's Place in Geology." On account of the time of meeting conflicting with other organizations the next meeting will be held Friday evening, Nov. 2d, and then on alternate Friday evenings. The programme for the next meeting is: Reading from the works of Dr. Holmes, Miss Ethel Ely; selections of the round table, Mrs. H. C. Strong; essay, "Life and Works of Dr. O. W. Holmes," Mrs. Louisa M. Burleigh. A cordial invitation is extended to those not members to be present at the next and subsequent meetings.

R. G. McIntire of Brimfield had his leg broken midway between the ankle and knee last Sunday night by his horse becoming frightened at the cars. He was coming from Brimfield to Palmer driving a two-years-old colt, and when just through the passage under the Boston and Albany tracks east of the electric station the express from the west dashed by. His horse became frightened and began to kick, and Mr. McIntire jumped out of the carriage, and it is probable that the horse kicked him. He was taken to the house of C. N. Ellithorp in this village, but was removed to the hospital in Springfield on Tuesday. The horse ran away, but a companion who was with McIntire was unhurt.

What might have proved a lively fire if not discovered in time was found in a trunk on the second floor of the Commercial block last Saturday night about 11 o'clock, in the apartment occupied by Fred Hovey. Mr. Hovey had retired but was awakened by a smell of smoke, and found that a lively blaze had started. It was extinguished, or supposedly so, but started a second time, and had gained quite a start before being discovered. Once more the fire was put out and the garments gone over piece by piece to make sure, though to guard against any possibility of fire they were placed in a metallic bath tub, and in a little while were found blazing again. There is no suspicion of how the fire originated, unless it was caused by mice and matches, as there was nothing but clothing in the trunk.

Although Mr. Knox's term as postmaster will not expire until next March, already plans are being laid by certain of the Democrats with the intention of having a new postmaster at that time, the most prominent in that line being James Galleher, at present employed in the Boston and Albany freight house. It is understood that Mr. Galleher would like the place, and will make a hustle for it later, having already taken a pull at the wires which are expected to yield him the influence of out-of-town parties near the throne. Another name mentioned is that of Frank A. Royce, who has been approached by numerous persons in both parties with the request that he make application for the place. He has not yet decided whether to do so or not, considering it altogether too early to make any move in the matter.

A "Good Citizenship" conference of the Y. P. S. C. E. societies of this section will be held in the Congregational church in this place next Friday, commencing at 5 in the afternoon. The following programme has been arranged:

About five months ago he broke his leg by falling down a stairway, and since that time he had been confined to his bed. This, taken in connection with disease which set in, resulted in his death. He leaves a widow. The funeral will be held at the house Sunday at 2 p. m., in charge of the Masonic order of Palmer, of which he was a member.

The Ryther—Squier Wedding.

A pretty church wedding took place here this afternoon, when Miss Jessie Louise Ryther of this place and Rev. Albert Leonard Squier of Amherst were united. The ceremony was performed in the Methodist church, which was filled to overflowing with relatives and friends. Presiding Elder E. R. Thorndike of the Springfield district, assisted by Rev. W. R. Newhall, principal of Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, and Rev. Frank J. Hale of Bondsville, officiated, the Methodist marriage ritual being employed. The church decorations were lavish and tasty, consisting of mural banks of evergreen grouped near the windows, and an evergreen gateway separating the central aisle from the chancel rail, which was also entwined with evergreen. Above the gates hung a floral arch, through which the bridal party passed. All about the pulpit were ranged an elaborate display of exotics, completely filling up the space in which the party stood. The decorations were almost exclusively green and white, a dash of pink, however, appearing rarely. They were in charge of Mrs. Richard Russell, Mrs. Charles E. Getchell, Mrs. Marcus Culver and Mrs. O. A. Parent.

The bridal party consisted of the flower girls, Miss Mildred Holdridge and Miss Ruth Armstrong, the two bridesmaids, Miss Carrie Shattuck of Brattleboro and Miss Nellie Squire of Monson, the maid of honor, Miss Mabel Ryther, the bride leaning on the arm of her father, and the ushers, Albert J. Montague of Amherst College, Charles A. Bradway of Monson, and Hubert W. Sedgwick of New Haven. They marched up the middle aisle to the familar Lohengrin strains, evoked by Miss Ora Parent of Smith college, who presided at the organ, and were met at the altar by the groom and best man, Joseph A. Johnston of Whitinsville. The bride wore a gown of white lansdowne, with train and veil, and carried bride roses. A ring was used by the officiating clergyman. A reception after the ceremony was held at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin E. Ryther, on Spring street. The house was artistically trimmed with autumn leaves, potted plants. The presents were elegant and costly. Mr. and Mrs. Squier left for a brief wedding tour, and upon their return will reside at Amherst, where Mr. Squier is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. Both Mr. and Mrs. Squier are well known in this vicinity, and are universally popular here and in Monson, the former home of Mr. Squier. Wednesday was the twenty-eighth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs Ryther, parents of the bride, and also the anniversary of Mr. Ryther's birth, and the guests at the wedding included a host of life-long friends of Mr. and Mrs. Ryther as well as Mr. and Mrs. Squier.

The funeral of Mrs. Henry McGilp, which was held from her home on Harvey avenue last week, was largely attended. Mrs. McGilp was well known in town, and was much respected by those who had the pleasure of her acquaintance, being a loving wife, a fond mother and a kind neighbor. Rev. E. B. Blanchard officiated, and a quartette from the Congregational church sang. The interment took place in the Four Corners cemetery.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society gave their harvest supper on Tuesday evening. The vestry was beautifully decorated with autumn leaves and braids of corn. A large number were present in spite of the cloudy weather. Ample preparation had been made, and the inviting tables were fully appreciated. After all had been satisfied the tables were removed and a social spirit prevailed, joyously entertained by the committee on arrangements, which gave selections of band music, laughable dialogues, singing and pantomines. The table of useful articles was well patronized also. All went home feeling glad for a season of joyful recreation.

A Jew Peddler Assaulted by Masked Men.

A Jew peddler reached here Wednesday night about 11.15 with a pack on his back and his head tied up in rags and told the following story: He was walking from Belchertown to Bondsville about 8 o'clock, and when in the vicinity of Bondsville, on the road leading from Belchertown back of the hotel, two men approached him from the woods, jumped upon him and beat him with clubs, but for some reason ran into the woods again and disappeared. He says he lay in the roadside about an hour or so, and when he came to consciousness he saw a light in a farmhouse some distance away and managed to reach the house in a weak and dazed condition. Had his assailants continued their work they would have secured about $200, as the Jew had that amount in his vest pocket. He says they did not go away empty handed, as an examination of his pack showed a shortage of underclothing and hosiery, pieces of which he found in the road where he lay after he gained consciousness. He described his assailants as being heavily built and about 5 feet 6 or 8 inches in height, and thinks they had on long overcoats and slouch hats. After being cared for at the farmer's house he started on his way and reached this place between 11.15 and 11.30, and was seen by Night Policeman Luman, to whom he related the above story. He was a man of medium build, with moustache, and wore an overcoat and fur cap, and appeared to be a little lame.

Chapman secretary and treasurer, and Mrs. Ralph Clifford, Mrs. William Gifford, Mrs. Alvin Merchant, Mrs. Entwistle, Mrs. John C. Aldrich and Miss Emily Newton directors.

Water works matters are progressing satisfactorily. More than a mile of pipe is laid each week. Owing to delay in the delivery of the 12-inch pipe, which is to extend from the well to the corner of North Main and High streets, the work is now all being done on the side streets, but all the pipe will be here November 1st. Contractor Eglee has brought powerful machinery, consisting of boiler, engine and pump, for use at the collecting well, and work which has been practically at a standstill there for some time will be resumed at once, and Mr. Eglee hopes to have the well completed by the middle of November.

At the adjourned meeting of the Park Avenue Association, held in Memorial Hall Tuesday evening, the report of the committee chosen to frame by-laws was accepted. Arthur D. Norcross was elected president, Henry G. Rogers vice president, Harlow Chapin clerk, Frank E. Morris treasurer, and George H. Newton, R. M. Reynolds and Horace D. Moulton executive committee, to manage the affairs of the association, to lay out avenues and streets, to make prices upon lots, and do all things which will be for the best interest of all concerned. It was voted that all shares subscribed for should be paid for on or before the 25th of the month, in order that the executive committee might take a deed of the land and begin work at once. The readiness with which the shares were taken would indicate that the plan meets the approval of the citizens.

One of the team horses belonging to the Warren Cotton Mills, driven by one named Fountain, was backed into the river at the No. 4 mill and drowned Wednesday morning. The horse was valued at $200.

William Clark and A. N. Aldrich were thrown from their team last Sunday while out riding. The horse suddenly became frightened at something and started so quickly that they were unable to hold him in check. Both of the men were considerably shaken and Mr. Clark received a slight cut on the face.

Mrs. D. Kennedy has presented the Methodist church with a set of offering bags, which she purchased while she was visiting in Scotland this summer. There are four in a set and they are about six inches in length, made of silk plush and suspended from a frame with three short handles. Each person takes it and passes it to his neighbor. It is thought that they are the only ones in the United States, as they have only recently been introduced into the churches in London.

Special revival services have been held this week in the Methodist Episcopal church, commencing Monday night. Rev. Dr. Thorndike, presiding elder, spoke Tuesday night, Rev. Jerome Wood of Mittineague Wednesday, Rev. C. R. Sherman of North Brookfield last night, and Rev. W. H. Marble of Monson will preach to-night. The meetings will be continued next week with the following speakers: Tuesday night, Rev. W. G. Richardson of Springfield; Wednesday, Rev. F. H. Ellis of West Springfield; Thursday, Rev. F. J. Hale of Bondsville; Friday, Rev. A. M. Osgood of Ware.

It is Free, But Worth a Fortune.

And it is worth a fortune because it is the means of giving health and strength to the weak and complaining—to you, reader. The following splendid proposition is made by Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. Write him a letter, tell him just how you feel, and he will answer it, free of charge, explaining your case so thoroughly that you will at once understand exactly what your complaint is. Every letter receives his most careful attention, he explains every symptom, telling just what to do to be cured, and for this he charges nothing.

He is the discoverer of that wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which is doing such enormous good among the suffering. This is the opportunity of a life time for everyone, especially those living at a distance from large cities, to consult, entirely free, the most eminent and successful of specialists. No fee to pay and no journey to make. The doctor makes a specialty of treating patients through letter correspondence, and you cannot do better than write him at once. You will without doubt be made strong and well by doing so. Thousands of others have. Don't delay.

SELLING OVERCOATS

Is our business, and we think we understand the art just a little better than anybody else. After you have visited the store and looked around at the Meltons and Cassimeres and Vicunas and Kerseys and all the other popular and fashionable fabrics—after you have noted the thoroughness and care with which every garment is lined, faced and made, we think you will agree with us; but when you take the next step, and learn for what little money you can own one of these, we think we shall have won you over complete—at least that has been our experience with others. No matter whether you want to pay $5 or $30, we will give you a pleasant surprise. Light weight Overcoats, heavy weight Overcoats—all are here.

MEN'S AND YOUNG MEN'S SACK SUITS.

The latest fall styles, the finest materials, single and double-breasted, latest style cheviots; neat, dressy, thoroughly well made; built for style as well as for service; bound or stitched edge. Lengths 32½ and 33 inches. $10, $12, $14, $16, $18.

$15.50—THE BEST—$15.50.

This is the same suit—the one we sold for three years; Clay Worsteds, three button cutaway, all lengths. Regent style, dove-tailed effect. There can be no question about them. Other dealers have imitated, some have tried to equal; but ours stand alone.

After Bathing the first time with Pearline, you feel as if you never had been clean before, possibly you haven't. Only baths like the Turkish or the Russian can make you as clean as Pearline does. There's the same feeling of lightness and luxury after it, too. Bathing with Pearline costs almost nothing. It's like everything else—you would long for it, if it were expensive, but you're apt to overlook it when it's cheap. Directions on every package.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as," or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you some thing in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 334 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Waterproof collars and cuffs that will not wilt, are not effected by moisture and look just like linen are all the fashion now. They are made by covering a linen collar or cuff with "celluloid" and are the only waterproof goods made with an interlining, consequently the only ones that will stand wear and give perfect satisfaction. Try them and you will never regret it. Always neat, and easily cleaned. When soiled simply wipe off with a wet cloth or sponge. Every piece of the genuine is stamped as follows:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Ask for those so marked and refuse any imitations, as they cannot possibly please you. If your dealer does not keep them, we will send a sample direct on receipt of price. Collars 25c. each. Cuffs 50c. pair. State size and whether stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted.

The Irish Wedding.

Tim Malony, Andy Bourke, and his cousin, Pat O'Rourke,
Wid the bottle peepin' slyly from his tails, sir,
Och, they follow'd wid a smile each his colleen up the aisle,
And they sat down their shillalies at the rail, sir.
And Father Tom McCoy, faith! his revegence was the boy
That would hardly know the meeting of a deadlock;
So he laid them out in twos, and you'd barely wipe your shoes
Ere he had 'em nately jined in holy wedlock.

Oglin' and sighin'
Comes aisy as lyin',
But you'd want a shmart boy while the knot was a-tyin'.

Then each bridegroom steps aside to salute his bloomin' bride,
When his reverence cuts among 'em like a knife, boys;
"Is it so I see yez stand," (and he lets 'em feel the hand),
"Each a-kissing of his neighbor's pretty wife, boys?"
Says Malony, "Wirrasthrue! oco, whatever will I do?
Troth, I'd like to see my wake this blessed minute!
For you Reverence had us mixt at the moment we was fixt,
And black bigamy's the schmallest taste that's in it!"

Oglin' and sighin'
Comes aisy as lyin',
But you'd want a shmart boy while the knot was a-tyin'.

Says his reverence, in a heat, "Had ye neither bark nor bleat—
And obsarvain' how ondecently I'd jine yez?
Faith, I spliced ye so complete that another hair 'ud beat
His holiness, the pope, to disentwine yez!"
Then each bride she drooped the head, and says Andy, blushin' red,
"Tho' they wasn't just the special girls we courted,
We're so taken wid the charms of the colleens on our arms
Faix! we'll stay the way your reverence has us sorted."

Oglin' and sighin'
Comes aisy as lyin,'
But you'd want a schmart boy while the knot was a-tyin'.

THE [WRONG] FLIGHT OF THE SUMMER GIRL.

She was the most popular girl in the summer hotel, as the Chicago Tribune tells the story, and when two of the others came into her room and found her dissolved in tears they proffered sympathy at once.

"Has your father sent for you?" cried the girl with her hair looped over her ear.

"Charley has gone off on the train!" cried the girl with the penciled eyebrows in a tragic tone.

"No—no—much worse!"

"You surely never lost that lovely hat overboard while you were boating?"

"Or let Jennie get the strange young man seated next her at the table?"

"Oh, girls, it's much worse than anything. I think I'll go into a convent—everybody will be talking about it. Promise never to breathe it, and I'll tell you all about it."

"We never will."

"Well, you know that lovely new young man?"

"No; but I mean to."

"Oh, it's about him. Mame and I have just been crazy to know him. His room is just under ours, and we hear him singing in a lovely baritone."

"Well, Fred knows him, and he'll introduce"—

"Never! It was this way: I was asking Fred about him, and he told me that he wanted to know me; that he said those little baby curls about my forehead were lovely—so natural. Then we saw him coming, and Fred offered to present him at once."

"Of course you agreed."

"If I only had. But I told Fred I must speak to one of the girls first; then I flew upstairs. When I got there I saw at once that Mame had one of her tidying fits, for I couldn't find what I wanted. You see my hair was a little out of curl."

"Of course."

"Just then I heard Mame coming and I said, crossly: 'I wish you'd tell me where on earth you've put my curling iron.' There was no reply, so I repeated my query in a still crosser tone."

"Mame is so provoking."

"Listen—'I—I think there must be some mistake,' said a rather faint ma culine voice. And, girls, there he was standing just inside the door."

"My goodness!"

"I just stamped my foot. 'There is a mistake!' I cried. 'You're in the wrong room, and I'll thank you to get out,' and I advanced, brush in hand. He fled, and I locked and double-locked the door; then I sank on the floor in a heap and cried. I couldn't forgive him for making such a silly mistake. Suddenly something struck me as strange"—

"You surely hadn't"—

"I just had. In my haste I had missed a flight of stairs, and I had driven the man out of his own room. Oh, I'll never get over it if I live to be a hundred!"

IF YOU BURN YOURSELF.

The pain from slight burns is very great. An excellent application is a thick paste of common baking soda moistened with water, spread on a piece of linen or cotton, and bound on the part. This can be kept wet by squeezing water on it from a sponge or cloth until the smarting is soothed.

A thick coating of starch can be used instead of the soda, or wheat flour if nothing better can be had, but neither should be applied if the skin is broken. In this case it is better to use vaseline, olive, or linseed oil. The doctor will apply some preparation containing carbolic acid.

If the air can be effectually excluded from a burn, the pain is relieved.

Blisters should be pricked and the fluid absorbed with a soft cloth before dressing.

If the clothing adheres to the skin, the loose part should be cut away and the patches of material soaked off with oil or warm water.

When the injury is extensive the sufferer will be prostrated and may die from the shock. Heat should be applied to the extremities and over the heart, and hot drinks given until the doctor comes.

In burns from a strong acid the part should be covered with dry baking soda or lime, as the alkali will neutralize the acid. No water should be used, but cosmoline or oil applied after the alkali has been brushed off

When the burn has been caused by an alkali an acid must be used. A person recovering from the effects of a burn requires very nourishing food.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Substitution of Coffee for Alcoholic Stimulants Pleases Them.

At a recent congress of physicians it was stated with much approval that the temperance agitation was leading to an increased use of coffee, which, it was also stated, was infinitely better, as it is a food of no injurious effect as well as the only safe strong stimulant.

RESOURCES OF THE LAW.—A gentleman, dying, left his estate to a monastery, on the condition that on the return of his only son, who was then abroad, the worthy fathers should give him "whatever they should choose." When the son came home he went to the monastery, and received but a small share, the monks choosing to keep a greater part for themselves. A barrister, to whom he applied, on hearing the case, advised him to sue the monastery, and promised to gain his case for him. In arguing before the court the ingenious lawyer said: "The testator has left his son that share of the estate which the monks should choose; these are the express words of his will. Now, it is plain what part they have chosen by what they keep for themselves. My client, then stands upon the words of the will. 'Let me have,' says he, 'that part they have chosen, and I am satisfied.'" This plea gained the suit.—Home Journal.

FOR SALE.

A small place for $700. Five acres good land, good house of 5 rooms, barn and hen house. A short drive from Palmer.

The Kelliher place in Thorndike Village is for sale with 30 acres of land or less to suit purchaser. Being near the mills and with a prospect of more manufacturing still nearer, the land may be desirable for building lots. At the price for which it can be bought and on terms favorable to any one who can make a fair payment, said place is a bargain.

In Three Rivers I have for sale a house of 8 rooms, with hen house, plenty of fruit, best location in the village. I also have another cottage with barn, either of which can be bought for less than $1600.

Building lots for sale in Three Rivers.

TO EXCHANGE.

A place of 6 acres with house and barn, within one-half mile of Palmer, to exchange for a farm of 30 to 100 acres will pay difference if necessary.

A livery business in a village in vicinity of Worcester, to exchange for real estate.

A residence in Palmer to exchange for a farm with good land and buildings.

A horse to exchange for a new milch cow or hogs.

Real estate of all kinds for sale and to exchange, therefore if you have something on hand which you are desirious of disposing of, call on me. My terms are reasonable.

A Splendid Private Lecture To Men.

Powerful Words Which Will Never Be Forgotten.

Music Hall, Boston, Has a Great Audience—Every Word Went Straight to the Heart—A Talk That Was of Great and Priceless Value.

[Special from Boston.]

BOSTON, Oct. 17.—Men want to be strong. They want good health, sound bodies, vigorous constitutions.

They were told just how to obtain all these last evening, in that great private lecture to men, given by the noted specialist Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., in Music Hall, Boston. People have learned that when this noted physician gives a lecture they will hear something they want to know, something that will greatly benefit them.

The doctor has devoted his whole life to the study of chronic and nervous diseases. His treatment is so different and his success so much greater than that of any other physician, that his name and the wonderful cures he has made, and is making every day, are known in every household in the land. A man who can rise to such a conception of the action of medicines on the human system, has indeed well earned the title of the greatest living specialist.

His private lecture to men is one of the most important and valuable which he gives, inasmuch as it deals with that large class of nervous, weak men, which is so fearfully common. For what is more terrible than a physically and mentally weak man, with weak nerves, whose energy and and ambition are gone. And yet this great country is filled with just such men, whose hopes have been blighted, ambitions paralyzed, and whose lives have proved failures because of weakened nerves and exhausted strength.

Thousands of young men of the brightest intellect, with unlimited brain power, and of the most splendid prospects, notice that they are not making the most of their abilities, that their power to work is falling short, and that they are for which they had reason to hope. Thousands of middle-aged men of undoubted ability, of indomitable perseverance and of the highest mental attainments have seen their power, little by little, go from them until they have been forced to abandon their lofty ambitions and give up in despair. Like the fine sands of an hour-glass trickling through a minute opening, so their power, vigor and ambition unconsciously fades away, leaving them weak, enervated and unable to longer maintain their position in the business world. Thousands of old men, with whitened hair and hollow cheeks, have looked back upon a life replete with disappointments and failures, realizing when it is too late why they have not succeeded, and with a sigh they have exclaimed, "Oh, that I had looked to my health!"

Not Making That Success

There are many cases which induce this condition of nervous and physical weakness, but the most destructive of all are those insidious and hidden sources which are so prevalent in this age.

How does this terrible affliction commence?

Nervousness, a growing desire to be alone, inability to fix the mind for any length of time, weakness, dull head, dimness of vision, impaired memory, gloom and depression of mind, headache and dizziness. There is flushing of the face on the least excitement, a feeling of cowardice, unsteadiness of nerves, sleeplessness, trembling, loss of confidence; the thoughts wander, and the person wakes in the morning tired and unrefreshed, and with a bad taste in the mouth.

There is restlessness, trembling of the voice on excitement, irritability, a dull, cloudy sensation, often attended by disagreeable feelings in the head and eyes, and the mind is easily confused. At times there is in the back and palpitation of the heart. There is a lack of force, energy and power and the ambition is gone.

These symptoms mean that the person is suffering from nervous debility, and that the whole nervous system is becoming exhausted and enfeebled. The consequences of this condition are most fearful. They cannot be depicted in language too strong, for the very hope of any success in life depends upon the person's recovery! Many a physical and mental wreck can be traced directly to this disease.

And what is the cure for this terrible calamity? What can they do to get well?

There is no man living who has done so much for this large class of patients as Dr. Greene, nor is there any branch of his practice in which this specialist has obtained such marvelous results. Seeing in his large practice the terrible results of this disease, and knowing the inability of other physicians to cope with it, and indeed the failure of most of them to recognize such a complaint, the Doctor determined to make this department a special study. He searched the laboratories of the world, devoting years of study and enormous sums of money to learn positively the action of every known herb on these parts.

His success has far exceeded his greatest expectations. The combination of harmless, vegetable remedies he has succeeded in bringing together and compounding for his complaint, is most wonderful. He has prepared remedies for this terrible physical and nervous weakness in men, so potent in their healing and strengthening power, so irresistible in their effects, and so permanent in their results, that there is no case which cannot be cured by them. They strike right at the root of and under their vitalizing influence the downhearted and despondent person soon begins to feel a new life within him, the eyes sparkle with health, the nerves become strong and steady, the mind regains its cheerfulness, the pallor and hollow cheeks disappear and the blood becomes rich and pure, sending the renewed vigor and health throughout the system.

He feels himself ready for any undertaking; the gloom and depression have gone, the step is firm and buoyant and the heart cheerful with hope and ambition. This is what Dr. Greene's remedies are doing every day for these poor sufferers. They are making strong, able men out of weak, nervous sufferers, and surely no greater or nobler work was ever accomplished.

Physicians have always been in the habit of prescribing poisons for this disease, and the harm done by them is incalculable. Such poisonous drugs do not in the least build up and strengthen the system, they only impoverish the blood, weaken still more the already exhausted nerves, and make the patient worse than before taking them. Common sense will tell all thinking persons that harmless vegetable remedies which give renewed strength and vigor, are what are required in this, as well as all chronic and nervous diseases.

Thousands of unhappy sufferers all over the land are constantly being cured by his wonderful remedies. If you belong to this class, do not delay another moment, but consult Dr. Greene, take these remedies yourself and get well. For you will be cured just so surely as you take them. His office is at 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., where he consults all, free of charge.

Another great blessing to these patients is the doctor's system of letter correspondence. This enables men all over the United States, suffering from this disease, to consult him without leaving their homes, and absolutely free of charge. Write him a letter stating how you feel, and he will answer it, describing your complaint thoroughly, telling what to do to be cured, and the cost of the necessary medicines.

This system of treatment through letter correspondence has proved of incalculable importance, as thousands of men are being cured by it who could never afford to come to the city, but who, by having the medicines sent them, at the low prices which the Doctor always charges, are enabled to be perfectly and permanently cured. Write him at once, if you cannot visit him at the office, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., and we promise you a speedy and permanent restoration to sound and vigorous health.

THE DOLLAR OF OUR DADDIES.

The silver dollar, which is again a disturbing element in the financial prosperity of the country, seems to have had a lot of trouble in its day and generation, and is now getting back at the United States treasury with alarming persistency. Some of the facts concerning it are of immediate interest and will bear summing up. Here is the chronological history of the silver dolfar:—

Authorized to be coined, April 2, 1792; weight, 416 grains; fineness, 892.3.

Fineness changed, act of January 18, 1837, to 412½ grains.

Fineness changed, act of January 18, 1837, to 900.

Coinage discontinued, act of February 12, 1873.

Total amount coined to February 12, 1873, $8,081,238.

Coinage reauthorized, act February 28, 1878.

Amount coined from March 1, 1878, to December 31, 1887, $283,295,357 (including $1,857 recoined).

Total amount coined to December 31, 1889, $357,969,239.

The first silver dollar was put in circulation in 1794.

"It is a crude design," says a historian. "On the obverse side or face of the coin was imprinted the head of a young lady, facing to the right. Her hair was flowing to such an extent that she looked as if taken in a gale of wind."

In 1796 Congress stepped in to the aid of the typical damsel and tied her hair up with a bit of ribbon.

The fifteen stars were after this reduced to the original thirteen in recognition of the number of states.

In 1836 the design was again changed, and the silver dollar bore the full figure of a neatly dressed woman in a flowing garment. The designer forgot, however, to put in the thirteen stars and the coin was soon called in. Any person in the possession of one of these dollars has a valuable souvenir.

The new design had the lady surrounded by stars. It was an improvement on its predecessor, but the air of the female figure was defiant and stiff.

The dollar of 1838 was the first artistic piece of silver coined in the United States mint.

An April 22, 1868, the first dollar having the legend, "In God We Trust," was coined.

In 1873 the era of the trade dollar of 900 fineness began. That troublesome dollar ran its erratic coarse in just five years.

In 1878 the liberty dollar made its first appearance. Miss Anna W. Williams, a teacher in the Girl's normal school at Philadelphia, sat for the portrait, her profile then being considered the most perfect obtainable. Her classic features still decorate the silver dollar.—Boston Commonwealth.

SOME FUNNY MISTAKES.

The poet has said that to err is human, and he certainly said a very true thing. We are all of us making mistakes all the time. Sometimes they result sadly for us, but not infrequently it is the other way. There have been many mistakes made that have been harmless and contributed much to the amusement of mankind. Among them is one told of a certain clergyman, who left a notice in his pulpit to be read by the preacher who exchanged with him. The clergyman neglected to denote carefully a private postscript, and the congregation were astonished to hear the stranger wind up by saying, "You will please come to dine with me at the parsonage after service."

Another amusing story is likewise told of a minister. The reverend gentlemen was inclined to be absent-minded, and while walking one day encountered a lady whose face some how seemed familiar to him. Taking her to be one of his parishoner's daughters, and not wishing to pass her without notice, he stepped forward, and cordially shaking her hand, entered into conversation. After comparing notes about the weather, he had at length to confess.

"Well, I know your face quite well, but I cannot recall where I have seen you before."

"Oh, please, sir, I'm your new parlor maid!" was the reply.

A third story, copied from a London periodical, is based upon a small boy's mistake in school; but, as a matter of fact, it is more likely that the incident is based upon the fertile fancy of the writer, because it is almost too good to be true. This story is of how Mr. Whackem, a fiery school-master, came to lose a scholar one day. The class was parsing a sentence.

"What is the imperative of the verb 'to go'?" asked Whackem of Johnny Fizzletop.

"I don't know."

"Go!" shouted Whackem.

"Thank you, sir," replied Johnny, and he was two streets off before the teacher could catch his breath.—The Advance.

A DISCUSSION ON FISHING.

"Papa," said Benny Bloombumper, who knew his father's weakness, "you know all about fishing, don't you?"

"Yes, my son," replied the elder Bloombumper graciously. "There is very little about that gentle sport with which I am not familiar."

"You know all about the right sort of bait to use, don't you?"

"Certainly."

"That's what I was telling Freddie Fangle, and we agreed to leave something about fishing for you to decide. We had a discussion about it."

"Well, Benny, I am very glad to see you taking such an interest in fishing, as well as to see such confidence in your father's judgment. What was the point on which you and Freddie differed?"

"I don't know as we differed, exactly. Freddy didn't seem to quite agree with me though."

"State the question, Benny."

"Well, fish run in schools sometimes, don't they, papa?"

"Yes."

"That's what I told Freddie."

"Didn't he believe it?"

"Oh, yes, he believed that all right."

"Then what is it you wish me to decide?"

"Well, I told him that when fish ran in schools the proper bait to use was bookworms."—Harper's Bazar.

SLOCUM'S OZONIZED Norwegian COD LIVER OIL WITH GUAIACOL

It will be noticed by people taking Slocum's Ozonized Cod Liver Oil and Guaiacol that after a week or two their appetites will commence to improve. Why is this? Because the Guaiacol destroys the poisonous Bacteria which are present in the stomach and the blood of consumptives, and impairing their appetite and digestion. By destroying these Bacteria we give Nature an opportunity to re-establish the original healthy condition of the tissues.

A perfect remedy for consumption. Pleasant to take.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Truly Magnificent Display of Princely Garments.

LYNCH'S OVERCOATS are simply grand. Manufactured exclusively for CHARLES E. LYNCH of Springfield by the celebrated Stein-Bloch Co. of Rochester, Fechheimer, Fishel & Co. of New York and others, they rank as first-class in everything—quality, style and make. They invite comparison. They challenge competition. They have all the points of fine custom garments. They cost about half as much.

There is the low-priced $10 garment. Its equal cannot be had for less than $12 or more. It looks like the high priced goods. You have paid $12 or even $15 for garments that look no better. A finer grade are those at $15 and $16. Fine Kerseys with satin and worsted linings. They cannot be equalled at the price for style or bearing. At $16, $20 and $22 are fine Kerseys and Meltons. Blacks, Blues, Browns and Oxford mixtures. They need no commendation. Truly they speak for themselves. At $25, $28 and $30 are Overcoats that would cost from $35 to $50 to make to order. Carr's Meltons, Kerseys, Beavers. They will please you just as much. They will last just as long. They will give equal service. They will look as well. The high-priced garments at $40 and $50 are almost worth something to look at alone. They are simply exquisite.

There never was in Western Massachusetts such a superb array of princely garments as those shown this season by LYNCH of SPRINGFIELD. A bold statement. Bold, but true. See them. They are worth looking at, if nothing more. Quality, style, make, price go hand in hand to woo and win your patronage and approbation.

The Chambered Nautilus.

This is the ship of pearl which poets feign
Sails the unshadowed main;
The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet summer wind its purpled wings
In gulfs enchanted, where the siren sings
And coral reefs lie bare;
Where the cold sea-maids rise to sun their streaming hair.

Its webs of living gauze no more unfurl;
Wrecked is the ship of pearl,
And every chambered cell
Where its dim dreaming life was wont to dwell
As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell
Before thee lies revealed,
Its irised ceiling rent, its sunless crypt unsealed.

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the last year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through,
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in its last-found home and knew the old no more.

Thanks for the heavenly message brought by thee,
Child of the wandering sea,
Cast from her lap, forlorn!
From thy dead lips a clearer note is born
Than ever Triton blew from wreathed horn!
While on my ear it rings,
Through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that sings:

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!

A PRICE ON HIS HEAD.

In the fall of 1866, while I was attached to Fort Hays as a government scout and despatch rider, the Sioux and Cheyennes were consolidating for the war which opened in the spring. Bands of stragglers were riding about the country, stealing and murdering whenever opportunity offered, and one day in October, while returning to the fort from a long ride to the north after some missing horses, I encountered one of these predatory bands. It numbered twelve men, and a son of the Cheyenne chief known as Pawnee Killer was in command. While war had not been declared, and while the Indians did not hesitate to appear at the forts and trading posts, some one was being butchered every day. I had been on the watch for prowlers, and was as well prepared as a lone man could be. I had a Winchester and two revolvers, and the only drawback was that I had found two the horses and had them with me. As they would not drive, I had roped them together and then made them fast to my saddle

I was skirting a long, narrow ridge, badly broken by outcroppings of rock, and the time was two o'clock in the afternoon. All of a sudden I caught sight of Indians about half a mile away coming up the same side of the ridge. Indeed, I heard them yelling before I saw them, and I turned sharp to the left and forced the horses up the ridge among a mass of boulders and outcroppings. The redskins caught sigh of me as I went up, but did not immediately approach. I could see that they were confused, and a dozen or more shots were fired, and I was puzzling over the matter when I heard some one clattering over the stony ground, and next moment a white man jumped down beside me and exclaimed:

"Stranger, for God's sake stand 'em off until I can get my wind. They are Cheyennes, and have killed my brother!"

Three young bucks, on foot, had been in chase of the fugitive, and they were within 200 feet of me as I rose up. The levelled rifle brought them to a sudden halt, and after gazing at me for a moment, they turned and descended the ridge to join the rest of the band. My visitor lay down, and it was five minutes before he could get breath to explain.

"We were out looking for cattle which stampeded from our emigrant camp on the Saline Fork. These brutes killed my brother and took me prisoner. This was yesterday, and about a mile below here they had gone into camp and built a fire to torture me, when I made a break. Give me your revolver, for they'll be sure to charge us."

I gave him one of the weapons, and soon after an Indian appeared on the foot of the ridge, made signs of peace, and asked for a talk. Those on the level below me drew away about forty rods to convince me that they meant fair, and I left my shelter and advanced a few paces to ask the errand of the young warrior. While I was thus engaged the man behind me was rolling the loose rocks together to strengthen the position.

The redskin said he came to demand a prisoner. They had no quarrel with me but the prisoner had shot one of their number in cold blood and must die. They only asked for justice. I had their word that I might ride away in safety, but the prisoner they would have at any sacrifice. I did not wait an instant before replying that the man would not be given up, and that I was ready for any move on their part to take him. The buck had left his rifle behind him, and I stood there also apparently unarmed. As a matter of fact, each of us had a revolver. We were about half pistol shot apart and as I gave him my ultimatum he half turned, whipped out a revolver, and fired a bullet which passed within an inch of my head. Then he uttered a yell and started to run, but he was too late. My bullet struck him under the right arm and went clear through him and he fell and curled up by a boulder to die.

The situation was understood by the Indians below me almost instantly, and the entire crowd dismounted and charged up the ridge. It was a very foolish move on their part, and proved the excitability of young bucks. We had them dead under our fire, and we killed three of them with as many bullets. I got a bead on Pawnee Killer's son with my revolver as he urged his hesitating band to push up the ridge, and when he went down I thought I had killed him. With his fall the fighting ceased. The survivors made a rush for their horses and then disappeared to the east, leaving the four dead ones where they fell. I was puzzled at their conduct, and at first regarded it as a ruse, but when I came to stand up and look around I saw a party of thirteen white men—hunters, trappers, stockmen, and adventurers—coming up from the north on their way to the fort.

The name of the young man who so cleverly escaped was Austin Brice, and for the next year he was in government employ at the fort. He had not shot an Indian, as he stated by the flag-of-truce bearer, but the murder of his brother was entirely unprovoked and cold-blooded, and the Indians meant to torture him to death.

The bullet which struck the young chief did not kill him, as I at first supposed. It struck him alongside the nose, ran down to the corner of his mouth, followed the line of the lips down to the left-hand corner, and passed over the chin. The result was to give him a most horrible looking mouth, making him an object of ridicule and contempt; and he not only swore to have my life, but Pawnee Killer proclaimed the fact that he would give five ponies and a revolver to any one who would bring him my scalp. Therefore, while actual hostilities had not yet begun, there was a price set upon my head, and I was in more personal danger than if the redskins were on the warpath.

The first attempt was made about two weeks after the fight on the ridge. A Sioux Indian, who claimed to have been outlawed from his tribe because he favored peace with the whites, came into Fort Hays, ostensibly for protection. He had no weapons, seemed to be honest and straightforward, and all the men had a good word for him. On the third day he came to me and asked my assistance to recover his rifle, blanket, a lot of powder and lead, and various other articles which he said he had cached at a spot about twelve miles down the Smoky Hill Fork in a grove. When he described the spot I remembered it very well, and next morning, having permission of the commandant, we set out. I was on horseback, and the Indian afoot. I had my usual weapons, while he had an army musket. He gave us his name as Little Smoke, and was a typical warrior in build and demeanor. Before we left the fort an old hunter called me aside and said:

"Do you believe thar' is a cache?"

"Why not?"

"Bekase an Injun says thar is. Allus take 'em contrary to what they say. Is your scalp nailed on?"

"Do you mistrust the man?"

"Never saw one yit that I didn't. I'm going to bet my rifle agin a keg of powder that you don't come back."

As soon as we were out of sight of the fort I motioned the Indian to take the lead. He seemed to take it as a matter of course, and led off with a lope and held it for six or seven miles without a halt. I had not only to keep an eye on him, but scan the country as well. He appeared to be on the lookout, as well he might be if his story was true, and about eleven o'clock we approached the spot where he claimed to have hidden his property. I had kept him in the lead all the time, and we had had more or less shelter along the bank of the stream. Half a mile from the grove I drew rein and said:

"I will wait here while my brother goes forward after his property."

"Is the Swift Rider tired with his ride?" he sarcastically answered.

"One must keep watch for danger. I will do that, for you will be busy."

"If my white brother is afraid he need not go."

"If my red brother has a cache in the grove let him look for it. If not, we will return to the fort."

He hesitated a moment, and then, satisfied that I was on my guard, he walked away and soon disappeared in the grove. I had every confidence that the trees sheltered a band of redskins, and it would not have surprised me in the least to have seen a body of them dash out. I was therefore taken aback, at the end of about a quarter of an hour to see Little Smoke reappear with a backload of stuff from his cache. He came straight toward me, but very slowly, and halted every few yards to adjust his burden. I was carefully watching him when my horse sniffed the air uneasily, and all at once it came to me that I was being stalked. I left the shelter of the cottonwoods for the open grounds, and as I rode away two bullets zipped close to my head, having been fired from the opposite bank of the stream. At the same moment Little Smoke dropped his goods and fired on me with his musket. While half a dozen Indians in my rear were yelling and shooting, I rode down to within 200 feet of the smooth-tongued traitor and dropped him dead in his tracks. There were five Indians in the ambuscade, and they mounted their ponies and pursued me for three or four miles, but I got safely away.

The second attempt was made in December. A half-breed Cheyenne—an old man with a very honest face—came into the fort and reported that a white man, a trapper, was in camp on the river above us with a broken leg and he had volunteered to come in and report the case. The distance was not over five miles, but the snow lay deep on the ground and it was very sharp weather. The old man probably reasoned that I would be sent out to guide the relief party. He was asked to do so, but refused, even under promise of whiskey. This refusal aroused my suspicions, and instead of going out as a relief corps a dozen men went armed to the teeth. The place designated was a grove, and we approached it as near as possible under cover, and then made a sudden dash. Eight mounted Indians rushed out on the other side. There were evidences that they had been there in camp for two or three days

In the spring, when war had been formally declared, most of my work was along the Smoky Hill stage route. When the stages finally ceased running I carried food and ammunition to the station employes, or guided them safely to the posts. Lookout Station, twenty miles beyond Fort Hays, was more exposed to attack than any other on the route. The hut for the shelter of the men was half wood, half mud. Two stables filled with hay and oats flanked it, and stood dangerously near. While at every other station the men had made dugouts for their protection, this precaution had been neglected at Lookout. Small bands of Indians had appeared and been stood off by the well-armed men, and they had come to believe that they could defeat any force likely to appear. On the morning of April 15 I was approaching Lookout with 600 Winchester cartridges for the men, when, just as day fairly broke I was discovered and pursued by a band of about fifty Indians. I got into the station after a lively chase, and within an hour it was surrounded by over a hundred redskins. I had been recognized, and they sent a flag of truce to offer the three men their lives if they would hand me over. This offer was twice repeated, and then the Indians settled down to besiege the station. During the day the firing was kept up at long range. All the horses in the stables were killed before noon, but none of us were wounded. As night came I determined to get away, being under orders to report at Fort Hays as soon as possible. The men encouraged me to go, saying they could hold the place until I sent assistance.

At about nine o'clock I crept out of the hut, crawled on my hands and knees into the darkness, and after twice almost bumping against Indians, I got beyond their lines and headed for the fort. I was only three miles away when I saw the glare of the burning stables, which the redskins had crept up to and fired. The hut caught from the stables, and as the three brave fellows were finally driven out, they were shot down by the horde in waiting, and thus every vestage of the station was wiped out.—New York Sun.

DIDN'T WANT TO DETAIN HIM.—Relations of courtesy between physician and patient are always pleasant to see, says the Youth's Companion. It is related that Dr. F. of Boston and Mr. S., an oldfashioned merchant, who was his patient, were both very polite men, though the doctor was somewhat embarrased in manner and occasionally made queer remarks inadvertently.

Mr. S at last came to his heath-bed and had but an hour to live. He was, however, extremely calm and collected.

The doctor came and sat at his bedside awhile. He had other patients who needed him.

"Go, go, doctor; don't let me keep you," said the dying man.

"Ah, nor me you," said the doctor, nervously rising.

Some of These Days!

Some of these days all the skies will be brighter;
Some of these days all the burdens will be lighter;
Hearts will be happier, souls will be whiter
Some of these days!

Some of these days in the deserts upspringing,
Fountains shall flash while the joy bells are ringing,
And the world with its sweetest of birds shall go singing
Some of these days!

Some of these days! let us bear with our sorrow;
Faith in the future, its light we may borrow;
There will be joy in the golden to-morrow
Some of these days!

PUZZLED BIRDS.

Across the Quinnipeac river, near New Haven, Conn., is a long iron drawbridge—the Tomlinson bridge. On the highest points of the middle of the span are two little frog houses that cover the pieces to which the supporting cables are attached. These little houses are meant to be a protection against the rain, and in winter they are closed by a sort of iron door, removed only when the machinery is oiled.

But in the spring, the engineer, Mr. Powers, takes away these small doors, and then two couples of birds, a pair of martins and a pair of sparrows, build nests in these accidental birdhouses. Though for several years these birds have been neighbors, they are often at war, squabbling and shrieking at one another, while feathers fly through the air.

Mr. Powers, who is a close observer, soon discovered the cause of their strife.

The drawbridge turns upon a pier to let vessels pass, and may be turned either halfway and then back to its first position, or completely round so as to change ends.

Whenever the bridge is thus reversed, Mr. and Mrs. Sparrow, returning from an expedition in search of nest building material, or from marketing, perhaps, will find, as they think, those meddling neighbors, the Martins, at work in the Sparrows' home—for the turning of the bridge has brought the martins over to the neighbor's side.

Amazed at the sudden attack, the martins there do their best to defend their home from those wicked sparrows—and so the fight will be continued. As the two iron houses completely hide the nests, and are just alike, the sparrows and martins are continually at war when the bridge is turned so as to change its ends.

As soon as he had found out the cause of the strife, Mr. Powers was careful to return the bridge always to the same position, and he found that the birds lived in peace and harmony so long as he thus prevented them from confusing their nests.

Occasionally, however, to test his theory or to illustrate it to some passing visitor, the engineer will reverse the position of the nests. The experiment never fails—a quarrel between the mutually angered birds was always the result.

Mr. Powers says, also, that during the whole time he has been in charge of the bridge—seven years—the same comedy has been enacted. The two sparrows alone are no match for the two martins, but they bring other sparrows to help them, and then turn out the martins in short order.

The martins cannot find enough of their own kind to resist the confederated sparrows.—Edward S. Moore, in June St. Nicholas.

"A WART ON YOUR HAIRT."

A man named Mike Dooley, says the Washington (D. C.) Star, has been employed for a number of years as driver by a well-known physician, who fell ill and died. Mike was disconsolate over his employer's death. He was out of a job, and was unfitted for any other employment save driving a doctor's buggy from patient to patient and napping during the visits. He sat around the house in a morose and mournful sort of way until his energetic wife grew weary.

"Phy don't yez sthir yez se'f an do sumthin'?" she inquired with indignation.

"'Shure, an' phwat kin Oi do?" he returned.

"'Do!' she repeated. 'Av Oi'd a bin wid a dochter foortane years an' sax munts Oi'd know enuff t' be a dochter moise's.'

"Mike brightened up. He knew nothing, of course, about medicine except a few grandiloquent phrases he had heard his master use in its phrases. However, he hung out his sign and next day a woman called.

"'Is the doctor in?' she asked.

"'Oi'm th' docther, mom,' responded Mike.

"'Then I wish you would tell me what is the matter with me,' she remarked in the plaintive tone of a chronic invalid.

"'Twinty dollars, mom, av you plaze,' said Mike, sententiously.

"The woman demurred.

"'Scoince, mom, an' a knowledge av tarrespootics air on'y acquired boi the axpinditoor av grate toil an' toime an' munny; so, mom, moi fays air inwairably in adwance.'

"When Mike fired that at her she gave up the twenty without another word.

"'Lit me say yure tung, mom,' demanded Mike. The woman obeyed.

"'Lit me fale yure pools,'" he continued, and she extended her hand.

"'Lit me heer the b'atin' av yure hairt,' and Mike, with an air of serious study, laid his shock head against the patient's bosom. After a moment he drew it away with a jump.

"'The woorst fears air realoized, mom!" he exclaimed; 'yez have a wart on yure hairt!"

HE, TOO, HAD GRIEVED.—There lived down in Cambridgeport, a well-known old gentleman by the name of Josiah Nixon, who in early boyhood had acquired the habit of gross exaggeration. The habit had grown upon him so that he believed everything he said was the truth, no matter how great the exaggeration. After he had reached the ripe old age of three-score and ten some of the deacons in the church thought it was too much like lying to pass unnoticed, and it was decided after a great deal of consideration, that the old gentleman must be churched.

One evening while he was sitting in front of his door, telling a small circle of neighbors about the way the pioneers had to live, the gate opened and the delegation of deacons filed in.

"Yes," the old gentleman was saying, "we had hard times then. I lived two years on grass and hickory bark on Sundays. We used to call Sundays 'bark days' on that account, and that's the only way we could tell when Sunday come. Bears! I saw 1,200 great big varmints onc't around our camp, and I killed——"

"Uncle Josiah," broke in one of the deacons, "we have come to see you about this habit of yours. You have the unpleasant habit of forgetting the truth when talking, and we have come to remonstrate with you."

"I know it, deacon," replied the old man as he looked round. "I know it, and I want to tell you that I have grieved over that failin' of mine 500,000 times a day for the past 200 years."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Coroner. "You swear positively you were not to blame for the man's death?" Dr. Tyro (haughtily). "Certainly, sir; they did not call me soon enough."—Buffalo Courier.

PALMER NEWS.

Young Lad Killed by the Cars.

Luther D., the 13 years old son of C. L. Alexander, was killed by the freight on the Ware River road due in Palmer about 5 in the afternoon, on the track back of his home near the Point of Rocks Wednesday. In company with others of his own age and younger he was playing about the track, which runs at the rear of the house. The train was late and was going very slowly, probably not more than five or six miles an hour, because of a flag which was out to protect the milk train which was switching in the yard. The locomotive and several of the cars had passed, and the probability is that the slowness of the train made young Alexander venturesome and he approached too near the track. At any rate some projection from one of the cars caught in the front of his coat, which was open, and drew him under the wheels. His right arm was cut off close to the body, and the wheels also passed over both legs close to the body, death being almost instantaneous. None of the trainmen saw the accident. Conductor Tryon was in the caboose and felt it jolt over something; he felt sure that some obstruction had been on the track and rushing out of the door found the body by the rails. It was taken to the baggage room at the station, where it was viewed by Medical Examiner Holbrook.

Luther was a bright boy, a favorite with his companions and greatly liked by his teachers on account of his gentlemanly and obliging disposition. The funeral was held at the house this afternoon at 3 o'clock, the children of the grammar school, which he attended, being present. They sent a pillow of pink carnations, with the word "Schoolmate" in white, and also a large bunch of white roses. The burial was at Killingly, Ct.

Two Suits Go Against the Town, Which Will Have to Pay $1300.

Two suits in which the town of Palmer was the defendant have gone against it, and as a consequence the town will have $1300 to pay. One is that of B. F. Coffin in the village of Palmer, who slipped on some ice on the sidewalk at the lower end of the Commercial street passageway under the railroad tracks and came down on his "crupper bone," as he stated to the court, jarring him so severely as to confine him to his house for some time. He brought suit against the town for $3000, and was awarded $1000 by the superior court in Springfield, but the case was carried to the supreme court on the defendant's exceptions, but the exceptions were overruled and the town must settle.

The other case was that of Mrs. Mary Moran of Thorndike, who in going along the highway stumbled and fell, spraining her ankle. There was no sidewalk, and she was walking in a path worn by pedestrians at the side of the carriage track. At one point the path curved around a small stone, and it was over this stone that Mrs. Moran fell. This case was also carried up on defendant's exceptions, and the court decides against the town, ruling that "a side of a street may be in such form and so used, with the knowledge and acquiescence of a town, as to be a portion of the traveled part of the way which the town is bound to keep in repair, even though no work has been done upon it to fit it for the use of pedestrians."

The Holland Grain Stealers.

When the cases of Napoleon W. Porter and the four Dions, for the theft of corn, etc., from G. L. Agard of Holland, came up in the district court last Saturday all pleaded not guilty. Porter afterward retracted his plea and confessed his guilt. He was fined $25, and in default of funds was committed. Counsel for the defendants, Mr. Fitch, asked the court what penalty would be imposed if the Dions changed their pleas to guilty, and the figure was set at $25 each for the elder Dions, Peter and Edmond, and $1 each for Napoleon and Cypreon, who were younger and the court thought might have been led into the scrape by the older brothers. Their counsel suggested that they be promised immunity for any further prosecution for acts committed previous to date of their arrest, but the court could not guarantee this and they declined to plead guilty; their trial will come off next Tuesday. Additional complaints have been made against them, charging them with the theft of 20 bushels of corn from H. A. McFarland of Wales, 15 bushels of corn from G. L. Webber of Holland, and 35 bushels of potatoes from Luther Gardner of Holland.

Another Suit Against the Town.

This time by a Brimfield man, Harry Lombard. One evening last summer Lombard came to town and left his horse hitched to a pole in front of the Nassowanno House which supported the wires of the electric company. A ground wire ran down the pole, which had been wrapped by wire to prevent horses from gnawing it. In some way a current of electricity was conveyed to the wire surrounding the pole, and the horse received a shock. Brimfield is a staid old town and the horses from that locality naturally partake of the sedateness which prevails, so the shock was too much for the animal, and it broke the tie strap and left for more peaceful neighborhoods, doing considerable damage to the carriage, which Lombard thinks the town ought to make good to him.

Change of Grade Ordered.

The special commission, T. M. Brown, Charles E. Hibbard and Henry G. Taft, appointed to decide on the question of separating the grades of the New London Northern railroad and the highway leading to Three Rivers, has filed its report, which orders the grades separated, the highway to pass under the tracks at a point about 100 feet east of the present crossing, through the land of Ellen A. Ferrill. The railroad company is to do the work and pay 65 per cent of the cost, the commonwealth will pay 25 per cent and the town 10 per cent, which it will willingly do in order to get rid of the present dangerous crossing.

A much-needed new floor has been laid in the post office to-day.

H. N. Sager & Co. of Ayer have their store in the Nassowanno block in running order.

An elevator is being put in place in the carpet mill, for convenience in handling stock.

W. P. Kinnevan, telegraph operator at Brookfield, is enjoying a two-weeks' vacation with his parents here.

The Quaboag Literary Circle will meet in the reference room of the library building next Friday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Aiken of New Haven have been spending a part of the week with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Barnes.

Miss Hattie Day of Hartford, R. J. Atwell and W. H. Fenn of Middletown were guests of D. H. Fuller over Sunday.

Mrs. H. Stratton, manager of the restaurant at the passenger station, is taking a vacation of a week in Vermont.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Smith who were visiting at the New Weeks House, have retured to their home in Middletown, Ct.

John F. Foley of Palmer is foreman of the first jury at the sitting of the superior court begun in Springfield this week.

John W. Newell of Hampden sang bass in the choir at the Congregational church last Sunday, and will sing again next Sunday.

The firm of Caryl Brothers., bottlers, has been dissolved, F. H. Caryl retiring. The business will be continued by L. W. Caryl.

William Young, wife and daughter arrived at the Converse House yesterday, and will stay a few weeks at least, and possibly all winter.

The ladies of St. Paul's Universalist church will hold their annual harvest festival next Thursday evening. Supper at 6, entertainment at 7.30.

W. B. Ham, assistant master mechanic of the New London Northern road, is taking a vacation of a month, and his place is being filled by G. B. Kenerson.

The probate court has granted leave to Justus Hitchcock of Palmer, guardian of Mabel L. and Edna Graves, to sell real estate belonging to them.

Chas. N. Blake & Co. will not be able to open their shoe store in Holden's block to-morrow, as expected, the fixtures for the interior being delayed in arriving.

Mrs. Pasco fell from the piazza on the King Knox farm Wednesday and severely sprained her hip. She was carried to-day to the house of her son on the Thorndike road.

The last chance to register for the state election will be to-morrow at the district court room in this village, when the registrars will be in session from 12 m. to 10 p. m.

Rufus Flynt brought home with him last week from his trip in the Adirondacks a deer which he shot while there, and many of his friends about town were favored with choice bits of venison this week.

The rain of Wednesday night and yesterday was very welcome, but it will take a great deal more than has fallen yet before there will be sufficient water in the springs and wells to last all winter.

Next Thursday is the Feast of "All Saints" in St. Thomas' church, with masses at 5.30 and 8 o'clock. Next Friday is observed in commemoration of the dead, and high mass will be celebrated at 8 o'clock.

Miss Flora Studley, Miss Jennie Brainerd and Miss Alice Thompson attended the convention of King's Daughters and Sons at Springfield Wednesday, as delegates from the intermediate society of Palmer.

H. Chapman's horse broke its tie-line this morning while hitched in front of the Cross block, and leaving the wagon against the post indulged in a little exercise on its own hook, but no serious damage was done.

Mrs. Truman Griswold, Mrs. William Merriam and Rev. H. F. Moulton attended the New England Conference of Universalists in Lowell Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday as delegates from St. Paul's church of Palmer.

C. W. Johnson has established a grain business in the building on Water street formerly occupied by the electric company, under the name of the Electric Cash and Grain Co., and his announcement will be found in another column.

A number of the Women's Relief Corps went to Warren Tuesday afternoon on the 1 50 train to attend the inspection of the post there, several posts from the Brookfields also being represented. They were very pleasantly entertained and returned at 5.28.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Business Men's Club Wednesday evening the matter of furnishing the rooms was discussed, and a committee consisting of C. B. Fiske, Rufus Flynt, G. M. Atkins and C. E. Fish was appointed to secure estimates, etc.

A party which was starting for the husking at Palmer Center last Friday evening was spilled out of their conveyance in front of Holden's block by attempting to turn around in too small a space. Considerable mud was cleared off the street, but no serious damage was done and no bones were broken.

At the annual meeting of Washington Council, R. and S. M., Monday evening these officers were elected: T. I. M., George Robinson; D. M., Frank A. Royce; P. C. W., W. A. Weld; treasurer, H. N. Sedgwick; recorder, G. A. Bills; trustee for three years, H. E. W. Clark; for two years, W. H. Osgood; for one year, H. N. Sedgwick.

Passengers on the accommodation train due to reach Palmer at 4.33 from Springfield Wednesday afternoon had an unpleasant delay. A freight train got stalled this side of North Wilbraham, and then the locomotive ran out of water and was obliged to uncouple and run to Palmer for more, the passenger train pushing the freight to this place, getting in about three-quarters of an hour late.

The teachers in the grammar and district schools attended the teachers' institute at Warren last Friday. To-day the teachers of the high school attended the annual meeting of the Hampden County Teacehrs' Association in Springfield. At the morning session W. H. Small, superintendent of schools in Palmer, spoke on "The Reading Habit; What can the School do for its Attainment?"

Two new civil cases were entered in the district court last Saturday, W. J. Whitlock against William Flint, both of Wales, and the Homer Wagon Co. of Watertown, N. Y., against W. H. Williams of Monson, both being actions of contract. In the criminal court last Saturday William M. Pendergrass was placed on probation, having been drunk. On Monday Frank Kiley of Palmer paid $2 for drunkenness. On Wednesday Alphonse Dimeaux was fined $10 for an assault on a Thorndike boy, and the case was continued until next week to allow him to raise the money.

The indications are that there will be a large attendance at the Hampden county Y. P. S. C. E. "Good Citizenship" convention to be held in the Congregational church this evening, as a large number from almost every society in the county have notified the local society of their intention to be present. The first session is at 5 this afternoon, with a social period from 6 to 6.30, when the visitors will be served with supper by the local society. The evening session will begin at 7.30, when Rev. Philip Moxom of Springfield will deliver an address on "Good Citizenship." He is one of the most entertaining of speakers, and will give his hearers many points to carry away and think over. All should hear him, and everybody is invited to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Getchell were called away suddenly Wednesday by the death of Mr. Getchell's brother.

The many friends in this place of Dr. Stowe of Palmer are sorry to hear of his illness. He has been missed by old and young, and all hope for his recovery.

There will be special services at the M. E. church next Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings at 7.30, with the following speakers: Tuesday, Rev. E. B. Blanchard of Thorndike, "From What are We Saved?" Wednesday, Rev. F. E. Jenkins of Palmer, "The Atonement;" Thursday, Rev. E. C. Weeks of Three Rivers, "Purity of Heart;" Friday, Rev. G. S. Butler of Three Rivers, "Baptism of Power for Service." Each service will open with a praise service, and all are cordially invited.

The funeral of George Aldrich was held at his late residence Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. There was a large number of friends and neighbors presant. Rev. F. J. Hale of Bondsville officiated at the house, assisted by Rev. H. F. Moulton of Palmer. At the grave Thomas lodge of Masons conducted the services. Among the floral offerings was a pillow of roses with the words "Shopmates, One at Rest," from his mates in the shop, a pillow from his associates in the mill with the word "Associates," and a pillow of carnations and roses from the Masons. The bearers were W. O'Regan, A. Gilbert, George Canterbury, F. H. Carroll, Fred Canterbury, Henry Morgan.

THREE RIVERS.

Mrs. Leon Henderson is quite ill.

Mrs. Joe Fenton is quite ill this week.

Miss May Johnson spent a few days in Warren this week.

Mr. Putnam of Springfield spent a part of this week at the home of E. Paine.

Miss Rosa Blanchett returned from Springfield to-day, after an absence of a week.

Mrs. Sumner Paine and family of Lonsdale are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Emory Paine.

Mrs. D. Buskey and daughter of Palmer spent last Sunday with Miss A. Murdock.

Mrs. Webber Bliss has returned from Collinsville, Ct., after a few weeks' absence.

Miss Annie Crane, who has been so seriously ill during the past few weeks, is recovering.

Rev. Mr. Taylor of Nebraska, a home missionary, will speak in the M. E. church next Sunday evening.

Stephen More has resigned his position in the mill, and intends to take up his future abode in Lowell.

Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Sanderson of Worthington, Mass., were Mr. and Mrs. H. Shaw's guests over Sunday.

The two last additions to the bicycle ranks in this place seem to have designs on every substantial looking fence in the place.

Mrs. Graves and family, who have resided on the Hitchcock farm on Baptist Hill for a great many years, intend to make their future home in Springfield.

Charles Barnard has returned from Canada, after spending several days there on business, and intends to open a hay and grain store in the near future.

Prosper Howard has planted several white ash trees around his residence, which in addition to some grading and concreting will much improve the appearance of the place.

Mrs. Peck, who has conducted a dressmaking business in this place for several years, is about to leave here and make her future home in Moutpelier, Vt. Mrs. Peck was greatly esteemed by every one who knew her, and her departure will occasion sincere regret to a large circle of friends.

J. W. Cheney has purchased Leonard Aldrich's pine grove and grounds, where many were wont to picnic during the summer season. He has also purchased a handsome cottage of Mr. Moore of Red Bridge, which he intends to have moved to this place and located on the land adjoining the parsonage. Mr. Cheney has engaged the Keefe Bros. to move the building next week.

While Mrs. J. Needham was arranging some preserves in her preserve closet last Saturday afternoon, she observed a can of fruit which seemed to be fermenting, and on proceeding to examine it the jar burst and the fragments of glass so badly lacerated her wrist that the flexor-carpiunaris tendon was cut through. Dr. Bliss's surgical skill was necessary for over two hours in order to unite the injured tendon, which he thinks will be all right in three or four weeks.

On Tuesday night, as some of the mechanics were coming out of the mill about midnight, they observed a dim lantern light waving back and forth in a somewhat uncertain manner on the common. Wondering who could be out at such an hour of the night, and naturally being a little curious to discover what the person with the light was doing, a few of the men thought they would wait and see how things would develop. Accordingly, while delaying on the sidewalk, each one was giving his opinion as to what the person was about, and attributing to the peculiar gygrations a variety of siginifications. Some asserted that it was an engineer who had stradometrical intentions; others said that the curves and angles which the lantern described in the darkness, and the general movements of the individual who carried it, reminded them of the proverbial meanderings of Diogenes. However, to facilitate a denouement, Charlie Alden, one of the number, assayed to approach the man and inquire what was tumbling him. As he drew near he inferred from the tone of the mans' soliloquies that it was some one who had lost his bearings and was endeavoring to locate the "boarding house," so the "Good Samaritan" accosted the benighted one, who proved to be an engineer well acquainted with the streets and avenues of the place, in full command of all his faculties, in possession of a very servicable lantern, but requiring a great deal of persuasion before admitting that he did not take the shortest way in transit to the "boarding house."

THORNDIKE.

A dance will be held at Union Hall tomorrow evening.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Upham of the Center have moved to Ware.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sum of Plattsburg, N. Y., is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Longtine of Pine avenue.

A number from this place will go to Ware on Sunday, Nov. 4, to attend the dedication of All Saints' church.

Jeremiah Broshnan of Greenville, N. H., was in town this week, being called home by the death of his mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward McKelliget, Jr., of Springfield, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. McKelligett over Sunday.

M. W. Roche of this place, now studying at the Baltimore medical college, has been chosen valedictorian of his class.

Mr. Lemon, a former resident, now living on the Palmer road, was in town this week and is looking much improved in health.

Several from this village went to Ware on Wednesday evening to hear George Fred Williams speak on the issues of the campaign.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Clark and family of Springfield have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. James Clark of Church street during the week.

Mrs. Grandfield and sister, Mrs. Leo Foster, were called to Springfield on Sunday to attend the funeral of their niece, Miss Murphy.

Work on the large brick chimney which the Thorndike Co. is to build at the No. 2 mill has been commenced. The foundation for the new boiler house is completed.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Kendall gave a "huskin'" last week to about 40 of their Thorndike friends. The red ears were plenty, and a good time was enjoyed by all.

Mrs. Bridget Broshnan, an old resident of this place, who has been ill for several weeks, died on Thursday. The funeral took place yesterday afternoon, the interment being at Ware.

Mrs. E. C. Lyons of Springfield, who has been at the Mass. General Hospital at Boston for several weeks, undergoing treatment, returned to this place on Sunday and is staying with her parents here.

The Columbian Band has made arrangements with the Springfield Banjo and Guitar Club to appear at their concert on Thanksgiving Eve. The Columbian Band Orchestra, five pieces, will furnish music.

George Whiting, Byron Thayer, and Silas Collis, the veteran coon hunter of Bondsville, went out on Saturday night and captured five coons in a very short time, the animals weighing 18½, 16, 14½, 11 and 9 pounds.

A company of Kickapoo Indians, under the management of Halleck Welles, will appear at Union Hall for two weeks, commencing next Monday. The company will give free performances every evening during their stay.

Charles A. Taber, paymaster in the mill, has moved his family here from Rhode Island, and for a short time will reside on Church street, while the house recently occupied by Mr. Deming is being put into readiness.

H. E. W. Clark has set a good example to his neighbors by putting in a concrete walk in front of his residence; George Mooers is to have one put in front of his property on Commercial street, and Mr. McCormick will also have one put in front of his property. The next one to fall into line, on the next side, will be Mr. Hitchcock. John Keenan of Warren is doing the work.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

A Small Strike Among the Water Works Italians.

A miniature strike occurred among the Italians employed on the Monson water works Wednesday, which was quickly quelled by the contractor, who promptly discharged the strikers. Additional help was required on the well, and a half dozen of the men employed in the ditch down town were told off to work on the well. They found that there was water in the well, and that they would have to stand in it while working. To this they objected, and demanded 25 cents more per day. It was refused, and the men discharged. The condition at the well is not so bad as has been reported, although the work there at present is not so pleasant as on some other parts of the line. None of the men, however, are required to work in the water without boots, and the water is not more than a foot deep in any place. A steam pump is being erected, and in a few days will be in operation. After that time the well will be kept free from water, so that the men will have no further cause for complaint. All the men who were connected with the former strike have been discharged, and 30 or 40 more are daily expected to take their places. The work on the system is progressing fairly well, and it is expected that it will be completed at the time agreed upon.

Harlow Chapin is quite ill.

George L. Fuller is having a furnace put into his store.

John Bucklin of Green street had a cataract removed from his eye by Dr. F. W. Ellis Monday.

Quite a number of Monson people have attended the Corn Festival in Springfield this week.

The organ at the Congregational church has been tuned this week by Johnson & Son of Westfield.

Ed. Maloney, employed at Cushman's mill, has moved his family to this place from Palmer.

Quite a number of young people attended a husking at Lester Howe's on East Hill Wednesday evening.

Prof. J. S. R. Coy, with assisting artists, will give a concert in Memorial Hall November 14th.

Fred Wright has moved into the house on the West Branch road recently purchased by John S. Bogan.

W. N. Flynt & Sons have something of importance to close buyers in their advertisement in another column.

The topic for the meeting Sunday evening of the Y. P. C. U. at the Universalist church is "Christian Friendship".

The work of putting automatic sprinklers into R. M. Reynolds's straw shop is nearly completed.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary society took charge the meeting at the Methodist church last evening.

The Dorcas society of the Congregational church met with Mrs. Rufus P. Cushman Wednesday afternoon.

Miss Nellie Leary, formerly of this town, but for the past six years a teacher in West Warren, is very ill with pneumonia.

Mrs. Rufus Leach of Somerville is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin A. Day. Mr. Leach spent Sunday with them.

A great many people have visited the Flynt trap-rock quarry this week, the work there being well under headway.

The executive committee of the Park Avenue Association has been busy this week laying out streets. The work of opening up the avenue has already begun.

The Y. P. C. U. will hold a social and business meeting at the home of their pastor, Rev. Harry Blackford next Wednesday evening.

The registrars will be in the selectmen's room, Memorial Hall, to-morrow from 12 m. to 10 p. m. This will be the last chance for voters to register before the coming election.

The Academy is closed to-day in order that the teachers might attend the meeting in Springfield of the Hampden County Teachers' Association, of which Principal Burke is secretary.

Ripe strawberries have been picked in Lee Blanchard's patch this week, and there are a number of green ones which will ripen in a few days if the warm weather lasts.

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Phillips celebrate the twentieth anniversary of their marriage next Monday evening. Invitations are out for a reception to be held at Newark, New Jersey, the former home of Mrs. Phillips.

John L. Deane and family have moved into the house near Flynt's store owned by Mrs. Converse of Brimfield, and the house recently vacated by Mr. Deane is now occupied by August Ericson.

Only two Massachusetts laymen were elected members of the corporation at the recent meeting of the American Board; one of these was our fellow-townsmen, Edward F. Morris.

A branch of the Ancient Order of United Workmen will probably be organized here, as at last accounts twenty-one persons were ready to join, and twenty-five only are required.

Miss Clara A. Wood, superintendent of schools, is at her home in Springfield. With a number of the teachers she attended the meeting of the Hampden County Teachers' Association to-day.

The Y. P. S. C. E. topic for Sunday evening is: "What Christ Heals and How," Matt. viii:5-7. Mrs. William Nason will have charge of the meeting at the Methodist church, and Miss Grace Cushman at the Congregational.

Miss Norene Crowe has taken rooms at the Cushman House, where she will be on and after next Monday, prepared to do fashionable dressmaking at lowest prices, and solicits the patronage of those who desire first-class work.

Mrs. Helen Packard of Wilcox Corps of Springfield inspected Marcus Keep Womans' Relief Corps Wednesday evening, and spoke in high praise of the work done and the prosperous condition in which she found the corps. There are now 80 members, two joining at this meeting.

Work will be resumed on the collecting well of the water works system next week. The progress in the pipe laying at that end has been slow, but rapid in the village. Lanterns placed near the ditches have been stolen, and if the offenders are caught they will be severely dealt with.

The state surveyors are plotting the road for the state highway, and the Flynt Granite Company has the trap-rock ready to crush, only waiting for a place to put it. One mile of the highway will be built this year beginning at a point near the house of Timothy Foley and extending to the railroad crossing at North Monson.

The junior middle class of Monson Academy has organized and adopted a constitution. These officers have been elected for the term: President, William Eugene Manchester; vice president, Luther Peck; secretary, Mabel Jennie Bowe; treasurer, George Nelson Bugbee. The class has a password and grip.

This evening the Hampden County Christian Endeavor Union meets at Palmer to discuss the subject of good citizenship, and what Endeavorers can do to promote it, Dr. Moxom of Springfield being one of the speakers. Several hundred young people will be present, including a number from this place.

Next Sunday will be devoted to the interests of the young people at the Congregational church. In the morning the progress and work of the young people's societies will be considered. In the evening, beginning at 7 o'clock, the Endeavor society will celebrate its sixth anniversary. The following is the programme for the evening services:

Bryan O'Rourke will hold a turkey raffle in the near future.

Mrs. Benjamin Brooks of Greenwich is spending a few weeks in town.

Messrs. Merrill and White attended the big horse race at Boston Saturday.

Miss Lucy Shaw has arrived home for a short stay.

Frank Merrill and friend, Mr. Prindle of New York, are enjoying the hunting in town.

Perkins & Hatch of Springfield are buying large quantities of apples in this vicinity.

A. B. Merrill lost a valuable saddle horse Sunday. The animal wandered upon the railroad track, and falling from the bridge to the highway below was killed.

WEST WARREN.

Robert Taite is very sick with bronchial trouble.

Fred P. Webber of Wilbraham Academy spent Sunday with friends in town.

Mrs. Horace Bond of Ware is stopping with Mrs. S. G. Bond for the present.

William Hebert was suddenly called to Taunton Wednesday by the death of his mother.

Miss Nellie Leary, one of the school teachers, is dangerously sick with typhoid pneumonia.

Thomas Healey, whose barn was burned in August, had a genuine old-fashioned raising Wednesday.

Mrs. Minnie D. Anderson of Worcester spent a few days this week with her father, Dwight Orcutt.

Frank West, of Providence, R. I., a former resident of this place, has been visiting friends in town this week.

WARREN.

Miss Mead of New London is the guest of Miss T. Strickland.

The rain is welcome, as many of the cisterns are dry.

Miss S. Keyes had an auction Monday and will remove to Mr. Butterworth's soon.

The Methodists held a fair Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

Rev. Harris Hale and wife were called to Salem this week to the funeral of a relative.

The Warrens will play with the Central Cycle Club's football team at North Brookfield to-morrow afternoon.

The Relief Corps had an installation of officers Tuesday, and delegations were present from the surrounding towns.

Mrs. Kingman and Mrs. George Shumway are at the meeting of the American Board at Lowell.

A house on Hillside avenue belonging to Edward I. Martin caught fire Monday morning, three-fourths of the building being destroyed. It is thought that the fire caught from an oil stove. The loss was about $1200, covered by insurance.

BRIMFIELD.

Mrs. Charles Warren of New York is a guest of Mrs. S. W. Brown.

The ladies of the Second church held an ice cream social at the home of Mrs. Charles Tarbell last Thursday evening.

The selectmen have the past week been busy perambulating the town and examining the bounds as required by law once every five years.

There was no session of the high school to-day, the teachers attending the annual meeting of the Hampden County Teachers' Association in Springfield.

Certain parcels of land belonging to J. A. Elliot, A. W. Crossman & Sons and W. H. Griffin are to be sold at auction next Monday at 2 p. m. in front of the post office for unpaid taxes.

The will of Elisha C. Marsh, late of this place, which has been filed for probate, bequeaths to the First parish or Congregational church of Brimfield $500, the income of which is to be expended under the direction of the prudential committee for the support of an evangelical Congregational minister. The donation is to be known as the Elisha Clark Marsh fund. The rest is bequeathed to the widow, who is named executrix.

WALES.

J. C. Burley's team horse, which has been sick for several days, died Monday.

The Republican rally has been postponed to Nov. 5th, as Congressman Gillett is unable to attend next Monday evening as expected, but will be on hand Nov. 5th.

Alice Keefe, eight years old, daughter of Patrick Keefe, was taken very sick Monday afternoon. Physicians pronounce the trouble diphtheria and scarlet fever, and give no hope of her recovery.

Next Wednesday is the last day for discount on taxes. To-morrow afternoon and evening is the last chance to get registered. All persons interested should attend to both of these matters.

Clinton Rogers of Rochester, N. Y., J. H. Rogers and wife of Brookfield, E. Lackey and wife of Natick, Henry Rogers and wife of Monson, H. G. Church of Windsor, Ct., Mrs. H. Shaw of Worcester and Mrs. Beckwith of Springfield, attended the funeral of their aunt, Mrs. Olivet S. Rogers, Wednesday.

An Aged Resident Gone.

Mrs. Olivet S. Rogers, aged 86, one of the oldest persons in town, died suddenly Monday morning, being found dead in bed. She had been in her usual health except for a hard cold. About two o'clock Monday morning she called to Mrs. Pepper, living in the same house, the tenements being connected by doors, and she went to her assistance. Mrs. Rogers asked for some drink, which was given her, and at her request Mrs. P. returned to her own room. At half past six she went in again and found Mrs Rogers dead, she evidently having passed away very soon after being left; no signs of a struggle were seen. Mrs. Rogers was a very energetic lady, and appeared younger than many at 70 years. She was a daughter of Daniel Shaw, and was born in Brimfield 86 years ago, being one of a family of eight children, and the last one living. She married Cheney Rogers when 26 years old and lived a short time in Waterbury and Newton, then moved to Worcester where she lived 38 years. In 1855 her husband died; after his death she remained at her home in Worcester until about 20 years ago, when she came to Wales, where she has resided since. She will be much missed, as she was very social and attended all public gatherings; she was also much interested in politics, and always kept posted in the daily news. She was a member of the Congregational church in Worcester, but was a constant attendant at the Baptist church, where her funeral was held, Rev. H. P. Smith officiating. She was interred in the old yard near the old Baptist church, with her husband.

WARE.

Mrs. Arthur L. Demond is to start for Hillsboro, Texas, to-morrow.

Salad supper at the chapel this evening, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Fred E. Zoissig, formerly of Ware, left New York for Europe on Saturday.

Philip Feehan is putting in the foundation for a gristmill 40 by 65 feet for Howard & Johnson.

Rev. A. M. Osgood has been reelected president of the Springfield District Epworth League.

Emory Barnes and Miss Grace Canterbury were married Wednesday evening by Rev. V. E. Southworth.

The Ware Banjo Club has taken the front room over F. P. Clark's furniture room for their club room for practice.

Rev. V. E. Southworth has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Unitarian church, to take effect in three months.

Rev. A. M. Osgood's subject next Sunday morning will be "Principles Underlying Prayer, as Taught in Scripture and Sanctioned by Reason."

H. M. Clark has a fine picture, "Sherman's March to the Sea," on exhibition in his window. Copies are given to purchasers of five dollars worth of clothing.

Thomas Wooley, a former resident of Ware and for many years employed as dresser by the Geo. M. Gilbert Mfg. Co., died at Meridan, Ct., last Sunday.

James E. Clark will be marshal of the ushers at the dedication of All Saints' church Nov. 4. About 50 out-of-town priests are expected to be present.

The registration of voters will close to-morrow evening at ten o'clock. There is a prospect that there will be less names on the list than at the last election.

J. H. Storrs is to give a banquet to the members of the Ware Fire Department at the Mansion House to-morrow evening. It is expected there will be 150 present.

It does not look as if we were to have another cattle show this year, but Amazone & Co. have a fine display of farm products on exhibition in their window.

An "Interview" is the latest for a select party, with dancing and whist. The first of what may be a series was held in the Mansion House parlors on Wednesday evening.

The first Democratic rally was held at the town hall Wednesday evening. The speaker was Geo. Fred Williams; Col. E. H. Gilbert presided, and music was furnished by the Cornet band.

BELCHERTOWN.

Nomination papers are out for C. L. Worden for town clerk.

Jacob Finley, an old resident of the town, fell from an apple tree last Saturday and was severely injured.

Mrs. D. P. Clapp and daughter, Mrs. W. B. Hill, and family left Wednesday for their home in Springfield.

Two boys of about 15 and 18 years old, who live near West Townsend, Vt., created quite a little excitement here recently. It seems that they went to West Townsend and hired a horse and carriage of a man named Smith. They then came to Belchertown where they traded teams with Frank Alexander. From here they went to Monson and traded off the team procured from Alexander, and started for home. They were arrested in Guilford, Vt. The parties who owned the stolen team were in town Monday after their property, but Mr. Alexander had sold the wagon. They took the horse however, and Mr. Alexander has recovered his team.

Congregational Minister Installed.

The installation of Rev. V. C. Harrington as pastor of the Congregational church took place in the church Tuesday afternoon a large number from out of town being present. The services began at 1.30 with the invocation and reading of scripture by Rev. G. A. Bragg of Belchertown. Mrs. William B. Hill then gave a solo, "There is a City Bright," after which the ordination sermon was preached by Rev. F. L. Goodspeed of Amherst. His text was Psalms cxvi:30, "I have chosen the way of truth." The substance of the sermon was as follows:

"Truth is reality, that is, the correspondence between the order of phenomena, and the order of our ideas, so that one is the perfect counterpart of the other. All our thinking and all our investigation end in some doubt because they all end in incompleteness. Science boasts of exact knowledge, but there is no such thing, not even in mathematics. An angel with flaming sword guards the secrets of many an Eden into which we would be glad to intrude. But, after all, the value of truth lies not so much in its possession as in its pursuit. A man is enriched by the enlarging capacity to discover it, use it, and enjoy it. Truth is not something to be held in the intellect, but to be wrought into the life. The motive for truth-searching is not to be rich in the possession of it, but to compel the possession of it to enrich you. A man gets its real meaning and power only as he gives it some of the noble forms in which it may be recognized as living truth on the earth. No man can make any real progress in the possession of truth without making progress in the love of it. In the long run, the preacher of half-truths, the man who tries to catch the popular ear and to please everybody, will end by pleasing nobody, not even himself. The world demands genuineness and sincerity. Loyalty to the truth as he understands it, absolute sincerity, will cover a multitude of homiletical or oratorical sins in any minister on earth. No soul was ever fed on denials. No man ever helped the world a single step of whose message was founded on the words: "I disbelieve, and therefore speak." We are not set to defend the Bible, but to preach it. The Bible defends us. "His truth is a shield and buckler." Who ever imagined a warrior defending his weapons? They defend him.

Disembodied truth never saved any man. It is from personal centers and through the strength and vitality of principles incarnated in men that the kingdom of heaven is to come. Peter was a rock by the fact that he was a strong man holding fast a great confession until it was wrought into him and became a part of him, till it dominated him and filled every fiber of his being with its glorious strength. It is upon such men that rests the indomitable and ever-victorious church, men in whom the Christian creed is transmuted into a Christian man, men in whose mental and moral composition truth is as real and indispensable as the blood in their veins; —there are the foundation of the kingdom of God. When conflicting opinions and theories perplex us, the best way is to take your stand beside Christ and determine to stand or fall with him in our thought on all the subjects upon which he touched. We go to Copernicus and Galileo for our astronomy, to Hugh Miller and Dana for our geology, to Bayle and Priestly and Faraday for our chemistry, to Darwin and Virchow for our biology, to Wordsworth and Tennyson and Bryant and Shakespeare and Browning for our poetry. But for our religion, our doctrine of man and God, our conception and hope of the future, we find that specialist in religion, to that incomparable master in the things of the soul, to that spiritual expert, Jesus Christ. He is forever the same, leading us to the fullness of time, the brotherhood of man and of nations, the boundlessness of love and the eternity of hope."

Miss Mary L. Allen then gave an organ solo, and the ordaining prayer was made by Rev. P. W. Lyman of Fall River. The right hand of fellowship was given by Rev. H. W. Boyd of South Amherst. After an anthem, the charge to the pastor was given by Rev. J. H. Vorce of Enfield, and the charge to the people by Rev. C. H. Smith of Hartford, Ct. The concluding prayer was made by Rev. Mr. Haskins of Belchertown, and the benediction pronounced by Rev. V. C. Harrington. In the evening a reception was given to Mr. Harrington in the chapel.

A CARD.—Mrs. Geo. Aldrich desires to take this opportunity to extend her most heartfelt thanks to the many neighbors and friends who have shown their kindness and sympathy to herself and husband during the latter's long illness of five and one-half months; also to the Masons, employes of the Boston Duck Co., and others who contributed to the many beautiful floral gifts and attended the funeral in such large numbers.

Reaches All Because It Is Free.

Do you want to be strong and healthy? Well, here is the best opportunity you ever had. A system of free letter correspondence has been established by Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. You don't need to leave your homes to make a long journey or pay any doctor's fee, and both of these considerations have prevented thousands from getting well. But just write him a letter stating how you feel, and he will answer it, giving a complete description of your case and telling you just what to do to get well.

He gives most careful attention to every letter, and with his vast experience makes you see at a glance exactly what ails you. And for all this he makes no charge. He makes a specialty of treating patients through letter correspondence, and is making wonderful cures. He is the discoverer of that world-renowned medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which is curing more people than any other medicine ever made. The most sensible thing you can do is to write him at once and there is not much doubt but that it will result in your being cured. Remember it costs nothing to find out all about your case.

BOYS' CLOTHING.

We've a primer ready on boys' clothing. It tells a good deal about the newest things for the boys' fall and winter wear. Shall we send you a copy?

WOMEN'S GARMENTS.

The cloak rooms are crowded every afternoon and the garments are flitting out as fast as they can be tried on and wrapped up. The number of garments and fur capes over $30 in price that we are selling is surprising. But the assortment of high-priced garments is large and varied and will stand all the drafts made on it for some time to come.

COLORED DRESS GOODS.

We've been keeping the dressmaker about town pretty busy the past week. These are some of the causes:

Four colorings of silk and wool mixtures, 45 inches wide, $1.25 a yard, cut from $1.50.
Heavy silk and wool mixtures, 50 inches wide, at $1.25; cut from $1.50.
Lyle; a 50-inch worsted suiting at $1 a yard, cut from $1.25. Five mixtures.
Greylock; a 50-inch worsted suiting at $1 a yard, cut from $1.25. Five colorings.
At 29 cents a yard a cotton warp dress fabric that we sold at 35 cents. Fourteen colorings.

HAYNES & CO.

Overcoats, well we should say so—Not a Few, But Many: Every Kind, Every Size; Almost Every Price.

QUALITY, STYLE, ASSORTMENT, PRICE.

These are the four pillars which support our business in Overcoats. If there is a single clothing establishment in Western Massachusetts which has anything near the assortment of Overcoats that is carried here, we should like to know where it is. Starting at those we offer at $8.50—excellent Kerseys and Beaver, in Blues, Blacks and Oxford mixtures and running up to the very finest grades at $40 each, it is certain that no other store has anything like the assortment. When it comes to a question of quality, style, and price, we are even further ahead.

NOW LET US SEE.

We absolutely control in Springfield the products of four of the largest Overcoat makers in the country—L. Adler Bros. & Co. of Rochester, N. Y., Crouse & Brandage of Utica, N. Y., and Alfred Benjamin & Co. and Hammerslough Bros. of New York City. These firms turn out the very finest, most stylish and perfect goods that it is possible for human skill to produce. From the lowest to the highest priced garment, the same care and attention to detail is observed. The cut, the style, the material, the workmanship—all are of the finest. Not a single detail has been neglected—not the smallest item in making has been overlooked.

BOYS' OVERCOATS.

Anything and everything in the way of Suits and Overcoats for the Boys. Big or little, large or small, it makes no difference—there is something for every one of them here. Boys' School Ulsters, ages 6 to 15 years, a long coat, well made, with high collar to protect the ears from the chilling blasts, for $3.50. Doesn't seem possible, does it? and yet here's the solid, practical can't-get-away-from-it-proof—the garment itself. For $5, a better one in Blue Chinchilla, Cassimere, Oxford Mixtures, etc.—better trimmed and finished. Boys' Cape Overcoats, ages 3 to 10 years, at $2.50, $3, $3.50 and $5—from that up to $10 for the best.

F. O. MUNGER. PALMER, Mass.

She is afraid to use Pearline. She admits that it will do just what is claimed for it, that it will save her time, take away the drudgery, and do the work better; but she argues that, if it does all this it must ruin the clothes. It's a poor argument. Because the dirt is loosened and separated and brought out, why need harm come to the fabric that holds it? It's a delicate matter to arrange—but Pearline does it. All its imitators would like to know how. Hundreds of millions of packages of Pearline have been used—by millions of women. If it had been dangerous to anything it would have died long ago.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 335 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Did you ever see one of the famous waterproof Interlined Collars or Cuffs? It's very easy to tell, for they are all marked this way

TRADE ELLULOID MARK.

They are the only Interlined Collars and Cuffs, and are made of linen, covered with waterproof "CELLULOID." They'll stand right by you day in and day out, and they are all marked this way

TRADE ELLULOID MARK.

The first cost is the only cost, for they keep clean a long time, and when soiled you can clean them in a minute by simply wiping off with a wet cloth—that is the kind marked this way

TRADE ELLULOID MARK.

These collars and cuffs will outlast six linen ones. The wearer escapes laundry trials and laundry bills—no chafed neck and no wilting down if you get a collar marked this way

Ask your dealer first, and take nothing that has not above trade mark, if you desire perfect satisfaction. All others are imitations absolutely.

If you can't find collars or cuffs marked this way, we will send you a sample postpaid on receipt of price. Collars, 25 cts. each. Cuffs 50 cts. pair. Give your size and say whether stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted.

Two Old Songs.

In the days when we went gypsying,
A long time ago,
The lads and lassies in their best
Were dressed from top to toe.
We danced and sang the jocund strain,
Upon the forest green,
And nought but mirth and jollity,
Around us could be seen.
And thus we passed the pleasant time,
Nor thought of care or woe.
In the days when we went gypsying,
A long time ago.

All hearts were light and eyes were bright,
While Nature's face was gay,
The trees their leafy branches spread,
And perfumes fill'd sweet May,
'Twas there we heard the cuckoo's note,
Steal softly through the air,
While every scene around us look'd
More beautiful and fair.
And thus we passed the pleasant time,
Nor thought of care or woe,
In the days when we went gypsying,
A long time ago.

We filled a glass to every lass,
And friends we loved most dear,
We wished them many a happy day,
And many a happy year.
To friends away we turned our thoughts,
With feelings kind and free,
And oh, we wished them with us there,
Beneath the forest tree.
And thus we passed the pleasant time,
Nor thought of care or woe,
In the days when we went gypsying,
A long time ago,

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

A TRAGEDY.

The scene was slowly parted,
And to the folks disclosed
Miss Fannie Flossie Footlites
As "Venus" finely posed.
Encouraged by the stillness
And darkness of the house,
Across the stage there scuttled
A wild, ferocious mouse.
A start, a scream of terror,
And, huddled on a chair,
Stood "Venus," wildly grabbing
For skirts which were not there!

He Was Coming Down Anyway.—Terrence Murphy was such a good carpenter that he was rarely without employment. Moreover, he was so thoroughly good natured and so invariably ready to make the best of his occasional misfortunes, that his fellow workmen declared him the most popular man in the trade.

One Saturday, toward the tired end of the day, Terrance was shingling the roof of a new house. Suddenly his foot slipped and he fell to the ground. As the house was low the fall was not long, yet he lay so motionless that the other men ran to him quickly, believing the worst had happened.

Just as they reached him he opened his eyes and grinned.

"Are you hurt much, my boy?" asked one of the men tenderly.

Terrence grunted.

"That was a bad fall, Terrance."

The unfortunate fellow drew a long breath. "Ooh, nivir moind," he said. "I was coming down after nails anyway."—Boston Budget.

HER DUTY TO TELL.

One of the Loveliest of Ladies Writes Our Readers a Letter They Will Never Forget. It is a Grand Letter and Well Worth Reading.

MISS E. BURKE.

We have received this remarkably interesting letter, with the accompanying beautiful portrait from Miss E. Burke, of Amoskeag, N. H., and we place them before our readers:

"Soon after graduating from school, I was stricken down with nervous prostration, and no one but God knows what I suffered.

"I was so nervous that the least little thing would cause my heart to flutter and palpitate. I was also troubled with severe headache and dizziness, which unfitted me for any mental work. I tried several highly recommended compounds, but they did me no good.

"At last I decided to give Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy a trial. What a blessing it has proved to me! I can truly say that I owe my present excellent health to Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. We keep it in the house, as it cures a sick headache or neuralgia in every case, and gives immediate relief.

"I am so grateful for the good this wonderful remedy has done me, and in order that other poor sufferers may be pointed to the path of health, I deem it my duty to state what Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy has done for me. My faith is so strong in this grand medicine which has done me so much good, that I urge others to use it and get well. I have recommended it to several, who have tried it and been cured."

Here is the voluntary testimony of a most estimable young lady, that she was cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

It is a wonderful tribute to the great value of this medicine in curing disease. There is a large class of people who, while not exactly sick, suffer from extreme nervousness, feel weak and tired, lack their old-time strength and ambition. They do not eat or sleep well, wake mornings tired, with dull-feeling head and no inclination to take hold of their work.

To all such we would recommend Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, for it will certainly give strong nerves and vigorous bodies—in fact will make you strong and well.

This medicine is recommended by doctors. It is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that this medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by any one at any time free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

Fall In Georgia.

Fall time in George
Comes but once a year;
Ketch the 'possum by the tail,
Or ketch him by the ear!

But ketch him!
O ketch him!
An' 'crost the griddle stretch him!
Be certain that you fetch him,
For it's only once a year!

Fall time in Georgia—
Speakers on the stump!
Ketch the rabbit by the tail,
Or ketch him on the jump!

But ketch him!
O ketch him,
An' skin him quick, and stretch him,
Be certain that you fetch him,
For it's only once a year.

Fall time in Georgia—
Hear the partridge call!
When the hound dogs bay the buck,
Just ketch him—horns an' all!

But ketch him!
O ketch him!
An' on the hickory stretch him!
Be certain that you fetch him—
For it's only once a year.

PURITAN MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.

A marriage in church was rare, writes Alice Morse Earle in the Ladies' Home Journal, in an article on "Courtship and Marriage in Puritan Days." Occasionally one took place in the new home of the young couple. This was held to be somewhat unlucky. Thanksgiving Day was a favorite time to choose to be married, as friends were then gathered from afar.

The bride was universally advised to wear

'Something old, something new,
Something borrowed, something blue," and though she could dress before a mirror, she must not look in the glass when once her toilette was completed, else ill-luck, in vaguely-defined but positive form were the result. Sunday was really the exhibition day for the bride; indeed, she found at meeting the sole place in which she could appear before an assembled public, and for this exhibition the happy pair donned their finest bridal attire. The bride and groom and bridal party opened the show by proudly walking in a little procession, through the narrow streets, to the meeting-house on the Sabbath following the marriage. In Larned's "History of Windham County, Connecticut," we read a description of such an amusing scene in Brooklyn, Connecticut. Further public notice was drawn to the bride by allowing her to choose the text for the sermon preached on the first Sunday of the coming-out of the newly-married couple. Much ingenuity was exercised in finding appropriate and sometimes startling Bible texts for these wedding sermons. The instances are well known of the marriage of Parson Smith's two daughters, one of whom selected the text, "Mary hath chosen that good part," while the daughter Abby, who married John Adams, decided upon the text, "John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say he hath a devil."

WORTH MORE THAN A REPUTATION.

It isn't often, says the Detroit Free Press, that one finds among the mountaineers of the Southwest a hero of the highest type, but they do exist, and a year or so ago I met one. I had been in his neighborhood for three months and I knew that he had killed a man or two and had the reputation of being the gamest man in the mountains. He was extremely handy with a gun, too, and everybody gave him a wide birth whenever there was a prospect of a row. One day, however, he got into a difficulty with a man from an adjoining county, and when the shooting began he cut and run like a white-head, leaving the field in possession of the other party. Two days after I met him on the road and we talked about the late disturbance.

"I was rather surprised at the way you acted," I said, as mildly as I could, for even then I had no wish to stir him up.

"I reckon most folks wuz," he replied briefly.

"I know they were, and they don't understand it; neither do I."

"Well," he said, half apologetically, "I reckon I jist run, and that wuz all thar waz to hit."

"There was more than that; you lost your reputation by it."

"Mebbe I did, colonel," and he swallowed a lump in his throat; "but that thar feller had seven little children dependin' on him, an' I kinder had an idea jist afore I pulled trigger that mebbe I could git along better without any reppertation than they could without ther daddy, so I run.

He stopped as if uncertain what to say next, and I took him by the hand and shook it with a vigor that I knew he appreciated by the look that came into his eyes.

A VICTIM OF A CRUEL ERROR.

A Detroit drummer was made the victim of a cruel error recently, and he could scarcely be persuaded not to sue the telegraph company for irreparable, exemplary and punitive damages, besides going to the office with a club. It seems that while he was away on a trip, a boy, the only one among several girls, had come to his house, and the glad tidings were wired him on the spot. In response this telegram was received:—

"Hallejah. I am experiencing the greatest jag of my life."

The fact that he does "celebrate" occasionally was against him, and such an open confession as this was dreadful and the entire family was almost thrown into hysterics. Two days later he came home, and was pained by the reception he received. Explanations were demanded, and he showed a copy of the original telegram, which read:—

"Hallejah. I am experiencing the greatest joy of my life."—Detroit Free Press.

His Last Name.—"What is your last name?" inquired a teacher of a new scholar.

"Peter, ma'am," replied the small boy.

"Peter!" echoed the teacher. "What is your other name?"

"Fairbanks," responded the boy.

"Then Fairbanks is your last name, of course,' said the teacher, eyeing the round-eyed, vacant-faced Peter with considerable severity.

"No'm," replied the boy respectfully. "My last name was Fairbanks when I was born, but mother says they didn't name me 'Peter' for 'most six months." — Youth's Companion.

Knights of the Maccabees.

The State Commander writes us from Lincoln, Neb., as follows: "After trying other medicines for what seemed to be a very obstinate cough in our two children we tried Dr. King's New Discovery and at the end of two days the cough entirely left them. We will not be without it hereafter, as our experience proves that it cures where all other remedies fail."—Signed F. W. Stevens, State Com.—Why not give this great medicine a trial, as it is guaranteed, and trial bottles are free at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

It May Do as Much for You.

Mr. Fred Miller, of Irving, Ill., writes that he had a Severe Kidney trouble for many years, with severe pains in his back and also that his bladder was affected. He tried many so called Kidney cures but without any good result. About a year ago he began use of Electric Bitters and found relief at once. Electric Bitters are especially adapted to cure all Kidney and Liver troubles and often gives almost instant relief. One trial will prove our statement. Price only 50c for large bottle. At LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

SLOCUM'S OZONIZED Norwegian COD LIVER OIL WITH GUAIACOL

What makes consumption? This question is less interesting to sufferers than one other: What

CURES CONSUMPTION?

Sometimes there is no cure at all, but that is not the case as often as folks suppose. Slocum's Ozonized Norwegian Cod Liver Oil, with Guaiacol, allays inflammation, stops that weakening cough, and promotes the formation of solid, healthy flesh on emaciated bodies. And it is pleasant to take. It contains healing properties of great value, scientifically combined. That answers the second question.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

"I'm Sorry."

There's much that makes me sorry as I journey down earth's way,
And I seem to see more pathos in poor human lives each day.
I'm sorry for the strong, brave men who shield the weak from harm,
But who in their own trouble'd hour find no protecting arm.

I'm sorry for the victors who have earned success, to stand
As targets for the arrows shot by envious failure's band;
And I'm sorry for the generous hearts who freely shared their wine,
But drink alone the gall of tears in fortune's drear decline.

I'm sorry for the souls who build their own fame's funeral pyre,
Derided by the scornful throng, like ice deriding fire;
And I'm sorry for the conquering ones who know not sin's defeat,
But daily tread down fierce desire 'neath scorched and bleeding feet.

I'm sorry for the anguished hearts that break with passion's strain,
But I'm sorrier for the poor starved souls that never know love's pain,
Who hunger on through barren years, not tasting joys they crave;
For sadder far is such a lot than weeping o'er a grave.

I'm sorry for the souls that come unwelcomed into birth;
I'm sorry for the unloved old who cumber up the earth;
I'm sorry for the suffering poor in life's great maelstrom hurled;
In truth, I'm sorry for them all who make this toiling world.

But underneath whate'er seems sad and is not understood
I know there lies, hid from our sight, a mighty germ of good;
And this belief stands close by me, my sermon, motto, text—
The sorriest things in this life will seem grandest in the next.

MARY'S BROKEN TROTH.

When Mary Clairmont's engagement was proclaimed to the world there ensued a general expression of surprise.

People are generally surprised at matrimonial engagements. There is always some cogent reason why things should have been adjusted otherwise—why John should have married Joan, and Peter should prefer Betsey. Nobody was ever yet married to suit everybody.

But in Mary Clairmont's case it did really seem as if the course of true love had interfered seriously with the current of common sense and prudence.

Miss Clairmont was one-and-twenty, a tall, imperial beauty, with dewy black eyes, a skin as fresh as damask roses, and dark brown hair coiled in shining bands at the back of her head. Moreover, Miss Clairmont had a "career" before her. She had just graduated from Medfield medical university, and taken out her diploma as M. D.

"And just think of it," said Aunt Jo, bursting into tears of vexation and disappointment, that she must needs go and ruin all her prospects by getting engaged to Harry Marlow down in New York!"

"It does seem strange, Aunt Jo, when I sit down and think of it," said Dr. Mary, laughing and blushing. Six months ago my profession was all the world to me. I neither wished or cared for anything outside its limits. The future was all mapped out before me without let or hindrance; and now—"

"Humph!" growled Aunt Jo. "Any brainless idiot can get married and keep a man's house and mend his shirts for him, but you were made for something higher and more dignified, Mary!"

Mary's dew-bright eyes sparkled.

"Higher, Aunt Jo," said she. "More dignified? There you are mistaken. There is no higher or more dignified lot in life than that of the true wife of a noble husband."

"Fiddlesticks!" said Aunt Jo. As if every poor fool who was dazzled by the glitter of a wedding ring didn't say the same thing! You've disappointed me, Mary Clairmont, and I'm ashamed of you, and that's the long and short of it."

"Dear Aunt Jo," said she, "I shall not let my sword and shield rust, believe me Harry has only his own talents to advance him in the world, and it will be at least a year before we shall be ready to marry. In the meantime I shall accept the post of visiting physician to the Aldenbury almshouse and practice my profession in Aldenbury just the same as if there were no engagement."

"I wish to goodness there wasn't," said Aunt Jo. "I tell you what, Mary, I don't fancy that smiling, smooth-tongued young man of yours, and I never shall."

Still Dr. Mary Clairmont kept her temper.

"I am sorry, Aunt Jo," she said pleasantly, "but I hope that you will eventually change your mind."

"I used to keep a thread and needle store when I was a young woman," remarked Aunt Jo, dryly, "and I could always tell the ring of a counterfeit half-dollar when a customer laid it on the counter. I could then and I can now—and I tell you what, Mary, there's base metal about Harry Marlow."

Dr. Mary bit her lip.

"Perhaps. We will not discuss the subject further, Aunt Jo," she said, with quiet dignity, and the old lady said no more.

"Aunt Jo is wrong," persisted the pretty young M. D. to herself.

"Mary is making a fool of herself!" thought Aunt Jo.

Aldenbury was a pretty manufacturing village, with a main street shaded by umbrageous maples, a "west end," where people who had made their fortunes lived comfortably in roomy old houses, surrounded by velvet lawns and terraced gardens, and an "east end," where people fought desperately and not always successfully to keep body and soul together on the merest pittance.

And a little way out of the village the almshouse, built and endowed by a certain smuggling sea captain, whose conscience had pricked him during his latter days, raised their gray stone gables to the sky, and made a picturesque background to the landscape.

Dr. Mary Clairmont made something of a sensation at Aldenbury. Up to this time all the resident M. D.s had been stuffy old men with wigs, or pert young ones with glasses.

A beautiful young lady who wrote prescriptions and compounded pills and potions was a novelty in the town, and by no means a disagreeable one. People rather liked the idea, once they had convinced themselves that the lady doctor understood herself and patients.

And the old people at the almshouse grew to love Dr. Mary and listen with eager ears for the sound of her carriage wheels over the blue gravel drive which led up to the portico.

It was a brilliant December day when the young physician stood in the neatly carpeted reception room, drawing on her fur gloves previous to entering her neat phaeton once again, while she reiterated to the white-capped maid some directions concerning old Ann Mudgett's rheumatism, when the matron hurried in.

"Oh, I beg your pardon, Dr. Clairmont," said she, "but I clean forgot the new old woman!"

"The new old woman," repeated Dr. Mary with a smile.

"That is," exclaimed Mrs. Cunningham, "she only came last night—a quiet old soul, half blind, and quite bad with the asthma. Perhaps you'd better just see her before you go. She brought a card of admission from Dr. Merton, the New York clergyman, who is one of our directors, you know. And she seems a decent body enough."

So Dr. Mary went cheerfully into the little brick-paved room, with its white pallet bed, cushioned rocking chair and neatly-draped casement, where sat a poor, little, shriveled-up woman, wrapped in a faded shawl.

She looked timidly up, as Dr. Mary came in, from under the borders of her cap.

"I'm a poor body, miss," said she, "and I'm sensible I'm making a deal of trouble in the world. But the Lord don't always take us, miss, when we'd like to go."

"This is the doctor," said Mrs. Cunningham.

The little woman would have risen up to make a feeble courtesy, but Dr. Mary motioned her to keep her seat.

"What is your name?" asked she pleasantly.

"Louise Marlow, miss."

"Marlow? That is an unusual name, isn't it?" said Mary Clairmont, coloring in spite of herself.

"We're English, miss," said the old woman, struggling bravely with her asthma. "There ain't many of us in this country. I've a son, miss, in the law business, as any mother might be proud of."

"A son!" echoed Mrs. Cunningham, and you in the almhouse?"

"Not that it's his fault, ma'am," the old creature made haste to explain. "My son is to be married to a fine, proud young lady, as is fit for any prince in all the land, and, of course, he can't be expected to burden himself with a helpless old woman like me. He says I'm to write and let him know how I get along, and if I'm sick or anything he'll try to see me. I sewed carpets until the asthma got hold of me, and supported myself comfortably. But, of course, I couldn't lay up anything for a rainy day—who could? And Henry couldn't help me, for he's getting ready to be married, poor lad! So I went to Dr. Merton and asked him did he know any decent place where an old woman like me could end her days in peace. And he gave me a card to come here and some money to pay my traveling expenses—God bless him!—and here I am."

Mary Clairmont listened quietly to the garrulous tale, but the color varied in her cheek more than once as she stood there.

"Is your son's name Harry Marlow?" she said slowly and thoughtfully.

"Yes miss, at your service, said the old woman, with a duck of her whitecapped head, which was meant to do duty in place of the impossible courtesy.

"Is he like this!" said Dr. Mary, taking a photograph from her pocket.

The old woman, with trembling hands, fitted on her iron-bowed spectacles and looked at the picture, uttering a little cry of recognition.

"Sure, miss, it is his own self," she cried. "You are acquainted with him, then."

"Somewhat," said Dr. Mary, composedly, as she returned the photograph to its place. "And now I will leave you something to relieve this difficulty in breathing."

But the old crone eyed her wistfully.

"Perhaps you know the young lady my son is to marry?"

"Yes," said Dr. Mary, writing something in her prescription-book. "I have seen her."

"Perhaps, miss," faltered the old woman, "you will give her my humble duty, and tell her I would just like to look at her for once and see what she is like. There's no fear of my troubling her, miss, for I mean to end my days here. But I would like to see her just once. And if it wouldn't be asking too much, miss, would you please write to my son, and tell him where I am!—for I'm no scholar myself, and I'm his mother, after all."

"I will write to him," said Dr. Mary quietly; and so she went away.

"I never see a lady doctor afore," said old Mrs. Marlow, with a long sigh. "But she's a pretty creetur, and it seems good to have her around. I hope she'll come again soon.

'You may be very sure of that," said the matron brusquely. Dr. Clarimont ain't one to neglect poor people because they are poor."

That evening Aunt Jo, frying crullers over the kitchen fire, was surprised by a visit from her niece, who came in all wrapped in furs, with her cheeks crimsoned with the frosty winter air.

"Bless me! this ain't never you!" said Aunt Jo, peering over the rims of her spectacles.

"I drove out to see you, Aunt Jo," said Mary, "to tell you that you were right. The metal was counterfeit."

"Eh?" said Aunt Jo, mechanically ladling out the brown, curly crullers, although she did not look at what she was doing.

"I have written to Harry Marlow, canceling our engagement," said Dr. Mary calmly, albeit her voice faltered a little. The man who will heartlessly let his old mother go to the almshouse, sooner than to take the trouble to maintain her, can be no fit husband for any woman!"

And then she sat down by the fire and told Aunt Jo everything; for crabbed, crusty old Aunt Jo had been a mother to her, and the girl's heart was full to overflowing.

When she had ceased speaking, Aunt Joe nodded her head.

"You have done well and wisely," said she.

Old Mrs. Marlow died that winter in Aldenbury almshouse, with her head on Dr. Mary Clairmont's arm, and never knew that her garrulous confession had deprived her son of his promised wife.

And Mary says quietly and resolutely that her profession must be husband and home to her henceforward.

"Just what it ought to be," says Aunt Jo. "No woman ever yet succeeded in doing two things at once."—Indianapolis News.

THE STAMP MANIA.

The most valuable collection of stamps in the world is here stated to be that of Herr von Ferrary, of Paris, which is valued at a half million of dollars. The collection now in the British Museum, which is worth three hundred thousand dollars, comes next.

There are, it appears, a dozen ugly little stamps which if any boy could find on some old letters would bring him ten thousand dollars in the market. Of these, the one and two pence stamps of Mauritius of the first issue would be worth two thousand dollars each. As there are supposed to be only eight of each of these stamps in the world, no boy is likely to find them. An American stamp, the five-cent Brattleboro provisional issue, is worth twelve hundred dollars; some of the stamps of the confederate states sell for large sums.

Two of the governments of South American states are known to be in the pay of wealthy stamp dealers in Europe, and change their issues frequently to give their patrons profitable "corners."

The stamp craze began only forty years ago in Belgium, but is now a vast business, extending over all the civilized world. Every boy probably has made a small investment in it.

Whether it is safe to make large ones in stock so intrinsically worthless is matter for question.—Youth's Companion.

PALMER NEWS.

Escaped From An Officer.

Deputy Sheriff Studley had an unpleasant experience at Wales Wednesday morning, in which the man whom he went to arrest escaped, though as the fellow has previously escaped from two other deputies, broken jail twice and bears a reputation as a hard customer, Mr. Studley should not feel bad, especially as he did not get a good hold of his intended prisoner. The fellow's name is William Lace, but he has been working in the mill at Wales under the name of John Smith, having escaped from Worcester jail, where he was sent for burglary. He was located in Wales, and a Barre officer came to town Monday and with Officer Studley went after his man. He was not there, however, and the officers returned, making arrangements that they should be notified when their man got back. The Barre officer remained until Tuesday night, and then went home. Wednesday Sheriff Studley got word that his man had returned, and went for him. He had quite a sum of money due him and had asked for his pay; he was told to come to the office and he could have it. He is constantly on the watch for officers, however, and when he came in the office door left it ajar and stood near by with his back toward it. The officer was in a back room, and there was no other way but to approach the fellow from in front, though as neither had ever seen the other before Mr. Studley hoped to secure his man. Accordingly he sauntered carelessly out of the rear office door and walked toward the fellow, who immediately began to back toward the door; he had about reached it when the officer made a jump for him and touched him on the shoulder, but could not secure a firm hold and the two went out of the door together. Smith then broke away and ran, and as he is pretty good on a sprint succeeded in making his escape.

E. Goodes has taken the agency for Palmer of the celebrated Douglas shoes.

Chas. N. Blake & Co. have opened their shoe store in Holden's new block.

Rev. S. T. Frost has been attending the meetings of the Baptist societies in Boston this week.

G. M. Atkins & Co. are building two turntables for the Boston and Albany road at West Springfield.

The Sunday school of the Baptist church will have a social for members only next Thursday evening.

The pipe organ in Bodfish's window, constructed from goods for sale in the store, is well worth a second glance.

John Desmond dislocated his shoulder Wednesday noon while scuffling at the carpet mill, and will be laid off a few days in consequence.

The meeting of the Quaboag Literary Circle at the library rooms this evening will be commemorative of Dr. Holmes, and the public is invited to attend.

The men on the Ware River road got their pay on Wednesday of this week instead of Friday, as heretofore, and will hereafter be paid regularly on Wednesdays.

The Mt. Bunyan Granite Co. is shipping a lot of curbing to Westfield, also the stone for a couple of turntables for the Boston and Albany road at West Springfield.

Superintendent W. H. Small of Palmer was chosen vice present of the Hampden County Teachers' Association at the annual meeting in Springfield last Friday.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins of the Congregational church preached Wednesday evening in the Methodist church at Bondsville, where special services are being held this week.

Mrs. L. G. Parkhust has been at Boston this week as a delegate from the Baptist church to the annual Baptist convention, and Mrs. A. E. Fitch has been the delegate from the Young People's Union of the church.

The Seidl Orchestra, 55 persons, came to Palmer from Springfield yesterday morning and went south over the New London Northern road to New London. This morning they returned and went west over the Boston and Albany road to Pittsfield.

The fittings for O. P. Allen's store in Holden's new block have arrived and are being put in place. The fixtures of Robinson & Taylor's grocery store are expected every day, and it is probable that both of these stores will be occupied by the 15th.

J. B. Atwood of this place, representing Philadelphia parties, has taken the contract to furnish the paper and do the work of redecorating the American House in Springfield, the order being a considerable one, as the new decorations will be quite elaborate.

It is said that one of the express company's employes is feeling pretty well elated these days. He has been hunting more or less for the last year, but nothing fell a prey to his gun until Monday, when he shot a grey squirrel, and he is now a Nimrod in the full sense of the word.

John Stone, a former resident of Palmer and for many years hostler at the Weeks House, was brought to the almshouse Tuesday from the hospital at Springfield, where he has been for the last ten weeks recovering from a broken hip, occasioned by a fall. He has not fully recovered, but has not been well enough to be moved before.

An accident which might have resulted in a serious fire took place in H. N. Sager & Co's. store in the Nassowanno block late last Friday afternoon, when one of the large kerosene lamps fell to the floor by the pulling out from the ceiling of the hook which held it. The oil ran out on the floor and blazed up fiercely for a moment, but the flames were soon put out and the damage was slight, only a few pieces of cloth being scorched.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Bennett were pleasantly surprised Monday evening, when Mr. Bennett's Sunday school class of the Congregational church, accompanied by Rev. and Mrs. F. E. Jenkins, called to help them celebrate the 25th anniversary of their marriage. The visitors brought with them a handsome center table and picture, the presentation remarks being made by Rev. F. E. Jenkins, to which Mr. Bennett feelingly responded. A most pleasant evening was enjoyed by all present.

The New London Northern road has this week placed on sale a new series of trip tickets, good for one, two, three, six and twelve months between any two points on the line; heretofore only three, six and twelve month tickets have been issued. The old tickets were simply a card which entitled the purchaser to one trip a day in each direction between the stations named thereon, but the new tickets are in coupon form, the conductor taking one for each passage and so getting a record of the number of trips traveled. At the end of the time designated on the ticket all unused coupons are forfeited by the holder of the ticket. Another new ticket put on sale by the road is a student's ticket, which will be sold to students at two cents per mile, the regular fare being three cents; but in order to secure this special rate the student must present to the ticket seller a certificate from the general passenger agent of the road entitling the holder to the reduced rate, these being issued on application and satisfactory proof that the applicant is in good standing in the school or college which he or she attends.

The Corn Thieves Tried.

It took the district court a good share of the day yesterday to try the cases of the Dion brothers of Brimfield and Napoleon Porter of Spencer for stealing corn from G. L. Agard, H. A. McFarland and G. L. Webber, and potatoes from Luther Gardner. W. W. Leach of Palme appeared for the prosecution, Messrs. Kane of Worcester and Fitch of Palmer for the defense. Porter was serving a sentence in Springfield for stealing Agard's corn, to which he pleaded guilty, but was brought here for trial on the new charges, and all pleaded not guilty. The government witnesses all told much the same story, describing the property which had been stolen, the tracks in the fields and the wheel tracks which seemed to lead toward the Dion's home, also what was found at the time their place was searched. Porter, the Dions and their wives, with several others, were called for the defense, and at first claimed that the corn had all been raised on the Dion farm. Edmund Dion took the stand and was asked if he had ever stole anything from McFarland, Webber or Gardner, and replied that he had not; asked if he had from Agard, and admitted that he had assisted Porter to get 12 bushels of corn. Porter testified to his part in the theft, and that the others had no knowledge of the corn being stolen. Counsel for the defense asked that Peter, Cyprian and Napoleon Dion be discharged, but as they are all married the prosecution intimated that it looked as though the defendants had agreed that Edmund should take the punishment for the whole family, and the court evidently was of the same opinion, for the four were held for the grand jury in the sum of $300 each, Porter's bail being fixed at $900.

Communion at the churches next Sunday.

Mrs. F. J. Leland of Worcester is visiting her father, E. S. Brooks.

Mrs. Harriet Warren of Springfield is visiting Mrs. E. M. Blanchard.

President Cleveland has appointed November 29th as Thanksgiving Day.

The Ladies' Social Club will meet next Tuesday with Mrs. L. E. Chandler.

Fred Bordman of Hartford is the guest of his cousin, Miss Elizabeth Wassum.

The Cross block on Main street is to be painted a light color, either white or yellow.

LeRoy Lord of North Wilbraham has a pear tree which is in full blossom for the second time this year.

A specimen of the official ballot to be used in the election next Tuesday has been posted in the post office for inspection.

G. W. Moore, formerly employed by E. S. Brooks, is to open a jewelry store in Holden's new block about December 1st, in the east store on Main street.

Revere Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star gave a social for members after the regular meeting last Friday evening, with an entertainment and refreshments.

Dr. L. H. Hendee of Lowville, N. Y., a graduate of the Baltimore Medical College, has opened an office in Lynde's block, and can be found nights at the Nassowanno House.

W. H. Hitchcock has placed a 15-horse power boiler in the cellar of the Cross block to heat Bodfish's store, and is now putting a coil boiler and radiators in H. P. Holden's residence.

J. H. Kennedy of Ware is doing the plumbing in Holden's new block, and the Old Corner Wall Paper Co. of Springfield will fresco the rooms to be occupied by the Business and Social club.

The contract for the Odd Fellows' building has been awarded this week. J. Talbert of Lowell will do the brick work, and G. W. Lyman of Palmer the wood work. The cost will be about $15,000.

The scholars of the high school are considering the advisability of undertaking the management of a course of entertainments for the coming season, as they wish to raise some money for the nucleus of a school library.

N. S. Ingraham is taking a vacation of a couple of weeks from duty in the signal tower at the railroad crossing, and M. J. Dawson has charge of the tower during his absence, James Donahue taking Mr. Dawson's place as brakeman on the Ware River road.

Next Sunday will be the annual "Good Citizenship Sunday" at the Universalist church. The decorations, music, and sermon on "Jethro's words to Moses about the choice of rulers," will be appropriate for the observance of the occasion.

The harvest supper at St. Paul's church last evening was well served and largely attended. The dining room was tastefully decorated with fruits, vegetables and other products of the soil. After the supper an enjoyable entertainment was given in the parlors. About $50 was netted.

A man by the name of Mabar, from Haydenville, was in town Monday looking for his son James, 12 years old, who ran away from home a week ago Tuesday, and who had been traced to Belchertown, where he was seen Thursday, and again in Palmer Sunday, when residents of Central street saw the lad go up that street and turn east on Park. He failed to find any further trace of the boy, however.

A number of the windows in the town house, especially those in the assessors' room, seem to have been the target for all the stone-throwing small boys in the neighborhood, judging from their appearance, as many panes of glass have been broken, in one window nearly all being gone. A taste of the law might have a wholesome effect on some of the young rascals, and an effort will probably be made to find out who has been breaking the windows.

On Sunday morning it was found by some of the boarders at Mrs. Taplin's, in the Cross block, that a sneak thief had been through their rooms, and had secured quite a haul. From one room he secured a $5 bill, a $12 ring and two sets of studs; in another he got a gold chain and a $10 ring; another room yielded a part of a box of cigars, and another a razor. The work was evidently done by some person who was familiar with the block and had gained access to the rooms while the occupants were away.

The members of the Men's Sunday Evening Club of the Congregational church, with their ladies, will have a supper in the vestry of the church next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, which will be served by the Ladies' Society of the church. After the supper there will be toasts, and a general good time. H. W. McGregory will be toastmaster. The committee of arrangements has endeavored to see every member of the club, but if any have been overlooked they are to consider themselves invited to attend.

The JOURNAL is aware that the amount of space which it devotes to reading matter this week is small, but the late date at which advertising orders came in prevented making arrangements for more space. We trust that are readers will bear with us this time, and feel sure that they will be more than repaid by the paper of next week for any omission in this issue. Next week's paper will be six pages, filled with matter which will be of interest to all. In the meantime the advertisements in to-day's issue may be perused with profit to our readers; the merchants who advertise have many bargains to offer, and you will be sure to find something interesting among their announcements.

An alarm of fire was rung in about 11.45 last Sunday for a blaze in the house of Rufus Flynt on Central street, but fortunately the services of the firemen were not needed. The blaze was caused by an explosion of alcohol while filling an alcohol lamp. The lamp had been lighted but apparently did not burn, and Mrs. Flynt poured some alcohol upon it from a bottle. Evidently there was a slight flame which had not been noticed, for the fluid exploded, but fortunately the bottle in her hand did not break, and the burning stuff shot out of its neck like a discharge from a gun, spreading over the draperies of the window which Mrs. Flynt was facing. These blazed up fiercely, but Mr. Flynt was in the yard at the side of the house and by quick work succeeded in smothering the blaze with quilts taken from the bed in the room. The damage was about $200 or $250.

Palmer merchants are to make the experiment of running a free "Merchants' Excursion train" to Thorndike on certain evenings, in the hope of drawing more trade from that place and also from Three Rivers, as the train will stop at the town house crossing to accommodate Three Rivers people. The first trip of the train will be a week from to-morrow evening, Saturday, November 10th, and other trips have been arranged for November 24th, December 8th and 22d. The train will leave Palmer at 9.10 in the evening, which will give Thorndike people from 5.20 to 9.10 in Palmer, and Three Rivers people from 6.45 to 9.10. Passage on the train will be free, but passengers must have tickets, and these cannot be procured at the ticket office, but will be given by Palmer merchants on application. An effort is being made to get a rate for a train to Monson and Barrett's Junction on the New London road, to run alternate Saturday nights with the one to Thorndike; if this arrangement is made Bondsville people will be accommodated, and Three Rivers people will then be landed at their own station, and not be obliged to walk from the town house crossing.

Editor of the Journal:—It is not pleasant to criticise the conduct of our schools, especially while the office of superintendent is locally an experiment, but there are two matters which are causing considerable adverse comment. (1) The intermission known as recess has been abolished. It is true that our children are permitted to march in a line to an out house, under discipline, like the inmates of a reformatory, and generally are allowed to leave the school-room upon request. They are, however, kept under a nervous strain and the teachers also from the beginning to the end of each session of school. Such a rule seems to be both unnecessary in a country town, and positively injurious to health. The healthful exercise of recess relieves the nerves and prepares both the minds and bodies of pupils for renewed effort. (2) It would seem that there is too much written and too little oral instruction in the grammar and primary grades. As far as the writer can ascertain, a judicious commingling of both oral and written instruction has been found to accomplish the best results. It is safe to say that no extraordinary rule or proceedure is necessary to cause the citizens of Palmer to appreciate the office of superintendent of schools for all that it is worth.

BONDSVILLE.

The W. C. T. U. met with Mrs. Mark Culver Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. S. P. Weld is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Charles White, in Amherst.

Rev. Albert L. Squier and wife left Monday for their home in Amherst.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Moore of Springfield were the guests of Fred Moore this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Moore of Brimfield visited their son, George Moore, this week.

Harry Lee of Feeding Hills spent a few days last week with his father, George Lee.

Mrs. James Fuller is visiting her son, E. J. Fuller, at Forest Lake a few days this week.

Charles Russell has moved into his cottage on Main street, which he bought of Fred Collis a year ago.

C. S. O'Regan returned home Thursday from Chicopee Falls, where he has been visiting his aunt, Mrs. J. B. Belcher.

The special services which are being held in the Methodist church this week are having a good attendance, and will be continued all next week.

THORNDIKE.

Wm. J. McCormick has taken the agency for the Amherst Steam Laundry.

One of Rev. E. B. Blanchard's hens has laid an egg measuring 6x8½ inches.

Dr. Wm. Hutchinson of New York city is visiting his parents on High street.

Miss Mary McCarthy returned on Monday from a visit with her sister in Holyoke.

T. J. Clifford, proprietor of the Clinton Hotel, is confined to his home by illness.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Baker of Springfield have been the guests of Wm. A. Samson for a few days.

A large number from this place will go to Ware on Sunday to attend the dedication of All Saint's church.

Several from this place have attended the mission which has been held at Bondsville recently by the Paulist Fathers.

Mr. and Mrs. James F. Loftus are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son, which came to them on Tuesday.

Mrs. John Molloy is making an improvement in her real estate on Commercial street, having raised the roof on the building about a half story.

Services at St. Mary's church on Sunday next will be at 8.30 instead of 10, in order to give the pastor a chance to attend the dedication at Ware.

Wednesday's rain did a great amount of good; in some locations where they have been without water for months the wells and springs are beginning to fill up again.

Raffles are the proper thing it seems just now, as the holidays are approaching, and many are availing themselves of chicken dinners this week as a result of Saturday's winnings

Tickets will be on sale next week for the concert to be given by the Columbian Band on Thanksgiving Eve. They can be had from members of the band, and also at the post office.

Thursday being the feast of All Saints, masses were celebrated at the Catholic church in the morning; to-day being All Souls' Day, a requiem mass was celebrated for the deceased by the pastor, Rev. F. J. Lynch.

Francis Smith, 66 years, an old French resident, died at his home on Church street last Saturday afternoon, after a short illness. The announcement of his death was a surprise to the residents of the village. His funeral took place on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock from St. Anne's church, of which he was a member. A wife and several children survive him.

This village has, during the past week, presented a busy appearance in the locality of Commercial street, at least, where a gang of men in the employ of John Keenan and Warren are engaged putting in concrete walks. The fever is still raging, and we only hope it will continue long enough to have it spread the whole length of Commercial street, as good walks are much needed in town. Mr. Adams is the latest addition to those already having the work done.

The Kickapoo Indian Medicine Co., under the management of Mr. H. Wells, are here for a two-weeks' stay, and judging from the audiences they have been having thus far they are likely to remain the alloted time. The entertainments which are given every evening free of admission are worthy of mention, being first-class in their line. The performers, Messrs. Calligan, Meimel and Mathews, are artists of no low class, and although they are seen continually every evening they are well received and given hearty applause. To-morrow afternoon an entertainment will be given exclusively for children; on Saturday night a double bill will be presented, and a small fee of ten cents will be charged.

THREE RIVERS.

Walter Herren is recovering from the effects of ague.

Miss Allen of Belchertown is the guest of Miss Anna Murdock.

Albert Lamerine is seriously ill of erysipelas in the head.

A valuable horse belonging to W. F. Fillmore died this week.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Hartnett are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son.

Miss Mary Martin spent a few days this week in Chicopee, visiting relatives.

Mrs. Flower of Agawam spent a few days during the week with Mrs. R. C. Newell.

Communion will be observed at the M. E church next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Coyer are rejoicing in the advent of a daughter, born Wednesday.

Several persons from this place attended the Seidl concert in Springfield Wedesday night.

Harry Newell of Amherst College spent a few days at home this week on account of illness.

Mrs. Vanert has returned to Spencer, after spending a few weeks in this place among friends.

Three Chinamen have been in town this week, endeavoring to procure a building in which to open a laundry.

Herbert Sholes, James Wilson and Merton Twogood are receiving musical instruction from Mr. Cases, a violinist of Springfield.

Miss Rosa Blanchet has resigned her position as book keeper in J. B. Brown & Co's. store, and will make her future home in Springfield.

Mrs. Henderson, who has been ill of typhoid fever for several weeks, died last Sunday, and her husband is seriously ill with the same disease.

Cyrus Brown, formerly engineer at the mill, has resigned his position and the vacancy is being filled for the present by Arthur Barton.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hillman and Miss Myra Field enjoyed a carriage ride to North Hatfield Wednesday, in order to attend the wedding of a friend.

The politician who made a long journey one day this week in order to solicit favor of a local merchant had his political aspiration somewhat dampened when he discovered that the merchant's brother-in-law was seeking the coveted office.

All saints' day was observed at St. Anne's church yesterday, and Rev. Joseph Marchand administered communion to about forty children, who are preparing for confirmation, the ceremony being expected to take place some time next year.

The subject for the sermon at the Baptist church next Sunday morning will be: "Christians as temples of the holy spirit," and in the evening there will be a prayer meeting at 6 o'clock, followed by a preaching service at 7, the subject of which will be: 'Jesus' reply to the rejectors of the gospel."

Last Sunday as John Wilson was leading a horse to the watering trough, the animal kicked Mr. Wilson severely in the temple, rendering him unconscious for several minutes. Blood flowed profusely from the wound, and quite a little anxiety was felt by his family for several hours after the accident, but he has nearly recovered from his injury.

Last Friday evening, through the courtesy of Mr. Kendrick, the guests at his boarding house, with some of their friends, were given a musical treat. Mr. Needham officiated at the piano, and George Howard gave a varied program of songs, which were enthusiastically received, and all who were present are desirous of being again favored with the musical accomplishments of the Messrs. Howard and Needham.

The members of the W. C. T. U. were full of regret Friday afternoon on being obliged to accept the resignation of Miss Lucy Graves, recording secretary of the society. Miss Graves has served in this office for a long time with credit to herself and satisfaction to all the members, but owing to a change of occupation she was unable to retain the office any longer. Mrs. F. A. Upham was elected to fill the vacancy, and it was decided to hold the next meeting at the home of Mrs. Freak.

The Chautauqua circle held its weekly meeting in the room over the Company's office Monday evening, and spent a very profitable time. The action of glaciers was described by Miss Clara Greene and Miss Louise White, and Arthur Warriner and Fred White ably described the formation of rock beds. The next meeting will be held in the above named place at 7.30 o'clock next Monday evening, Nov. 5, and the Circle extends a cordial invitation to every one interested in such matters to favor the discussions with their presence.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

A New Pastor for St. Patrick's Church.

Rev. John F. Lee read his resignation as pastor of St. Patrick's Catholic church last Sunday morning, and left town Wednesday for his new appointment at Jeffersonville. In the nine years which Fr. Lee has been in Monson he has been very popular with young and old of all classes, and much sorrow is expressed at losing him. He has served on the school committee for two or more years, having charge of the Green street schools, in which he has taken much interest. On Wednesday morning the children called on him and bade him good-bye. Fr. Lee is a public spirited man, and has had the good of the town at heart. When his parishioners have been ill his calls have been as frequent as the doctor's, and where money has been needed he has not hesitated to give it. A petition signed by nearly all his church that he might be allowed to remain here was sent to the bishop, but without effect. Father O'Keefe of West Springfield arrived Tuesday to take his place.

Frank L. Bliss is sick with typhoid fever.

Mrs. Lucinda White is spending a few days in Worcester.

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday night at 7 o'clock.

Lena Hobbs, daughter of George Hobbs, has the scarlet fever.

William H. Gifford has bought the Eleazer Moore property on Flynt avenue.

Hiram Bradway has recently shot a fox measuring 4½ feet.

George Wills has returned home from the Philadelphia Dental College.

Mrs. W. Charles McMaster visited friends in Prescott from Saturday till Tuesday.

A honeysuckle in William N. Flynt's yard is in bloom the second time this year.

Miss Esther Gage of Somerville has been visiting friends in town for the past week.

Mrs. Ames of Springfield has been the guest of Miss Clara A. Wood for a week.

Miss Maud E. Strong will have charge of the Silver Street meeting Sunday afternoon.

The Dorcas Society will meet next Wednesday at 2 p. m. with Mrs. Alvin Merchant.

The Misses Stockton of Cleveland, Ohio, were the guests of Mrs. E. F. Morris this week.

Miss Whittaker of Amherst has been the guest of her aunt, Mrs. James Tufts, this week.

A barrell of clothing has been sent to Mrs. Steele's Orphan's Home at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mrs. Inez Farrell has moved into the tenement vacated by T. H. Todd in Bacon's block.

Remember the election day dinner served by the Woman's Relief Corps in Memorial Hall.

The Cushman House dining room has been greatly improved this week by new paint and paper.

Mrs. George C. Flynt has been called to Brooklyn on account of the illness of her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Squier are spending the week with their daughter, Mrs. William Best, in Roxbury.

The preparatory lecture was given last evening, and communion will be held at the Congregational church Sunday morning.

An electric light has been placed at the entrance of Memorial Hall, thereby supplying a long-felt want.

Frank A. Bills has moved his stock into his new store north of Simmons's clothing establishment.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the M. E. church will give an oyster supper next Friday evening, followed by an entertainment.

Mrs. David Coburn has procured a pair of English hackneys, and they are without exception the finest pair of horses in town.

Herbert C. Norcross is to move about the 20th, his stock of groceries and hardware into the store just vacated by T. L. Todd.

L. H. Todd was married at Ansonia, Ct., Wednesday, and has gone to housekeeping in Wilbur M. Fay's house on Washington street.

Misses Hattie and Nellie Jerome, who have been guests at Henry M. Barlow's, returned to their home in Worcester Monday.

Prof. Edward L. Morris, assistant in the biological department in Amherst College, is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Morris.

Mr. and Mrs. George Phillips returned Wednesday from Newark, N. J., where they went to celebrate their twentieth anniversary of their marriage.

Monday was the fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of Rev. and Mrs. F. S. Hatch, and they were generously remembered by their people.

Mrs. Joseph Sunter died early Wednesday morning at her home in the Munn district after a short illness. She leaves a husband and three children. The funeral was held today.

Mrs. M. C. Brockbank of Stafford Springs, Ct., a former resident of Monson, is in town this week. She and her daughter Grace expect to leave soon for California, to make their home with Dr. and Mrs. Pliny Watts.

Miss Nellie Leary of West Warren, whose illness was mentioned in last week's JOURNAL, died Saturday, and the remains were brought to Monson Tuesday for burial in St. Patrick's cemetery.

Monson people have received cards for the wedding of Miss Marian Lulu Stanley to Winfield Scott Parks Nov. 15th in Boston. Miss Stanley will be remembered as a reader who has been here several times.

Mrs. Charles C. Keep gave her Sunday school class of six or eight boys a picnic last Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. Keep took them in teams to Peaked Mountain, where they spent a most delightful day.

Rev. H. W. Pope, secretary of the International Christian Workers' Association, is expected to spend Sunday in town. If so he will assist the pastor of the Congregational church in the morning service.

Harlow Chapin's illness took a very serious turn this week, and a council was held Wednesday. Owing to Mr. Chapin's sickness his son Harry is home from Tufts College. He is now critically ill.

Dr. George E. Fuller has had an invitation to give a course of lectures on surgery in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Boston, which he has declined on account of a pressure of business at home.

The high water at the collecting well of the water works system is causing much trouble. Although three pumps are in use they are not sufficient to overcome the difficulty. All the pipe with the exception of four car loads is here.

The Park Avenue Association has sold a lot on Main street to Joseph M. Lambert for $900. The managers are laying out streets and avenues, and will soon have lots which they will put on the market at prices which will readily sell them.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church celebrated their sixth anniversary last Sunday evening. The papers were interesting, and the singing, which was by a choir composed of members of the societies, was good.

The Demorest silver medal contest, under the direction of Prof. Croy, took place last Friday evening, the six contestants doing exceeding well. The prize was awarded Miss Myrtis Perrin. Another class has been formed, and a third contest will take place soon.

Rev. Ray Allen of Rochester, N. Y., addressed the first of a series of six meetings of the Missionary Extension movement, at the Congregational church Wednesday evening. The attendance was fair and the speaker interesting. The second meeting will be held in about a month at the Methodist church.

Names of pupils in the No. 1 intermediate who have been neither absent nor tardy during the past month: Ernest Hale, Maggie Birmingham, Bridget Moriarty, Maud Hauck, Katie Looney, Lizzie Broadfoot, Mary Dewar, May Meaney, Grace Maguire, Annie Fitzgerald, John Maguire, Harold Shaw, Robert Flynt, Carl Chaffee, James Fitzgerald, Thomas Purcell.

The decorated china at W. N. Flynt & Sons' store, showing photographs of the Memorial Hall, the library and soldiers' monument, and the academy, has attracted much attention. The company had the work done in Germany, using the best of china, and has put it on sale at the cost price. It finds a ready sale, over half has already been sold.

Between 5 and 6 o'clock Wednesday morning Adelbert W. Ferry had occasion to go to the Methodist church, of which he is sexton. As he neared the church he saw by the light of his lantern a woman sitting on the steps. Mr. Ferry spoke to her and she said that she had spent the night there, having left her pocketbook on the train between Palmer and Monson. Later Mr. Ferry saw her going to the north. From the description given in the Springfield papers of Mabel Gibbons, who escaped from one of the institutions there, Mr. Ferry thinks it was she.

The Y. P. C. U. held its annual meeting at the home of Rev. Harry Blackford Wednesday. There were about 26 present. The following officers were elected: President, Miss Mamie Hobbs; vice president, Miss Carrie L. Chapin; corresponding secretary, Miss Gertrude Bennett; recording secretary, Miss Ellie Aldrich; treasurer, Miss Alice Parke; chairman of the devotional committee, Miss Lena Babbitt; chairman of lookout committee, Charles W. King; chairman of social committee, William L. Ricketts.

Clifton Aldrich died early Saturday morning at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Aldrich, on East Hill. The funeral was held Monday, Rev. Harry Blackford officiating. Although Mr. Aldrich has had consumption for some years, his death was sudden. A peculiar circumstance connected with his illness is that two years ago, when his death seemed but a question of days, he was struck by lightning and soon began to be better, and in a short time was able to be about, and has done light work on the farm more or less till within the last week of his life. He was 21 years of age.

A meeting of the school committee was held Wednesday. The fall term closes the 23d of this month, and the winter term begins December 3d, and will last twelve weeks, an intermission of one week being allowed at Christmas. The resignation of Miss Idella Anderson was accepted, and also those of Miss Marion Anderson and Harry Blanchard. The following changes in teachers were made: Miss Lizzie Maguire of Moulton Hill was promoted to No. 8 primary school; Miss E. C. Davis of Ware was appointed to North Monson; Miss Minnie Corbin was transferred to Child's district; Miss Esther Keep was given Pease district; Miss Clara Sutcliffe Moulton Hill school. The committee also voted to close Gage district if the attendance did not exceed an average of three or four, and to make some arrangement for transporting the pupils to some of the other schools.

Miss Nellie Leary, one of our popular school teachers, died at her home Saturday evening. A solemn requiem high mass was celebrated at the Catholic church, and the schools closed one session so that the teachers and scholars could attend the funeral. The interment was in Monson.

BRIMFIELD.

Mrs. Peabody of Waterbury, Ct., has been spending a few days with her sister, Mrs. H. L. Converse.

The ladies of the Second church held an ice cream social at the home of Mrs. Edward Hitchcock on Hallowe'en.

Mrs. Lucinda Haynes, aged 96 years, died Wednesday. She was born in Palmer, but most of her life was passed in this town. She was the wife of Walter Haynes, who died at the advanced age of 103 years.

The marriage of Miss Susie Miller Brown to Mr. John Howard Seymour, the 1st, at Peoria, Ill., has local interest, as Mr. and Mrs. George A. Brown, parents of the bride, were former residents here, and Miss Brown has often visited in town.

HAMPDEN.

Nelson Pease and his mother have returned to their farm on the Scantic.

Fred Chichester has bought the charcoal route of the late A. O. Thresher's estate.

Bert Thresher has returned from a three-months' stay in Canada, with improved health.

Mrs. A. H. Thompson has returned from a visit in western Hampden and Berkshire counties.

James Martin came near "knocking the two eyes into one" forour fish peddler, though it is said that the peddler recently was the aggressor.

Miss B. Hamilton of Springfield has been giving a course of lectures or "talks" to the ladies, which were very interesting and instructive, and closed with a public one last week Tuesday evening, and though some criticized the most approved.

Our road commissioners are being criticised severely for their action in regard to the Scantic bridge. Last April the town voted to build a wooden bridge, and they procured the timber for the same, when some parties decided they had better get a second-hand iron bridge and threatened to put on an injunction if they proceeded, and they meekly acquiesced, although they had the vote of the town to back them, and will wait until after town meeting.

WARREN.

Invitations are out for the wedding of Miss Kate Elizabeth Towne and Rev. F. F. Thayer of Holyoke. The marriage will take place next Wednesday at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Towne, on Maple street. Mr. and Mrs. Thayer will make their home in Holyoke.

Jacob Finley, an old citizen of this place, died Monday morning at his home on Main street. His death resulted from prostration, caused by injuries which he received last week. Mr. Finley was 87 years old and had lived in the house where his death occurred over 50 years. He was the oldest member of the Congregational church, and much respected by all who knew him. He leaves one daughter, Mrs. Henry Barrett of Barre. The funeral was held yesterday at 1 p. m., at his residence.

The suit of Mrs. Ellie Randall against Nelson Randall for alienating her husband's affections was non suited in court last week. The case is one which has created a good deal of interest. Mrs. Randall claimed desertion and lack of support for herself and child. Mr. Randall claimed that his wife tried to impose on him as his own, a child which she had adopted. The matter ended by Mrs. Randall bringing suit against her husband's father for alienating her husband's affections. She is now living in Holyoke.

A CARD.—We extend our sincere thanks to our neighbors and friends for their expressions of sympathy, tributes of love and kind assistance in our hour of affliction and bereavement.
EDWARD A. and LAURA P. ALDRICH.

A CARD.—To all who, by kind words and helpful deeds, expressed their sympathy for and friendship to me during my recent bereavement, I wish to return sincere and heartfelt thanks; also to the donors of the many beautiful floral offerings.

SMITH COLLEGE.

Fashions for November will be ready Thursday. It will be replete with up to date, fashions, and will contain and an interesting article on the recent Sophomore Reception to the Freshman at Smith College, by an eye witness of the occasion.

DRESS GOODS.

It's an unusual thing to see the prices on the season's new and fashionable fabrics cut thus early in the season; but the unexpected often happens here.

And not half enough people have heard of it yet. There should be more people after them, though we're having all we can do.

COLORED DRESS GOODS.

At 25 cents a yard—Light and dark mixtures, 36 to 38 inches wide, that have been thirty-seven and one-half and fifty cents a yard.

At 25 cents—Ten mixtures of wool suitings, 50 inches wide, that have been fifty cents a yard.

At 25 cents—Twenty-four mixtures of fancy wool suitings, almost every wanted combination or color, made to retail at fifty cents a yard.

At 37½ cents—Twenty-four mixtures of fancy wool suitings, almost every wanted combination or color, made to retail at fifty cents a yard.

At 37½ cents—Plain all-wool French and domestic serges, 38, 40 and 42 inches wide, almost every shade and color wanted; goods that have sold at fifty, fifty-five and sixty-two and one-half cents a yard.

At 37½ cents a yard—We have filled a whole table with a great variety of fashionable and stylish things ranging in widths from 38 to 42 inches wide and including almost any kind of a mixture; goods that have sold for fifty cents a yard.

At 55 cents a yard—An imported all-wool dress suiting, 40 inches wide, twenty different mixtures for a choice; never before so a less than seventy-five cents a yard.

Left aisle.

BLACK DRESS GOODS.

At 55 cents a yard—We have put in together a great many qualities of plain and fancy black dress goods. The lot includes fancy weaves, armures, henriettas, Bedford cords, Indian twills, etc., 30 to 45 inches wide; goods that have been selling at sixty, sixty-five, seventy five, eighty and eighty-seven and one-half cents a yard.

SILKS.

No doubt about the goodness and worth of John D. Cutter's black silks; their wearing qualifications are too well known to need any comment.

But here they are being sold under price. Won't say why. Nothing whatever the matter; examine them at the counter.

Black taffeta, 20½ inches wide, regular seventy-five cent quality

HAYNES & CO.

LAST WEEK was a RECORD BREAKER in SALES. FALL and WINTER SUITS, OVERCOATS and TROUSERS are the TOPICS TO-DAY.

LAST WEEK'S SALES

Were the largest, compared with the corresponding weeks of other years, in the history of the store. This is saying a good deal, in view of the trading that has always been done here, as well as the fact that this is considered more or less of an "off year" for business. It speaks volumes for the value-giving qualities of the establishment, and shows clearly enough that the intelligent, thinking, purchasing public is amply qualified to discriminate between "mushroom" and honest business methods.

MEN'S WINTER OVERCOATS.

A magnificent assortment of the very latest and most stylish garments at prices that were scarcely ever dreamed of.

AT $8.50. Fine single-breasted Kerseys and Beavers in Blue and Black and Oxford Mixtures, cut long, full lined and Velvet collar. Just such as sold for $12 last season.

CHINCHILLAS: Everybody knows what Chinchillas are, a splendid rough faced fabric that looks well, wears better, and sells for less proportionately, than any other garment on the market. These come in Blues and Blacks, well made, very latest styles, thoroughly lined—in fact complete in all particulars. $12, $15, $18, $20, $22, $24 and $25. No one could expect better value.

AT $10 AND $12. Beavers and Meltons in Blues and Blacks. The very finest garments, cut long, full back with wide Velvet collar. Very latest style. Do not expect to equal these at less than $15.

THE KENSINGTON: If anyone had said five years ago that such a coat as the "Kensington" would ever be sold in a retail store, he would have been thought demented. This is really a magnificent coat. Cut very full and extra long—50 to 54 inches. Made of the finest Kerseys, in two colors, Blue and Black—it is altogether such a coat as will satisfy the most fastidious and dressy men of the period. The prices start at $20—next at $22, $24, $26 and $28.

MEN'S AND YOUNG MEN'S SACK SUITS

The latest Fall and Winter Styles, the finest materials, single and double-breasted, latest style Cheviots; neat, thoroughly well made, built for style as well as for service; bound or stitched edge. Lengths 32¼ and 33 inches.

$10, $12, $14, $16 and $18.

$15.50—THE BEST—$15.50.

This is the same suit—the one we sold for three years: Clay Worsted, three-button Cutaway, all lengths, Regent style, dovet-ailed effects. There can be no question about it. Other dealers have imitated it, but ours stand as far above the best of them as the rays of Miss Liberty's torch above the waters of the New York Bay. The "McMillan" Trousers—there can be only one "McMillan," and these are ours. (Five styles—Stripes, Mixtures, Dark Gray, Brown, heavy, all Long Fiber Wool, thoroughly well made, fit well, latest style.) We control them buying two to three thousand pairs a season. We have these in all sizes up to 54-inch waist—it doesn't cost you 50 cents extra if you are a large man. Your size, your price are always here in trousers—that's a sure thing.

Do you ever wash your hair brush? This is the best way: —Put one teaspoonful of Pearline into a basin of warm water; wash the brush thoroughly in it; rinse in clean water, and set it aside, bristles down, to dry. This is only one—a small one—of the numberless uses to which you can put Pearline. Once you have it in the house, you will find something new for it to do, every day. It does your washing and cleaning better than soap. Try it on anything for which you've been using soap, and see.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 571 JAMES PYLE, New York.

The Railroad Man, The Clergyman, The Business Man, and all other men who have to look neat while at work, should know about "CELLULOID" COLLARS AND CUFFS. They look exactly like linen, wear well and being waterproof do not wilt down with heat and moisture. They do not soil easily and can be cleaned in a moment by simply wiping off with a wet sponge or cloth. Do not confuse these in your mind with composition goods. Every piece of the genuine is stamped like this:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Ask for these and refuse anything else if you wish satisfaction. Remember that goods so marked are the only waterproof goods made by coating a linen collar with waterproof "Celluloid," thus giving strength and durability. If your dealer should not have the "Celluloid" send amount direct to us and we will mail you sample post-paid. Collars 25c. each. Cuffs, 50c. pair. Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton, Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhœa of long standing in six hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results, and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine, and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles.

For a pain in the side or chest there is nothing so good as a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It affords prompt and permanent relief, and if used in time will often prevent a cold from resulting in pneumonia. This same treatment is a sure cure for lame back.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

DRAMAS MADE IN DREAMS.

A curious example of the dramatic and mythopœic quality in dreams, and out of the power of compressing time, was once related to me by a lady. She, in her dream, was sitting in her room looking out on a beautiful, clear autumn twilight. She heard a knock, heralding visitors, and going down stairs, found two strangers in her parlor. One she recognized—a relative who had died in her childhood. He was a little old gentleman, in a brown dress of the early part of the century. With him was a handsome lady in a Spanish mantilla. They had on the table before them a small, ancient, iron-bound chest. At this moment (still in the dream) a servant entered with tea or some such refreshment, and lo! the visitors vanished. The servant went out, and there were the visitors again. They had opened the coffer, and displayed two sets of yellow old documents. One was a list of securities, one a list of names. The lady in the mantilla explained, while the old gentleman nodded assent, that he and she had been betrothed, and that she had died before their marriage. The old gentleman had gone abroad at the peace of Amiens, had been caught and detained on the outbreak of war, and this had led to some accident in his affairs by which the coffer and its contents had been neglected, and the securities were still lying unclaimed.

"They are," said the lady of the mantilla, "now in the keeping of Messrs. ——." A knock at the door. Enter maid with tea, the maid in flesh and blood; and disappearance of the dream. The solicitors' names were never communicated

Now, the dream-mind clearly started from the maid's first tap at the door. This was the knock announcing the arrival of the visitors in the dream. All the rest of the scenes were a myth, invented by the dream-mind to account for the first half-heard tap. The dream mind created the person of the old forgotten relative, and invented without any assistance from conscious memory, the lady of the mantilla, and her love story, and her death. The box, the securities, all the dresses and properties, were improvised by the dream-mind and placed on the stage of vision.

All this was done, all this drama performed, merely as a myth accounting for the first tap; and everything was invented, staged and acted in the moment between the first tap at the door and the second.—Andrew Lang.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Strong and Powerful Words from Those Who Know Whereof They Speak. Being Prominent People, Everybody Knows Their Words Are True.

HON. WM. J. FISHER.

More wonderful grow the cures, and more noted and prominent those who have been cured by that greatest medicine in the world, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

The strength of these splendid testimonials coming from well-known persons, gives to them such convincing power that the foremost men and women in the land are taking it because they know it will do exactly what people say it will.

One of the best known and honored men, Hon. William J. Fisher of Whallonsburg, N. Y., speaks as follows about himself and his estimable wife:

"Nine years ago I had malarial fever which developed into a severe case of Bright's disease. I saw a celebrated specialist who said I could live but a short time. I employed several eminent physicians. They all said I had Bright's disease, but none of them cured me.

"My wife, who was using Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy with great benefit, advised me to try it. I commenced using it and almost immediately began to improve. I took four bottles and was then entirely cured and made a well man in every respect. I tell you it was wonderful, this medicine doing what no other medicines or physicians could do. I don't wonder it has got the name of being a wonderful remedy.

"My wife has been troubled with erysipelas, salt rheum and nervous debility. She has tried several medicines, but Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy has done her more good than anything she has ever taken. She is rapidly getting well under its use. We both consider this medicine the best remedy in the world."

The wonderful cures performed by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy have become so wide-spread that everybody takes it. The best physicians everywhere advise and recommend its use, for they know its great and remarkable power to cure. Use it if you wish to get back your health.

Why waste time in trying uncertain and untried remedies when here is a physician's prescription, a discovery made by the greatest living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. If you take this medicine you can consider yourself under Dr. Greene's direct professional care, and you can consult him or write to him about your case freely and without charge. This is a guarantee that this remedy will cure, possessed by no other medicine in the world.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

THE WORLD'S FOOD FAIR.

The World's Food Fair, which closed last Saturday after an exhibition of four weeks in Mechanics' Building, has been, to quote a Boston paper, "one of the most popular and it is believed the most successful fair ever held in Boston." To have seen and heard everything one would need to have gone every morning and to have staid the whole twelve hours; yet much could be seen and learned in one day's visit.

The fair was called "The World's Food Fair," because it was practically the exhibit in this department of the World's Fair at Chicago. In plan and scope it was much like the Health Food Fair held in Boston three years ago, with such new exhibits as three years of invention have added, and several other new features. The fair occupied the three floors of Mechanics' Building; on the first floor was the food exhibit proper, consisting of preparations of cereals, meats and other staple food products. On the second floor was what might be called the accessories food products, as extracts, confectionary and like products; here were also the manufacturers of light articles, the glass blower, the bent-wire jeweler, and here were kitchen utensils and like articles. In this floor was exhibited the silver statue of Montana which was at Chicago, and in apartments by itself was the Home Department, one of the most interesting and instructive exhibitions of the fair. In this department was shown the model kitchen with the latest improvements and inventions in kitchen furnishings.

There was a hygienic sleeping room, in which the bedstead was of white enamaled iron, brass tipped, the dressing case and other articles of furniture light, yet strong, all painted white. The coverlid and draperies were all of white lace and white muslin, and adjoining, in an alcove, was a convenient bath and other toilet accessories, all simple and arranged to allow only the least possible accumulation of dust. The moral of the word hygiene in this relation evidently was "keep clean."

It was in the Home Department that Mrs. A. D. Lincoln gave daily morning cooking lecture at 10:30, and in the afternoon there was another lecture upon some subject pertaining to the housecho'd or housekeeping.

Here every day was the "Banquet table display," representing a spread banquet of first one nation or one style and then another. I copy from the programme of the last week: "Edible Flowers," "Dietetic Luncheon," "Japanese Ceremonial Tea," "Tennis Luncheon," "A Family Breakfast," "Spanish Day," "A Butterfly Luncheon," "A Hallowe'en Spread."

To name a few of the newest and most novel exhibits, I notice the codfish and fish exhibit, in which the salted and pickled fish is shown in all the preparations in the market, the "hatcheled" codfish being the most novel. Its name describes it. It appears white and fluffy, and is ready to be made into fish balls without chopping.

The shredded wheat is another novelty. This looks, and, I am bound to say, tastes, not unlike excelsior. It is said to contain, however, highly nutritive properties. It is prepared in a machine by processes which the exhibit shows, by which every part of the whole wheat grain is retained except the outer covering, or husk. The shredded wheat manufactured at the fair was made into bread, biscuits and breakfast food; it was also roasted and made into coffee. Its inventor, Mr. A. D. Perky, is an enthusiast and maintains that a diet of shredded wheat, with milk and fruits, is more conducive to bodily and mental health and strength than any other diet. Yet one's appetite would need to be educated up to it, I am sure, for it was only those persons who are searching for that food which will best sustain life with the least tax of time in preparation and upon the system in digestion, who caught the enthusiasm of its inventor and enjoyed his luncheons.

We are indeed being educated! Here was beef extract put up in capsules daintily protected by tin-foil, and tea tablets, either of which by the application of boiling water in two minutes is converted into a delicious drink. Imagine it, look forward and long for it, do what you can to bring it about, oh, weary housekeeper, the day when we will take all our nourishment condensed in tablet form, either held in the mouth till dissolved or prepared with hot water. I can imagine the transition; the Aladdin oven will come into use and go out of fashion, more and more gradually food products will be prepared to be easily and quickly converted into concoctions for the table, till at length all forms of food will come to us in condensed tablet form. There will then be no more cooks nor need of them. Arrange your tablets in beautiful dishes; this is tea, this is meat, this is vegetable, "press the button, the boiling water does the rest." Only when that happy day comes it will not be tea, nor meat nor vegetable; these terms will have been forgotten as meaningless; we shall take so many protein grams, so many fat grams, so many carbo-hydrate grams, so many caloric grams, appointed according to our age, sex, occupation and condition; we shall eat (or drink) to live, and our pleasures will not include eating nor drinking, but will be in social, intellectual and spiritual exercises.

The advance in scientific investigations of food productions and the practical application of this knowledge shown at the fair within even three years, suggests these reflections and anticipations. Meantime in the basement, the electric working butter and cheese dairy attracted much attention, and near by the ice manufactory, which may be run by water, steam or electric power, where distilled water was offered to visitors and pure ice crystals were manufactured, set one thinking of the Utopia of the kitchen and the dining room.

This exhibition was arranged by the Boston Retail Grocers' Association, whose motto is "Pure goods, honest weights, and fair profits," and everything here could be relied upon as being exactly what it pretended to be. It would be impossible to give in so short a space anything like a list of the numerous exhibits or any description of the artistic display, the fine music and the interested crowds that one saw at the fair, so I have not attempted it; when it comes again, as it is sure to come, everyone of you should see for herself what the world is doing to help us grow healthy and wise.

FRANCES VIRILLA DOANE.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

Marvellous Result's.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. Dr. King's New Discovery, for consumption, coughs and colds, each bottle guaranteed—Electric Bitters, the great remedy for liver, stomach and kidneys. Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world, and Dr. King's New Life Pills, which are a perfect pill. All these remedies are guaranteed to do just what is claimed for them, and the dealer whose name is attached herewith will be glad to tell you more of them. Sold at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

ODDITIES IN ETIQUETTE.

Ladies seldom rise in Spain to receive a male visitor, and they rarely accompany him to the door For a Spaniard to give a lady, even his wife, his arm while out walking is looked upon as a violation of propriety.

No Turk will ever enter a sitting-room with dirty shoes. The upper classes wear tight-fitting shoes with galoshes over them. The latter, which receive all the dirt and dust, are left outside the door. The Turk never washes in dirty water. Water is poured over his hands, so that when polluted it runs away.

In Syria the people never take off their hats or turbans when entering the house or visiting a friend, but they always leave their shoes at the door. There are no mats or scrapers outside, and the floors are covered with expensive rugs, kept very clean in Moslem houses and used to kneel upon while praying.

In Persia, among the aristocracy, a visitor sends notice an hour or two before calling and gives a day's notice if the visit is one of great importance. He is met by servants before he reaches the house, and other considerations are shown him according to relative rank. The left and not the right is considered the position of honor.

In Sweden, if you address the poorest person on the street, you must lift your hat. The same courtesy is insisted upon if you pass a lady on the stairway. To enter a reading room or a bank with one's hat on is regarded as impolite.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

SLOCUM'S OZONIZED Norwegian COD LIVER OIL WITH GUAIACOL

There is not the least mystery about Slocum's Ozonized Norwegian Cod Liver Oil, with Guaiacol. The proprietors are perfectly willing to tell what it is made of. First the oil, of course. Then

Ozone,

a very active form of Oxygen, full of healthful, healing properties, and finally Guaiacol or purified creosote, made from the resin of beechwood. United in a compound pleasant to take and certain to be retained on the stomach, these three foes to disease cure consumption.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

TO THE WORLD OF WOMEN.

Mothers and Daughters Restored to Health and Strength.

Weak, nervous, delicate, overworked women are the ones that need a strength builder, a tonic for their nerves, and a cure for that awful internal trouble that is wearing out their lives. Thousands of women have found such in Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Mrs. Christiana Beal, of Jonesport, Me., writes that her daughter had been a great sufferer from female trouble, and after repeated trials of doctor's prescriptions and other so-called cures, she used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and it permanently cured her.

If you have headache, uterine catarrh, leucorrhœa, or irregular monthly sickness, chronic weakness, bearing down incidental to change of life, or any of the attending evils that are present in female complaints, use Favorite Remedy, for it will build up quickly the run down constitution and bring refreshing sleep. It will dispel those tired looks and feelings, restore the nervous system and permanently cure you. Our daughters grow up weak and delicate; mothers can avoid such conditions by giving them Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. 32

Life, you and I have stood now face to face
For many years;
Look deep into my eyes—there will you trace
Your myriad tears;
Touch you my cheek, and see; its rounded place
A drawn look wears!
Ah, Life! lift off from me a little space
Your blighting cares.

Dreams—we have spent full many a lingering hour
Of heaven-sweet rest
Together.—Wrapped in your most secret bower
With vision blest.
I've seen the budding of Love's fairy flower
Within my breast;
His golden petals ra ned a plenteous shower
At your behest

Love, we have lived through many a peerless day
Of happiness.
When Life did, with her melancholy gray,
My heart depress—
When she her tempests loosed, I sought your ray
Through storm and stress,
And found you, faithful Love, a power alway
My soul to bless.

And soon, oh, unknown Death! we'll have to meet
In closest wise.
Oft in the solemn nights I hear your feet,
I catch your eyes.
Grant, when my soul is brought her summons sweet
To distant skies,
That your pale form my ebbing life may greet
In fair disguise
Of love and dreams—who with me then may fleet
When silence lies.

EARLY CUSTOMS AND MANNERS IN NEW ENGLAND.

When Queen Elizabeth's court was most brilliant with the learning and splendor of Europe, a white foot had scarcely passed these shores. Contemporary with this grand English age a strange, wonderful, and almost unknown race were living where now stand the queenly cities and towns of America. From the savage barbarism of the American Indian to our present enlightenment, a greater contrast has never existed.

It was among Governor Winthrop's sayings, that a family is a little commonwealth, and a commonwealth is a great family.

The history of every community, however described, is of interest; and the men and women who shaped and launched the new creation deserve notice. It is important, then, not only to know who our ancestors were, from whence they came, what they did among these hills and shores, but to know of their birth and home life.

The Puritan shaped his character and conscience by the Bible as he understood it, according to his best judgment and endeavor. The age was shadowed by grave errors. They accepted the law of an eye for an eye, but neglected the gospel of "But I say unto you, love your enemies." Though they prayed all night and fasted all day, they had not charity that was kind. Much they concern our history. Relations so intimate and historic can scarcely be over cherished or over-wrought in our lives. Speculatively it has been said they built better than they knew. Genius and learning, poetry and art, the pulpit and platform, have yielded their gifts, till the Mayflower and the Rock of Plymouth are radiant and immortal.

Prominent among the Pilgrim habits were industry and economy—twin sisters of thrift and prosperity. The early days of the colonists were strictly frugal and simple. Cut off as they were from the mother country and supplies, they soon found the necessity of self dependence. As necessity is the mother of invention, their clever hands lay hold upon new resources, and soon learned to supply themselves.

"They drove the plough,"
They trafficked, builded, delved, they spun and wove,
They taught and preached, they hasted up and down,
Each on his little errand, and their eyes
Were full of eager fire, as if the earth
And all its vast concerns were on their hands."

Many of them were skilful mechanics, having brought their implements from the old country. The forge, the loom and the shop were soon active, and community wants were in a great measure supplied by community laborers. Every year added to their home supplies and home comforts, and made them more independent, as they desired to be, of England.

The first houses were usually built two stories in front, with long slanting roofs reaching to within a few feet of the ground in the rear. Later the rule was one low story, still lower in the rear, with two liberal sized front rooms, an immense kitchen, with two bedrooms and a pantry on the lower floor and a square chamber upstairs. All the houses fronted the south, and told twelve o'clock meridian with the accuracy of a chronometer. Every window was a sun dial, and often the only time keeper. The front of the house was always sunny, and sometime during the day the long kitchen was sure to catch the broad sunbeams. How home-like were these roomy old kitchens, whitewashed, floor-sanded, and wide-fire placed. The fire places were the old cord wood pattern. Additional room was also required for one and sometimes two brick ovens. Chairs were a comparatively rare form of furniture in early colonial days; stools and forms were the common seats. Turned wainscot and covered chairs are mentioned in the seventeenth century. The seats of many of these chairs were of flags and rushes. The wainscot chairs were all of wood. One now in Pilgrim Hall is known as the Winslow chair. A row of polished iron and brass candle sticks, with tray and snuffers, were on the mantel. Pewter or block tin ware was largely in use.

The word "court-cupboard" is found from the years 1647 to 1704. It was a high piece of furniture with an enclosed closet or drawers. Upon it were set both plate and glass. The family punch bowl was often seen. It was in use till 1800. Everybody drank the famous punch and flip. At trainings, town-meetings, installations and funerals it was sanctioned by general usuage. A barrel of wine was drunk at the funeral of a Boston minister. It is recorded in the probate office in Boston that in 1678, at the funeral of the celebrated John Norton, minister of the First church, fifty-one and a half gallons of the best Malaga wine were consumed by the mourners.

One hundred years ago few had carpets, and those only in front of the chairs. The floors were scrubbed as white as snow and sanded with white sand in puddles. A carpet in early days was not a floor covering, but the covering of a table or cupboard. Settles were a standard piece of furniture. They were four or five feet long, with backs higher than the heads of the children, to break the wind and cold while the ruddy blaze kept all warm in front. In early times trenchers were used instead of plates, and the round ones were regarded the most fashionable. The tables were plain, but the people well fed. Healthier and sweeter bread was never eaten than the loaf made of native corn and rye and baked in the brick ovens. The early settlers devoted much attention to planting orchards. In the first log cabins oiled paper was placed in windows.

The earliest and most plentiful illuminating medium for the colonists was found in pine knots. Higginson wrote in 1630: "Though New England has no tallow to make candles of, yet by abundance of fish thereof it can afford oil for lamps." Soon candles were made by being run in moulds or by a process of dipping. A colonial house in the winter time could not have been very comfortable. Winter rushed upon the settlers with heavier blasts and fiercer storms, and the cold was more piercing and lingered further into spring.

Around the great, glowing fireplace in an old colonial kitchen centered all of homliness and comfort that could be found in a New England home. The andirons added to the firepiace their charm. Sometimes a fireplace had three sets, to hold logs at different heights. Some of them were very elaborate, with claw feet, or cast in the figure of a negro, a soldier, or a dog. Fire dogs appear in the earliest inventions, and were of copper, steel, iron and brass. In the Deerfield Memorial Hall there is one of these old fireplaces, perfect in every detail. It shows, as in a living photograph, the home life of those olden days.

In the early days of the New England colonies, no greater temporal ill could befall any adult Puritan than to be unmarried. The colonists married early. Widowers and widows hastened to join their fortunes and sorrows. Bachelors were seldom permitted to live alone, but had to find a home wherever the court assigned. In Hartford they had to pay twenty shillings a week for the selfish luxury of solitary living. This order was issued in the town of Eastham, Mass., in 1695: "Every unmarried man in the township shall kill six blackbirds or three crows while he remains single; as a penalty for not doing it, shall not be married until he obey this order." Higginson wrote of an ancient maid of twenty-five years. At thirty they were called Thornback.

Judge Sewell's first wife was Hannah Hull. She received as her dowry her weight in Pine Tree Shillings. A bride's portion was openly discussed, her marriage settlement carefully decided upon, and even agreements for bequests were arranged as encouragement to marriage. The husbands did not hesitate to sue for settlement too remiss fathers-in-law, who failed to keep their word about the bride's dowry. Edward Palmer for years harrassed the Winthrops about their sister's (his first wife's) portion, long after he had married a second wife.

It was the custom to allow the bride to choose the text for the sermon to be delivered on the Sunday when she came out bride. The coming out of the bride was an important event. In some communities the bride and groom took a prominent seat in the gallery, and in the midst of the sermon rose to their feet and turned around several times slowly, in order to snow from every point of view their bridal finery to the admiring eyes of their friends in the congregation.

Throughout New England, except in New Hampshire, the law was enforced for nearly two centuries of publishing the wedding banns three times in the meeting-house, at either townmeeting, lecture, or Sunday service. Not till the beginning of the eighteenth century did the Puritan minister perform the marriage ceremony. A magistrate, a captain, any man of dignity in the community, could be authorized to marry Puritan lovers.

A man in New London persisted in having a wife without any legal or religious ceremony. This was a great scandal to the whole community. A pious magistrate met the ungodly couple on the street and sternly reproved them thus: "John Rogers, do you persist in calling this woman your wife?" "Yes, I do," violently answered John. "And do you, Mary, wish this man to be your husband?" "Indeed I do," she answered. "Then," said the magistrate, coldly, "by the laws of God and this commonwealth, I as a magistrate pronounce you man and wife." "Ah, Gurdon, Gurdon," said the groom, "thee's a cunning fellow." There is one peculiarity of the marriages of the first century and a half of colonial life which should be noted—the number of unions between the members of the families of Puritan ministers. It seemed to be a law of social ethics that the sons of ministers should marry the daughters of ministers. In 1769, at a wedding in New London, ninety-two jigs, fifty contra dances, forty-three minuets and seventeen hornpipes were danced, and the party broke up at quarter of one in the morning.

In spite of the hardness and narrowness of their daily life, and the cold calculation, the lack of sentiment displayed in wooing, I think Puritan husbands and wives were happy in their marriages. Some love-letters still remain: letters of sweethearts and letters of married lovers; letters so tender that truth and love shine round them like a halo.

Divorces were plentiful in Connecticut in 1704, and were occasionally given in other New England states.

From the earliest days when horses were imported women rode on pillions behind the men. John Winthrop had a coach in 1685. Sir Edmund and Lady Andros rode in a coach in Boston in 1687. Their purchase and use were discouraged by Puritan authorities, as were other luxurious fashions. A few Bostonians had sleighs in 1700. Sedan chairs were used to some extent.

Members of our best and most respected families were innkeepers. Of the good quality of the inns many travelers testify. Dr. Dwight said the best old-fashioned New England inns were superior to any of the modern ones. Next in importance to the landlord came the stage driver. He was of so much consequence, and so looked up to, that one of them hardly exaggerated his position when he said to a hungry passenger who urged him to drive faster: "While I drive this coach I am the whole United States of America." A marked improvement in facilities for travel came in turnpike days. The first passenger steamboat which ran between New York and Providence made its trial trip in 1822. The forty-mile journey between Boston and Providence was made in fine stage-coaches, which were always crowded, often eighteen or twenty full coach-loads in a day. The fare was $3 for the trip. A line of rival coaches was established on which the fare was to be $2.50 a trip. The regular coach company at once reduced their fare to $2. The rival line announced their reduction to $1.50. The regulars then said their fare would be only $1. The rivals then placed it at fifty cents. The old line then announced that they would carry the passengers for nothing. The new coaches were deserted, and the proprietors pondered for a week trying to invent some way to still further cut down the vanished rates. They at last advertised that they would not only carry their patrons free of expense, but would give each passenger a good dinner at the end of his journey. The old coach line was rich and at once counter advertised a free dinner and a good bottle of wine. And there for a time the fierce controversy came to a stand still, both lines having crowded trips each day.

The early settlement and faithful support of a learned ministry was a bold feature in New England history. The stamp of the ministry upon the people was well defined. It tinted the rugged New England character with its finest shadings.

In 1670 every town was required to be constantly provided with an able, learned, and orthodox minister, to dispense the word of God, to be suitably encouraged and sufficiently maintained by the inhabitants, and in case of neglect longer than six months, a competent allowance for such minister according to the estate and ability of the town shall be made and the town assessed for the same. There were no bells, but every town had a drum; it called the people to church and gave warning if the savages appeared. It required, it is said, an educated ear not to confound the drum ecclesiastical with the drum military. Saturday night was the beginning of the Sabbath. Everywhere was the quiet hush that betokened the coming of the Lord's Day. Everybody was expected to attend church. Our comment would be on the moral excellence of the fashion. It was one of those beautiful Puritan customs.

It must have been a pleasant sight to have stood by and observed the people from near and far throng the sacred temple, for Sunday morning all paths lead to church, as all roads lead to Rome. Some are on foot, some are on horseback, the wife riding on a pillion behind her husband, their youngest child on the saddle in front of him. Young men are carrying their best homespun coats on their arms, and young women are carrying their best shoes in their hands, intending to put them on before they enter the meeting-house. The people exchange greetings with each other as they arrive at the doors, and when the Squire comes they salute him respectfully, for no man except the minister is considered to be his peer. We enter by the great door, whose face is covered with all kinds of announcements to the public. Opposite to us as we enter stands the pulpit, lofty and formidable in appearance. There is a large window behind it, a dome-shaped sounding-board above it, and a steep staircase leading up to its entrance. When the minister has ascended the stairs and shut the pulpit door behind him he is entirely lost to sight. Seats are hung by hinges on three sides of each pen, and are lifted when the worshipers stand up for long prayers, permitting them to lean against the partition, where they get some assistance in standing. When the prayer, thirty minutes long, is ended, the seats in the pews are let fall; there is an uneasy settling of the congregation in their seats, and at last everybody is still.

One of the duties of the sexton was to turn the hour-glass in view of the preacher, who is to preach an hour, or as long as the sands are running. Perhaps it will be necessary to turn the hour-glass for another run before every hearer can get the teaching fitted to his condition.

In 1635 each meeting-house had stocks and a whipping-post. The one who was compelled to sit in the stocks had his feet and hands securely fastened between blocks of wood. In 1640 it was ordered that swearing should be punished by sitting in the stocks three times, or by imprisonment; also, that for telling lies a fine of ten shillings or sitting in the stocks two times. The tithing man had the inspection of the audience during the public exercises. His frequent rounds kept the children in order. He carried a wand with a knob at one end and a tuft of feathers at the other. With the knob he rapped the mens' heads, and with the feathers he brushed the ladies' faces when he caught them napping. There were no fireplaces in the churches. The women had small iron, tin, or wooden foot-ovens filled with hot coals, heated water or bricks.

Days of humiliation were set for prayer and fasting. The Sunday following the birth of a child he was carried to the meeting-house to be baptized. It is recorded that the ice had to be broken in the christening bowl. Puritan mothers were all church goers, as were all members of the family; if the mother went to meeting the baby had to go also. I have read of a little wooden cage in the church to hold babies who were too young or sleepy to sit upright. Christmas was not regarded until this century as a New England holiday. The first New England Thanksgiving was Dec. 11, 1621. It was not a day of religious observance, but a day of recreation. In 1633 the first public Thanksgiving was held in Boston by the Bay Colony, in gratitude for the safe arrival of food-bearing and friend-bringing ships. The first national Thanksgiving proclamations were by Congress during the Revolutionary war. The first great American Thanksgiving Day was in 1784, for the declaration of peace. There was one more national Thanksgiving in 1789, and no other till 1863. The early Thanksgivings were not always set upon Thursday. It is said that that day was chosen on account of its reflected glory as a Lecture Day. Election, Commencement, and Training Days were holidays.

The Puritans of the first century thought little and cared little for any form of amusement. The only regular diversion of early colonial life was the Thursday Lecture. The religious exercises resembled those of the Sabbath, and were about five hours in length. At this gathering criminals were punished, seditious books were burned, intentions of marriage were published, notices were posted, and at one time elections were held on Lecture Day. Dancing schools were forbidden in New England, but dancing could not be repressed in an age in which the range of conversation was necessarily narrow. In 1744 a concert was given in Faneuil Hall for the benefit of the poor, and after 1760 concerts were frequent. Lectures on pneumatics, electricity and philosophy were given in Boston as early as 1740.

Simplicity of dress was one of the corner stones of the Puritan church, but the individual members did not yield their personal vanity without many struggles. Puritan men were just as fond of finery as were Puritan women. In 1634 this order was sent forth by the General Court: "That no person, either man or woman, shall hereafter make or buy any apparel either woolen, or silk, or linen, with any lace on it, silver, gold, or thread, under the penalty of forfeiture of said clothes. Also that no person, either man or woman, shall make or buy any slashed clothes other than one slash in each sleeve and another in the back; also all cut-works, embroideries, or needle-work, caps, bands and rails are forbidden hereafter to be made and worn under the aforesaid penalty; also all gold or silver girdles, hat-bands, belts, ruffs, and beaver hats are prohibited to be bought and worn hereafter."

Picture to yourself the garb in which the patriot John Hancock appeared one noonday in 1482: "He wore a red velvet cap within which was one of pure linen, the last turned up two or three inches over the lower edge of the velvet. He also wore a blue damask gown lined with velvet, a white stock, a white satin embroided waistcoat, black satin small-clothes, white silk stockings and red morocco slippers."

The richest brocades, the choicest laces, the finest lawn, the heaviest gold and silver buckles, did not adorn the persons of New England dames and belles only; they also shone resplendent on the manly forms of their husbands and brothers.

Yet these men's souls were not in their clothes, or we had not the signers of the Declaration of Independence and the heroes of the Revolution.

Kissing the Rod.

Oh, heart of mine, we shouldn't
Worry so!
What we've missed of calm we couldn't
Have, you know!
What we've met of stormy pain,
And of sorrow's driving rain,
We can better meet again
If it blow.

We have erred in that dark hour,
We have known
When our tears fell with the shower,
All alone—
Were not shine and shadow blent
As the gracious Master meant?
Let us temper our content
With his own.

For, we know, not every morrow
Can be said;
So, forgetting all the sorrow
We have had,
Let us fold away our fears
And put by our foolish tears
And through all the coming years
Just be glad.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

WELLESLEY COLLEGE.

This year Wellesley College begins what may be called a new epoch in her history, since this year establishes several new practices that were experimental last year, and also introduces new ideas, new methods, new people and new things.

First, there is a new president, Mrs. Julia J. Irvine, who for several years has been very popular as professor of Greek, and whose administration as president promises to be no less popular. Last year the board of trustees invited, or perhaps it would be more correct to say induced, men and women of experience from various callings to act as visitors and advisers for the college; each department has now its board of visitors and outside people, whose members give impartial and disinterested advice that is of great value to the trustees and faculty.

This year completes the development of the new curriculum, and a student entering the freshman class may select a modern language instead of Greek. The new curriculum is much appreciated by young women who do not care for Greek, but do wish to specialize in the natural sciences. There are also new and advanced courses offered in almost every department.

Compulsory attendance at chapel on Sunday and week days is abolished, and no excuses are required, although a record is kept of absences. "Silent time" and "retiring hour" are abolished although, every student is to be in her room at 9.45, and if she sits up after 10 she is expected to report. "Senior Privileges," that is the privilege of leaving town without permission, and other like responsibilities, are extended to juniors and third and fourth year "specials"; and in other minor matters much greater freedom of choice is given all the students. The seniors this year follow the precedent of last year's seniors and wear the Oxford post-graduate cap and gown, and thus establish the custom.

Dr. Speakman has resigned, and instead of a resident physician in her place there is a head nurse, who will look after the general health of the students, who will themselves employ such physicians in case of illness as they may choose.

In the domestic department there are also changes, the college steward having been engaged as buyer, while a new matron has charge of the culinary department.

The new boat house is completed; Fiske, the new cooperative housekeeping cottage is done; the scientific building will be opened at the beginning of the next semester, and the new athletic field will be ready in the spring.

The college opened this year ten days later in September than ever before, and the year hereafter is to begin and close later than formerly. There are 244 in the freshman class and 762 students at the college.

Prof. Hallowell of the botany department, is in Europe this year; it is his Sabbathical year. Prof. Morgan, who was abroad last year, is at the head of the department. She has returned with her health much improved.

NEED NOT RESIGN.

Summer had waned, as summers sooner or later have to do, and the young man whom she took to be a millionaire's son in disguise, and the young woman whom he took to be the only child of a wealthy widow, sat gazing out across the water, gloriously silvered by the refulgent moon.

"To-morrow," they said, "we separate." Then they sighed several times apiece.

"Miss Summerly—Maude," stammered the young man, "I have something to say to you ere we part."

"Go—go on, Mr. Raster," she answered resolutely.

"I ought to tell you," he began, "that I have long been engaged—"

"Sir! Mr. Raster!" she exclaimed.

"Nay, let me finish—I have long been engaged at the hosiery counter in the leading dry goods store of my native town, and my salary of $15 per week is to be raised to $18. True, this is not much to one reared in luxury as you have been, but rightly husbanded $18 will go a good way."

When the moon, which temporarily had gone behind a cloud, next looked forth, it saw her head upon his shoulder.

"Mr. Raster—" she was saying.

"Call me George," interrupted the happy youth.

"George, I too have a confession to make. I also was engaged—do not start—as cashier in the well-known restaurant of Eatum & Drinkum previous to my coming here for a summer's rest. I receive $8 a week. But I will have to give up that position now.

A long pause now ensued.

"Maude—Miss Summerly," he said, disengaging her head, "do I understand that your mother is not—not well-to-do?"

"No, George, but she will be proud to live with us."

The young man arose.

"I do not think you need to give up your position with Eatum & Drinkum," he said.

And the moon, smiling, continued to do business at the old stand.—Rochester Tribune.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 9, 1894.

A REPUBLICAN SWEEP.

Massachusetts Gives Greenhalge a Plurality of 64,000.

Only One Democratic Congressman.—The A. P. A. Cuts No Figure.

Large Republican Gains in Almost Every State in the Union.

Very Few Democrats Elected in Massachusetts Tuesday.—Or in Any Other State for that Matter.—Tammany Badly Beaten in New York.—Large Republican Gains in Democratic States.

Although the weather Tuesday was not exactly such as is supposed to favor the Republicans, the plurality given the ticket—about 64,000—is like the good old figures for which Massachusetts has been famous in times past. Very few Democratic candidates were elected, and that party gets only one congressman out of 13. The result was a veritable landslide, hardly anticipated by either party. In other states the result is much the same, but New York creates the greatest sensation by giving the Republican ticket a margin of 150,000. Hill having only about 2400 plurality in New York city, which usually wipes out single-handed whatever Republican plurality the rest of the state may give.

In Other States.

Tammany is literally "out of sight" in New York, Morton beating Hill for governor by 150,000, and Strong being elected mayor of New York city by 40,000 over Grant, the Tammany candidate. Hill's plurality in New York city was only 2400, against a usual 40,000 to 75,000.

In West Virginia Chairman Wilson is snowed under by 2000, and three Republican congressmen are elected The Republicans will have a majority of 19 in the next House.

Connecticut goes Republican by from 10,000 to 13,000, and that party gains three congressmen.

Pennsylvania gives one of the largest pluralities in the history of the state, and the Democrats lose seven of their ten congressmen.

Ohio falls into line with a plurality of 135,000 and 19 Republican congressmen out of 21, with possibly another.

The Republicans gain three congressmen in Maryland.

In Kansas the Republicans carry six of the seven congressional districts, and get a plurality of 20,000 over the Populists.

California elects a Democratic governor, but a Republican lieutenant governor and most of the other state officers, with a nearly solid Republican congressional delegation.

Michigan's Legislature is said to be unanimously Republican, and the governor gets a plurality of 80,000. Only in three counties did the Democratic candidate for governor receive a plurality.

The figures in Illinois are about 90,000, and the next Legislature will be Republican on joint ballot by a majority of from 25 to 40.

Missouri's next Legislature will be Republican.

There was a big slump in New Jersey, the Republicans getting all the congressional districts, six of the state senators and 56 of the 60 assemblymen.

How Palmer Voted.

Tuesday's vote was unusually light on account of the storm, only 744 votes being cast out of a total of 1094. The registration and the vote by precincts was: A, 515, vote 333; B, 273, 198; C, 162, 112; D, 144, 101. The new law allowing the counting of split ballots to commence at 1 o'clock worked well, and the returns were in early, those from C and D getting in together at 4.30, A at 6 and B at 6.20. The following table gives the result:

PALMER NEWS.

Monday Night's Storm.

Winter seemed to drop upon this section of the state all at once Monday night, and the snow storm which raged nearly all night had rather a retarding effect on travel the next day. After raining all day the snow commenced to fall about 6 o'clock in the evening, and soon the sidewalks were covered with a slush which was anything but comfortable to walk in. Later in the evening the mercury took a drop, and as every thing out of doors was wet the snow froze on. The snow itself was damp, and kept piling up and sticking to the branches of the trees, telegraph, telephone and electric wires,—almost everything it touched,—being greatly aided by a strong wind from the west. The west dial of the town clock became covered with enough ice at 9.21 to stop the clock, and it has not yet had sufficient courage to take up its duties once more. Tuesday morning the work of the storm became apparent, and although only about six inches of snow fell in this section the roads were almost impassable. In some sections where the trees grow near the highway and the track is narrow it was impossible to get through, the small birches being so heavily loaded with ice as to hang across the road and prevent the passage of teams. Choppers who went into the woods experienced the same difficulty, and had to chop a path for their teams where the evening before there was an open road. The Boston and Albany road east of Palmer was completely tied up. After 9.40 Monday night no train arrived from there until 11 Tuesday forenoon, and that was the "owl," which should have arrived at 1.46 in the morning, the train crew having amused themselves with removing telegraph poles from the track between Framingham and Worcester, where it was reported that for 17 miles almost every pole was down and across the track. Passengers for the west were accommodated with a special train which was made up in Palmer and sent to Springfield at 8.22 a. m. Trains for the east were about on time, and the Ware River road was not affected, as the storm did not hit that section. The telegraph and telephone service was completely knocked out by the storm, and Tuesday morning the only communication out of town by this means was a line of the New London Nothern road's to Brattleboro, over which messages were repeated to Springfield, Boston or other points. A number of poles were down near Cooley's Crossing on the road to Warren, and several between Palmer and North Wilbraham. The Postal Telegraph was the first to get in working order, and had the use of its wires at noon Tuesday. The Western Union was not so fortunate; it got a wire to Springfield yesteday morning, but has not yet got all its other wires. The only telephonic communication out of town Tuesday morning was the wire to the Palmer Mill at Three Rivers and the Otis Company at Ware, though all except those to Willimantic and Spencer were usable again by Wednesday night. The Central Mass. Electric Co. was fortunate, and had no trouble with its wires.

Found Dead in Bed.

Mrs. Mary Finerty was found dead in her room on South Main street this forenoon. She had not been ill, but yesterday was feeling slightly indisposed. This morning one of the neighbors went to her room and found her apparently asleep. After a time she did not appear, others went to her apartments and found her dead. Medical Examiner Holbrook was called and viewed the body, afterward locking up the room and notifying District Attorney Gardner. Mrs. Finerty was about 75 years old.

The mercury was only 20 above zero Wednesday morning.

Frank Young is visiting his parents at the Converse House.

Robinson & Taylor are having their new store in Holden's block wired for electric lights.

Michael Cashman has been appointed by the probate court as guardian of John M. Cashman, minor.

Six persons united with the Congregational church Sunday, five by letter and one on confession of faith.

H. A. Northrop is making large quantities of cider at his mill on Park street, which he will turn into vinegar.

Mrs. George Cross of North Brookfield is spending the week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Eastman.

Keith Bros. have set up a steam saw mill on the Shearer estate west of the village, and are cutting off the timber.

The W. C. T. U. will have a meeting in the parlors of the Congregational church next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The three children of E. Goodes, who have been sick several weeks with tonsilitis, are now recovering, and are able to be out.

C. B. Coomes has secured a position as ticket seller and treasurer of a theatrical company, and began his duties at North Adams yesterday.

Miss Tucker of Springfield has a class in china painting in this place, meetings being held Wednesday afternoons at the house of Mrs. H. W. McGregory.

Dr. C. W. Cross is to move into his new quarters in the Lawrence block to-morrow and Monday, and his dental rooms will be closed for these two days.

The ladies of the Baptist society will give a turkey supper in the church vestry next Tuesday evening, the price being 35 cents per plate. Supper at 6.30.

Mrs. A. W. Thayer has been chosen by the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church a delegate to the state convention at Fall River next Tuesday and Wednesday.

W. F. Waite brought to this office last Saturday a branch of a pear tree which was in full blossom, and had on it new leaves about three-quarters of an inch long.

The Odd Fellows initiated four new members at their meeting Wednesday evening, and will work the first degree on four candidates at the meeting next Wednesday evening.

The Pauline Brotherhood connected with the Universalist church will hold its next meeting in the church vestry next Tuesday evening, when the formal organization will be perfected.

D. F. Holden has traded his stallion "Success" to Thomas Blanchard for the latter's stallion "Parker." Mr. Holden has sold his three-years-old pacer "Boycott" to Wallace Chilson.

The Association of Relief Officers of Massachusetts, composed of one of the overseers of the poor from each city or town, has been invited to hold its December meeting in the district court room in this village.

About 25 of the young friends of Miss Lillian Graves of Converse avenue, from Palmer and Monson, made her a surprise visit Tuesday evening, and presented her with a god pen and a manicure set.

The Western Massachusetts Ministers' Meeting will be held in the parlor of St. Paul's Universalist church next Monday forenoon at 10.45. Rev. Charles Conklin of Springfield will give an address, followed by discussion. Dinner at the Converse House.

There was a whist party at the New Weeks House last evening, given in honor of Miss Hurlburt of Middletown, Ct., and was a very pleasant affair. Mr. Wetmore and Miss Hurlburt carried off the first prizes, Dr. Hendee and Miss Fuller the booby prizes.

The Ladies' Society of the Congregational church held a social in the church parlors Wednesday evening, when supper was served by Mrs. E. G. Hastings, Mrs. J. B. Shaw, Mrs. H. P. Holden, Mrs. D. H. Brown, Mrs. C. A. LeGro and Mrs. Hubbard Lawrence.

The ladies of the Universalist church have decided on December 11th as the date for their annual turkey supper and sale of fancy articles, and will meet every Thursday afternoon until that time with Mrs. H. A. Northrop for the manufacture of articles for the sale.

Michael Dwyer, uncle of Mrs. M. J. Dillon, with whom he has lived for a number of years, died Wednesday morning at the age of 86 after a long illness. The funeral was this afternoon. He was a captain in the 2d regiment U. S. dragoons, and served in the Mexican war.

One of the amusing things connected with the election happened at Thorndike. The polling place was in a room formerly occupied as a pool room, and the sign still remains over the door. While the voting was in progress a stranger sauntered into the room, looked around, and then walked up to one of the officials with the sly inquiry, "Got any whisky here?"

The telephone exchange is to have a copper wire to Springfield, which will render communication with that city and other points in the Connecticut valley much easier. Belchertown is now reachable by telephone, being connected with the Northampton exchange. Since Ware has an exchange of its own communication with that place from Palmer costs 15 cents.

Next Wednesday will be observed as Parents' Day in the schools of the town, when a special invitation is extended to parents and all others interested in the schools to visit them and witness the work done. There will be no special exercises, only the regular recitations of the classes, so that visitors may judge of the work being done by the teachers and pupils.

The indications seem to be favorable for the proposed course of entertainments under the auspices of the high school. If carried out, the plan is to have six entertainments in the course, and the people of the town should give the project hearty support. A good course of entertaiments would be enjoyed by many, and the high school classes would like to start a fund for a school library.

The Men's Sunday Evening Club of the Congregational church had a banquet in the church vestry Tuesday evening, about forty sitting down to the fine spread served by the ladies of the society. After the supper had been disposed of M. W. McGregory officiated as toastmaster, and the following toasts were responded to: "A Sound Mind and a Sound Body," Dr. William Holbrook; "The Men's Sunday Evening Club of To-Day," J. B. Shaw; "The Y. P. S. C. E.," F. B. Pope; "The Sunday School," L. H. Gager; "Impressions in Black and White," L. E. Chandler; "She," Dr. G. H. Wilkins; "The Men's Sunday Evening Club of 2000, A. D.," Rev. F. E. Jenkins.

To-morrow night will be tried the experiment of running a free train to Thorndike from this village, stopping at the Town House crossing to let off Three Rivers people who may wish to ride to that point and then walk home. The train will be free to all, and no tickets will be required; the merchants of the place are paying for the train, and invite all who wish to get on and ride home free. The train will leave at 9.10, which will give Thorndike people from 5.20 in Palmer, and Three Rivers people from 6.45. If any wish to do business at the savings bank they will have an opportunity, as it will be open from 6.30 to 7.30. Other trains will also be run Nov. 24th, Dec. 8th and 22d.

Musically inclined people will have an opportunity to enjoy a first-class concert to-morrow evening, when the well-known Philharmonic Orchestra of Springfield, seven pieces, will again appear in the Congregational church. And the extremely low price of admission—15 cents—ought to fill every seat in the house. The following will be the programme:

War March from Athalia,.....Mendelssohn
Overture, "Pique Dama".....Suppe
Valse Lento.....Vrolte

State Primary School Notes.

F. U. Wetmore spent Tuesday with friends in Somersville, Mass.

Clifford Wheeler is the happy possessor of a new Stearns bicycle.

Rev. J. J. Baker of St. John, N. B., spoke to the children last Sunday.

Mrs. J. J. Prentiss returned last night after spending the week with friends in the eastern part of the state.

Miss Fanny L. Richardson of Gilbertville, formerly the kindergarten teacher, visited the school Wednesday as the guest of Misses Mabel and Minnie Moore.

The storm during the past week has delayed work on the new barn, but it is hoped that it will be ready to move into before long. Frank Ruggles of Three Rivers is doing the lathing and M. J. Dillon of Palmer the plastering.

District Court.

Dexter W. Lombard, who has oftentimes appeared in the court room and is somewhat familiar with the workings thereof, was again in the toils Monday, but this time on a new complaint—obtaining money under false pretense. "Deck" rents a piece of ground of a Mr. Davis, and took $10 from the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. for the privilege of setting poles on the land. The agent thought he had no right to do this and asked for the return of the money when he found out the facts, but "Deck" concluded to hang on to it, hence his arrest. The court decided that he had no right to the money, and ordered it returned, with the payment of the costs incurred in the case, giving until December 1st for the performance thereof, failing in which the case goes to the grand jury.

Michael Flynn and John Crimmins of Thorndike, with John Potle and Joseph Wewiweski of Palmer yielded up $5 each for lingering too long over the flowing bowl.

On Wednesday Daniel McGowan, an itinerant who claimed to have been a drinker for 30 years but never to have been arrested before, was sent to the house of correction for two months. Daniel admitted having been drunk, but remarked that in the light of his past 30 years' experience, the ways of the town of Palmer were beyond his comprehension.

BONDSVILLE.

Luther Collis is on the sick list.

Mrs. Louis Gaboury has been quite sick the last few days.

The W. C. T. U. will meet next Thursday with Mrs. Fred Alden.

Mrs. Celia W. Carroll, who has been very sick, is slowly improving.

Frank Girouard has moved into one of the Company's new tenements.

C. S. O'Regan, who has been visiting his father, W. O'Regan, returned to Lowell Monday.

The Bondsville Dramatic Club will give a concert and dance Nov. 30th at Liberty Hall.

Last Sunday was communion, and five were admitted to the M. E. church on probation.

Mrs. George Aldrich has broken up housekeeping and will make her home with her sister in Lowell.

Quite a number from St. Bartholomew's church attended the dedication of All Saints, church at Ware last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Crouch of West Warren spent Sunday with Mrs. Crouch's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Death of Harlow Chapin.

Harlow Chapin passed away Sunday morning at 6.15, after a ten days' illness which began with the grippe and developed into a trouble from which he has suffered from time to time since the war. Mr. Chapin was born 52 years ago last April at Granby, Ct. He attended the public schools and academy, and at the breaking out of the war was learning the carriage business. Within a week after Fort Sumpter was fired upon he, with nine others, organized a company of home guards, but it was not until August of that year that he enlisted. He joined Co. C of the 8th Conn. Volunteers, and was appointed fourth corporal. October 1st the regiment started for the front, going first to Jamaica, L. I., then to Annapolis, where General Burnside was gathering his forces which afterwards comprised the famous expedition into North Carolina. The expedition sailed from Annapolis January 1st, 1862. On February 7th fire was opened on the Roanoke Island forts, and at night the troops landed through mud and water waist deep. The following morning the battle took place, the 8th Conn being held as a reserve force. The battle of Newbern followed in March, and the siege of Fort Macon, N. C., in April, finding the regiment at these places. The latter was a most disagreeable situation, as the men were obliged to live in sand pits while siege guns and mortars were being placed in position for bombardment. In July the 8th Conn. was one of the regiments transferred to the Army of the Potomac, to assist General Pope at the second battle of Bull Run, and was detailed to remain at Fredericksburg for guard and picket duty until Lee started his campaign in Maryland, then it left for Washington and in that city was, on account of its fine marching, greeted with cheers and was supposed to be the 8th Regulars, U. S. A., one of the crack regiments. Pushing on through Maryland, Frederick City was reached in time to see the enemy leaving for South Mountain, and being ordered to follow, the regiment reached the pass in the afternoon of Sept. 14th. That night was perhaps the most dangerous the regiment ever experienced, as the rebels were all around, firing in every direction. On the 17th was fought the battle of Antietam, the hardest in which Mr. Chapin was engaged. Of the 55 men of his company who answered the roll call the morning before, only nine responded the next; the rest were either wounded, dead or prisoners. Mr. Chapin was soon taken sick, having suffered much from exposure, as he had neither tent nor blanket, and his death was the result of a surgical operation performed at that time. He remained with his regiment until December, when he was sent to a hospital in Washington, where he remained until he received an appointment as hospital steward, U. S. A., and was assigned to the Knight hospital a New Haven, Ct., as steward in charge of the medical and hospital supplies. He was transferred to the Department of the South in the spring of 1865, but returned to New Haven to close up the hospital affairs, and was mustered out of the service in the early part of 1866.

Mr. Chapin went into the drug business for himself in that city, where he remained till 1872, when he married Lillian L., daughter of the late Martin S. Taylor, and removed to Worcester. From there he went to Hartford, and in 1878 to Springfield, where he bought out John Hooker. Two years later he came to Monson and went into business in Day's block. In 1885 he put up a building on the present site of the Universalist church, and soon after moved across the street. Mr. Chapin was the second commander of Marcus Keep post, and for seven years quartermaster, and was two years on the staff of the department commander as aide-de-camp. He has been secretary of the regiment from the time of its organization, twenty-five years ago, and was on the committee of arrangements for the recent dedication of monuments at Antietam to the memory of the members of the 8th, 11th, 14th nd 16th Connecticut regiments who fell at that place. This was Mr. Chapin's last trip of any note, and was one of much pleasure, the itinerary including Gettysburg, Harper's Ferry and Washington. He was very prominent in the Universalist church of this place, being oneof its founders, and was for eight years clerk of the parish. He was also a member of Day Spring lodge of Masons. Mr. Chapin was a public-spirited man, a man who was ever ready to lend a helping hand where help was needed, and was intensely interested in every thing which pertained to the soldiers. Three years ago, Mr. Chapin built a residence on Green street, in which, with his wife and two children,—a son, Harry T., now in Tufts College, and a daughter, Carrie L., attending the Academy,—he took much enjoyment. Mrs Chapin is doubly bereaved, as the death of her father, who had lived with her eleven years, preceded Mr. Chapin's by only six weeks, and the greatest sympathy is expressed for her on all sides. Mr. Chapin leaves also a brother, Dr. A. B. Chapin, of Aurora, North Carolina, and a sister, Mrs. Angeline Victs, of East Granby, Ct.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 2.30, many places of business being closed. After a prayer at the house by Rev. Harry Blackford, the body was escorted to the Universalist church by Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R.; the bearers were comrades John C. Aldrich, L Rood, George A Harvey, George H. Foskit, Lowell Wilcox and William Rice. After the singing of "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," by the choir, Mr. Blackford read portions of Scripture and offered prayer. Rev. W. A. Start of West Somerville spoke very feelingly of the warmth of friendship which had existed between Mr. Chapin and himself since 1882, when he came here through Mr. Chapin's efforts and delivered the first Universalist sermon ever listened to in Central Hall. He spoke of the love which Mr. Chapin bore the church, the town and his country, and of his many sterling qualities. The choir then sang "Shall We Know Each Other There?" The services at the cemetery were conducted by the Grand Army, their entire burial service, which was very impressive, being used. Among the floral offerings were a badge of the order, from Marcus Keep Post, the eagle being of white chrysanthemums, the crossed swords of Marechal Neil roses, the flag of red and white pinks with the field of blue and stars of white immortelles, and the star below of pink pinks, the ribbon attached bearing the inscription "Our Second Commander;" from the Eighth Regiment, a beautiful wreath of Marechal Neil roses, from Day Spring lodge, F and A. M., the square and compass of the order, the square being of white roses and pinks and English violets, and the compass of Waterville roses and pinks; from the church a large bunch of LaFrance roses; from the Woman's Relief Corps, a basket of pink roses, smilax and chrysanthemums. Five members of the 8th Connecticut were present at the funeral, Captain Henry Jones of New Hartford, Corporal A. E. Bartram of Bridgeport, Ct., Henry Randall of Westfield, Andrew Gordon of Hazardville, Ct., John L. Lane of Hartford, Ct. The Woman's Relief Corps, of which Mrs. Chapin is a member, attended in a body.

"The years are fast flying, O silent Grand Army,
Not long ere the last who is living to-day
Will be cradled so gently in Mother Earth's bosom,
And the living Grand Army have all passed away.
"Will you meet us, old comrades, when over the river,
The Angel of Death shall have carried us all?
Aye! we'll join in the ranks, true comrades forever,
When we all answer 'Here!' at the final roll call."

Strong and Vigorous at 83.

Mrs. Emmeline Orcutt, a guest at Henry M. Barlow's, celebrated her eighty-third birthday last Saturday. —OF OUR—

NEW STORE ∴ ∴ ∴

∴ ∴ ∴ FOR BUSINESS

After months of preparation we are all settled and doing business at our new location, 383 and 385 Main street, corner of Harrison avenue.

We want you to feel at home in our new store—feel that it is your store. We shall be better able to serve you here—our store is even larger than our old one, and that means more stock to pick from. The stock was all bought late and consequently you will get the benefit of any change in prices caused by the revision of the tariff. We want your good word, too, as well as your trade. Recommend us to your friends and tell them we have moved from 399 and 401 Main street, to 383 and 385 Main street, corner of Harrison avenue.

Our New Store is the Finest in All Western Massachusetts.

Being on a Corner, we get light from two sides, which will allow you to select goods by good light even in the darkest days. We have about 100 feet of show-windows, and they will at all times be filled with the newest styles of our different sorts of goods, so serving you to know what's to be expected of the other fellows.

It's hard getting through with your washing and cleaning, if you don't use Pearline. And you can use it, with great gain, upon anything that you want made clean. In washing clothes, perhaps you won't believe that Pearline is harmless. It has been proved so to millions of women, over and over again, but perhaps you won't be convinced. Then use it for something that can't be hurt. Use it for washing dishes, for instance, and save work.

When you come to know it better and let it wash the clothes, you'll find that it saves the wear and tear as well as the work.

Beware of imitations. 288 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

THAT'S QUEER!

You say a collar and cuff that are waterproof?

Yes.

And perspiration will not affect them?

Yes.

And when dirty you need only wipe them off with a wet cloth or sponge?

Yes.

Wonderful! How are they made?

A linen collar covered on both sides with waterproof "CELLULOID." Looks exactly like a linen collar.

Is it the only waterproof collar and cuff made?

No, but it is the only one made with the linen interlining and consequently the only one that can give entire satisfaction, because it is the best.

How can I know that I get the right kind?

Because every piece is stamped as follows:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Inquire for that and refuse anything else, or you will be disappointed.

Suppose my dealer does not have them?

He probably has, but if not, send direct to us, enclosing amount. Collars 25c., Cuffs 50c. State size, and whether collar wanted is stand-up or turned-down.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton, Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhœa of long standing in six hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results, and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine, and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles.

For a pain in the side or chest there is nothing so good as a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It affords prompt and permanent relief, and if used in time will often prevent a cold from resulting in pneumonia. This same treatment is a sure cure for lame back.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

Why She Couldn't Say Her Prayer.

Last night, in the early twilight,
Came my little one to my knee,
With: "Papa, I's dreffle s'eepy,
An' tired as I tan be.
'Ou say my p'ayer, p'ease, papa,
For me dest 'is one time."
And she knelt down by the knee that
She was all too tired to climb.

The moonlight wove a halo
Round the nodding little head,
And the drowsy lids drooped lower
As "I lay me down" was said.
And before the prayer was ended,
And the Lord was asked to keep
Through the night the child He gave me,
She was very fast asleep.

When she came to me this morning
With a hug and kiss, said she:
"I fank 'ou lots, dear papa,
Tause 'ou said my p'ayer for me.
When I dits dreffle s'eepy,
It bozzers me to pray,
Tause my eyes dest won't stay open,
So I tan't see what to say!"

AN UNFORTUNATE INTERRUPTION.

Willie was asleep and Dan was lonely. Willie is the minister's son; Dan is his dog. It was Sunday morning and every one was at church but these two friends. It was warm and sunny, and they could hear the preaching, for their house was next door to the church.

"Dan," said Willie, "it is better here than in church, for you can hear every word."

In some way, while Willie was listening he fell asleep. Dan kissed him on the nose; but when Willie went to sleep he went to sleep to stay and did not mind trifles. So Dan sat down with the funniest look on his wise black face, and with one ear ready for outside noises.

Now the minister had for his subject, "Daniel." This was the name he always gave Dan when he was teaching him to sit up and beg, and other tricks. While the dog sat thinking, the name "Daniel" fell on his ear. Dan at once ran into the church through the vestry door. He stood on his hind legs, with his forepaws close beside the minister, who did not see him, but the congregation did. When the minister shouted "Daniel" again, the sharp barks said "Yes, sir," as plainly as Dan could answer.

The minister started back, looked around, and saw the funny picture. Then he wondered what he should do next; but just then through the vestry came Willie. His face was rosy from sleep, and he looked a little frightened. He walked straight toward his father, and took Dan in his arms and said:

"Please 'scuse Dan, papa. I went asleep, and he runned away."

Then he walked out, with Dan looking back on the smiling congregation. The preacher ended his sermon on Daniel as best he could, but he made a resolve if he ever preached again on the Prophet Daniel he would tie up the dog.—Our Little Ones.

THE HABIT OF HAPPINESS.

Very few people realize that irritability and fault-finding are merely a habit, and that, too, of the most disagreeable sort. It is comparatively easy to see why such an inclination grows upon the children. The parents are worried and vexed, wearied with the cares and responsibilities of life, and thus not particularly good-natured. They not only encourage by their own conduct the disagreeable practice of grumbling and fretting, but are often so irritable that the innocent amusements of the children grate upon their feelings to such an extent that the youngsters are forbidden to romp or play about the house.

One New England woman, whose soul was burdened with care, and who felt at war with all the world, used to punish her children when they romped, and rebuked them when they laughed, charged them with the most outrageous ingratitude and cruelty because they could be merry when she was so unhappy.

Many a child has gone about the house sullen and silent for this very reason. Many another has gone out from the home circle to seek its pleasures elsewhere, because the atmosphere of home was so depressing and gloomy as to be intolerable. One of the greatest mistakes of life is to cultivate the habit of expecting too much of circumstances.

There is bound to be just so many drawbacks, just so much misery, pain and unhappiness in the world, and those persons are the wisest who make due allowance for this state of affairs. Very few things in this life come out as we desire, and it is the most egregious folly to expect any such thing as perfect happiness, and that all things in this world will come to us in our way.

While it is not at all worth while to cultivate a demeanor anywhere approaching the hilarious or flippant, it is an excellent idea to educate oneself up the belief that this is a rather uncertain existence, and that the best one has a right to expect is the middle-ground of comfort, and the absence of afflictions.

One of the ablest of contemporary writers makes one of her characters declare that the greatest happiness she ever allows herself to anticipate is that she may be spared great sorrows. Little troubles are certain to come, those there is no such thing as avoiding; and when one knows that this must be the case, it would seem the part of wisdow to so prepare the mind for them that their coming will neither disturb the even current of life nor upset the temper and nerves to such an extent as to make the sufferer and all immediate friends sharers in the depression.

There is nothing more healthful than real, genuine, hearty, heart-felt fun; and if children and young people were encouraged to indulge in more of it, and if parents would take even moderate doses of it themselves, the world would be in a much more comfortable. Christian, and promising condition.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CARPETS AND RUGS.

WILL YOU READ THIS?

The prices of Carpets and Rugs completely broken and they go for a song.

We offer FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS worth of Carpets and Rugs as a Great Clearing Benefit Sale for both the buying people of New England and ourselves.

All we ask is a comparison of goods and prices with others, and we will be satisfied with the results. Twenty years of fair dealing with the buying public is counting for something with us this season, when so many are talking dull business.

Here is what we are doing:

$1.00 Heavy Axminster Carpets of the best makes, usually sold at $1.65.

85c. Best five-frame body Brussels, the same qualities as have been selling at $1.10 and $1.25, but as these patterns are not to be made again you get them at 85 cents a yard.

85c. Extra Velvets. Choice patterns, beautiful colors, new goods. These are the kind usually sold at $1.25. Not the whole stock, but such styles as will not be reproduced.

75c. Tapestry Carpets, such as one finds advertised as "bargains" at 65 cents a yard. Patterns of the kind you will like to see in your house.

45c. Best all-wool Ingrain Carpets made, such as Lowells and Hartfords. There are none better and the styles are right. Have been sold this season at 67½ cents.

40c. A heavy all-wool Ingrain that has usually sold at 60 cents.

30c. A medium weight, all-wool Ingrain Carpet.

Large Smyrna Rugs.

Size 48x84 in. Regular price $10.50; present price $6.50.
Size 72x108 in. Regular price $25; present price $15.
Size 108x144 in. Regular price, $45; present price $25.

English Wilton Rugs.

Probably no better wearing rugs have ever been offered.

Size 18x36 in. Regular price $3; present price $1.75.
Size 24x48 in. Regular price $5; present price $2.75.
Size 36x36 in. Regular price $6; present price $3.
Size 27x58 in. Regular price $7; present price $4.
Size 36x63 in. Regular price $9; present price $5.

AXMINSTER RUGS: One hundred of these in beautiful soft colors. Usually sold at $3; our price $1.85.

HASSOCKS: Best Brussels Hassocks, corded with same carpet instead of enamel cloth. Regular price 50c; present price 25c.

Lots of other bargains in our Carpet Department that we cannot mention here.

THE FIRST FIRE ON THE HEARTH.

What a joy we all find in it! How we like to collect the sticks for that fire, if we are where sticks are to be collected; how we like to oversee its building; how all of us have advice to offer and instruction to give; how we must all lay on our especial contribution; how favored is the one who may touch off the flame at last! If we are by the sea, we have gathered drift-wood for it this many a day, and have dried it in the hot noon suns for this very evening's blaze, when it shall fill the room with flames of emerald and ruby, sapphire and Spanish topaz, and we shall hear in its singing over dropping coal and ash, in its roaring up the chimney, the sound of storm and rushing wave in the midst of safety, and point our pleasure with the tragedy of the last sigh and smothered cry of drowning sailors. And we sit and tell tales of horror and shipwreck and ghostly visitant till the flame falls and leaves us chill as the ghosts that have trailed their garments by. And if it is in the country-side we sojourn, then what equal wonders we see in the dear blaze, as it sends out its warmth and cheer on the cool morning air, or on the evening gloom when the heavy dews warn us all in-doors! For there are burning all the spices and fragrances and sunshine and colors condensed from the hot months.

We look at its lustres much as those old voyagers might have looked at the splendid conflagration when their ships were burning behind them; we well might wonder at ourselves that we can look at it so lightly, for here are our oars and sails and paddles burning, our alpenstocks and buckboards, our long evening strolls, our days in the heart of the wood, our double-handed abundance of flowers. But we know it is only because we know we are going forward to new pleasures that we can feed and face the flames so gladly. And if we have gone back to the city, and it is there that we have put the blaze together on the little hearth in the back parlor, or on the big one in the big hall, then it is like kindling a fire upon an altar, it is the recognition of home; on the shrine of domestic life we offer to our lares and penates a sacrifice of all the joys of summer—perhaps with a half-conscious prayer that the hearth may not be bare in any other home in all the cold months to come. And as we watch the flames shine and soar and flash up the chimney and disappear among the eternal stars, we know it is all a mirror of the transformations of life and death, and so find a new sacredness in the blaze that is the seal and sign of home.—Harper's Bazar.

Marvelous Result's.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gundermann, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little intermission, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. Dr. King's New Discovery, for consumption, coughs and colds, each bottle guaranteed—Electric Bitters, the great remedy for liver, stomach and kidneys. Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world, and Dr. King's New Life Pills, which are a perfect pill. All these remedies are guaranteed to do just what is claimed for them, and the dealer whose name is attached herewith will be glad to tell you more of them. Sold at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

THE MOTHER HEN.

This may not be new, but it was new to the reporter of the Providence Journal, who overheard it on an East Providence car Sunday, so it is likely that there are others who have never heard it. The young man who told it was evidently a collegian, as was his companion:

"I heard a good one on Professor—, of Andover," he said,

"What was it?" queried the other.

"Well, you know he was married during the winter and went housekeeping just outside the village. This spring he thought he would add a few hens to his stock; he already had a dog. He set a couple of the hens and in time had two large broods of chickens. He was very proud of them, but in a week or so the chickens began to die. He called in a neighbor to look at the chickens and offer advice. They were certainly a pretty scaly lot of chickens that the neighbor viewed. They were skinny-looking and apparently without ambition.

"'What do yer feed them?' asked the neighbor, after a brief survey.

"'Feed them?' responded the professor, as though he didn't hear aright. 'Why, I don't feed them anything. I thought the old hens had milk enough for them.'"

Perhaps you don't know what Guaiacol is, but you know something of creosote as a remedy for indigestion and other diseases. Well, is a refined form of creosote, and is made from the resin of beech trees. It stimulates a languid appetite as the air of the woods does. As long as they can and will eat, consumptives can fight their disease. That is why Guaiacol is combined with Ozone, a very active form of oxygen, in Slocum's Ozonized Norwegian Cod Liver Oil.

Guaiacol

It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

WARE'S NEW CHURCH.

DEDICATED SUNDAY WITH IMPOSING CEREMONIES.

Many Protestants in the Congregation.—Full Account of the Exercises, and Description of the Church.

A more auspicious day than last Sunday could hardly have been found for the dedication of Ware's new All Saints' church, and besides the large number of towns people present, many came from the surrounding places, near and far, to view the handsome structure and attend the interesting services. So great a number held tickets of admission that fully 500 people had to stand during the exercises, and many more were unable to obtain an entrance to the building. Many Protestants were seated on the right and left of the main aisle. The congregation was admirably seated by 25 ushers, and there was no hitch in any of the proceedings.

The church was dedicated by Bishop Beaven of Springfield, and the following priests were in attendance: Rev. Messrs. D. H. O'Neil of Worcester, C. W. Morrill of New London, Ct., Bernard S. Conaty of Springfield, Philip J. O'Donnell of East Cambridge, John J. McCoy of Chicopee, D. F. Feehan of Fitchburg, R. F. Walshe of Easthampton, Denis Shannel of Worcester, M. J. Murphy of Brookfield, Terrance F. Kelly of Mattewan, N. Y., P. J. Harkins of Holyoke, P. Cuddihy of Milford, James J. Dougherty of New York, D. F. McGrath of Holyoke, Thomas J. Lynch of Thorndike, Thomas Smythe of Springfield, B. McKeany of Bondsville, J. P. Tuite of North Brookfield, Francis H. Chalupka of Webster, H. J. Wren of West Warren, William F. Grace of Gilbertville, James E. Meehan of Ware, James Marchand of Three Rivers, John J. Leary and Garrett Doland of Spencer, and John F. Redican of Leicester. P. W. Ford, the architect of the building, was also present.

The service began at 10.30, and after a tour of the walls, inside and out, by Bishop Beaven and the priests, the dedicatory exercises took place. The church was dedicated by Bishop Beaven, the dedicatory sermon being preached by Rev. C.W. Morrill of New London, Ct. After the dedication a pontificial high mass was celebrated, at which the bishop was celebrant, Rev. P. J. Harkins of Holyoke assistant, Rev. B. S. Conaty of Springfield deacon, and Rev. Thomas Smyth of Springfield sub-deacon. The deacons of honor were Rev. Thomas F. Kelly of Mattewan, N. Y., and Rev. E McGrath of Holyoke. Rev. John P. Leary of Ware was masters of ceremonies. The choir was in charge of Louis Coenen of Springfield, and was reinforced by an orchestra and Miss Anna T. Murray of the same city, soprano; Miss Mary H. Lawton of New York, contralto; John Lynch, tenor, and P. J. Mulvany, bass. Miss Catherine Kennedy was organist.

Rev. C. W. Morrill, who preached the dedicatory sermon, prefaced his discourse with a few congratulatory remarks:

"It is with keen satisfaction, no doubt, that the Catholic people of Ware and their friends enter upon the solemnities of this day. This hour marks a crisis in the history of this parish, and crowns with touching ceremony the labor and solicitude of years. The opening of this beautiful and stately temple for divine worship, the offering for the first time of the adorable sacrifice in this sanctuary of the Most High, is an event momentous and memorable, demanding due tribute of praise and congratulation. To-day the generosity of the flock and the anxious labor of the pastor have their reward. This temple of God is truly a monument of love and devotion to our holy faith. Far better than I do you know the zeal your pastor has evinced in the erection of this magnificent edifice. We all know, who are his friends, the loving care, extending into the minutest details, he has bestowed upon this building. All this glory of proportion and line, this splendor and harmony of color in fresco and painted window, with the appointments everywhere apparent, have found their origin in the taste and activity of the man appointed by the diocesan authority as your pastor. There are many fair and spacious churches scattered throughout our well-beloved New Euland that have called for admiration and drawn forth commendation from those not of our faith, but shall any one say that, in proportion to its size and the amount of money expended, a finer or better-appointed ecclesiastical edifice rears a cross-tipped tower than this parish—the church of All Saints'—of Ware? To-day, then, dear bretheren, you are come together, a joyful congregation, to receive the blessing of your bishop upon your work, to assist in offering up the holy sacrifice in thanksgiving and gratitude to the God of mercies, who has permitted you to live to see this happy occasion for your parish and to hear the word of God preached unto you."

The Dedicatory Sermon.

Rev. Mr. Morrill took as his text, John xx: 21, 22, "Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you; as my Father has sent me, even so I send you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." He then spoke as follows: "Life at the bottom may appear an inexplicable riddle. Its sad complications may sorely puzzle us. At times it seems that we are in the dark and that we have no reason for living. Whence we came and whither we go may seem a mystery to us, and to shun pain and daintily sip life's pleasures may seem the true philosophy. But when the human soul has any religious principle, things alter. There comes a solution for life. When man lives by faith the mysteries clear up. The majority of human beings are dominated by the religious principle and are aggressive believers in the supernatural. We Americans are firmly convinced of the existence of God, and we maintain the Christian conception of the Deity, but at the same time we all subtly feel the existence of our free will, and are independent and proclaim our liberty.

"The Roman Catholic church and the Roman Pontiff are feared and dreaded, and the hearts of many men quake at the direful troubles they are expected to visit upon a free people. And why this opposition to authority, and why this denunciation and dread and fear? Not that men deny its existence, but that they are ignorant of its claims and purposes. They deny its right to exist. To many authority means tyrannical, brutal force. The fresh life and the new blood and the new learning bounding and leaping in the renaissance period flashes a look of scorn at any voice that tried to moderate its ardor and regulate its triumphs and progress toward our present civilization. With the discovery of printing and the revival of learning, comes the fierce, wild, unreasoning hatred so characteristic of youth against the past, and those principles and motives that had fashioned and moulded it. How much of beauty and strength and value living scholars are now discovering in the middle ages! and how frankly and cheerfully do they acknowledge that those very elements so strongly unpopular in our day were the basis and foundation of that admirable age and civilization. What we all need is to rid ourselves of certain distorted and erroneous ideas that have resulted from the 16th and the 18th century revolutions. That we may come back, then, in obedience to this recognized need, let us away with the gross, materialistic, and wholly unchristian conception of what authory is. The word 'divine' explains the whole question.

"Not only authority in the church but in every other domain of life has as its source, has as its crown and prestige and empire a quality, a temper, power and character not human, something not of man, an essence divine. There is no power, no authority except from God. It is not as a man that the German emperor, or the president of the United States exercises political authority, that the magistrate executes judiciary authority, the pope or the bishop his religious authority or the father and head of the family domestic authority.

"The authority manifested by these men in their respective spheres is of divine investiture. Authority comes from creation. To be an author it is necessary to be a creator, and whoever is an author is an authority, and there is no authority save by an author. But to creatures, the works of his hands, God communicates his authority in the same measure that he communicates the power to create. Behold that man raised up by Providence, as we say, to create and restore in the breast of a great nation social order and public peace. And the order he restores does he not conserve and maintain by virtue of his authority as creator and author in the same way and manner as God maintains the universe and the works that slipped into being from the fiat of his will? Again, my brethren, behold a man in another sense and in a sense more divine still, an author and creator. We call the man a father, and he is an authority in the family, and the woman associated with him in this great work of creation and authorship shares his royalty and partakes of his authority. There is another step yet, and as you will perceive, a higher, where man becomes author and creator and consequently authority. The priest, the bishop, the supreme pontiff; that man that stands between God and humanity, a simple human means and instrument by which and through which God creates the supernatural life in our souls. We could go further yet. We could speak of literature, that vast reservoir of human thought and human living. As you came in contact with the great names, see the great lights in the literary firmament shine out, and if you are interested in a peculiar subject, a certain group of names instantly suggest themselves to you as an authority. They have created these precious masterpieces and their very authorship makes them recognized authority in their line.

"Have we not enough? Why, it must now be quite plain and clear what we mean who believe not only that authority exists, but that it must and has the best of reasons for existing. But perhaps some one replies: 'We fear God.' All that is human and natural rebels against the divine and supernatural. The great pagan instinct to snugly nestle down into nature, to be pleased and satisfied with the material splendors around us now, familiar and real as they are to us, is far preferable to coming into awful contact with God, even though he shadow himself under human form. We prefer the tangible to the mysterious. It must be granted, my brethren, that this feeling exists to-day, as it has always existed in the breast of man.

"And I think we can explain this singular fact by admitting that men dread authority, yes, hate it and are jealous of it, because of the fear that it menaces, that it rivals and is the arch-enemy of liberty. I declare boldly, therefore, that it is satanic to say that there is essential opposition and antagonism between authority and liberty. No, liberty is the daughter and authority is the mother. We are not free thinkers, but we think freely. Can the king who maintains order in society be at war with the liberty of the citizen? Can the father whose duty it is to use authority over his child be at war with the child's right liberty? Is not the true liberty of the child the sweet liberty to obey the father's commands? Where there is law, there is liberty to follow the law; where there is authority, there is the liberty, also God-created, to obey.

"Brethren, if what has been said is true—if the essence of authority is a participation of the creative power of God—it is very easy for us to understand why this emotion, that is to say, this sympathy or antipathy, this attraction or repulsion, is never greater than when it concerns the unparalleled authority that we call the Catholic, Apostolic and Roman church. The church actually poses herself before humanity as the highest power that creates with God, and the most complete expression of divine things.

You have here the secret of the incomprehensible emotion that she has always excited for so many Christian centuries, of the noise that for 2000 years has been made over her, that she is the ship ploughing through the storm-tossed waves of time, carrying God himself to humanity. Why do the heathen rage? Why have the schismatics, the heretics and secretarians for all declaimed against her? Because she is the kingdom of truth and the robe of Christ. Because she has reiterated: 'I am the divine authority—I am God in humanity.' The history of Europe is the history of the church, and this claim explains all the great epochs of that history. An institution without sword to protect and without soldier to defend, yet invincible against the attacks of every terrestrial movement, because she is the incomparable representative of God upon earth. Yes, we may even say that it is a strong proof of her divinity that she has always had the power of creating enemies.

"And what is the Catholic church, my brother, with her authority over us all? When we name the church do we speak of a social club, of a society for ethical culture, of an institution intended to propagate religious truths and knowledge of spiritual things? No: we Catholics conceive of the church as something far different. There is more dignity, more importance and more terribleness, shall I say, in our definition of it than this. We teach that the church is nothing less than the permanent incarnation of the Son of God.

"The church was instituted by Jesus in the first place to apply the fruits of redemption to humanity in establishing a society of souls and in satisfying also the imperative need we all have for peace, for union, for association and for teaching each soul in particular with undoubted authority, the truth, the way and the life. The church is necessary under a double title as a society and as an authority.

"Such is the church according to scripture and according to tradition and such ought it to be according to reason. Then finally about the word we so often hear that outside the church is no salvation. Must a man be a Catholic, belong to the Catholic church in order to be saved? It is a certain principle that our faith confesses, proclaims and repeats with established conviction, for its foundations are on the word of God, and human reason itself recognizes how true, and proper it is, that outside the church there is no salvation.

"The Bible tells us that Christ wishes the salvation of all men, and secondly that he wishes it by the way of and through the church. 'The Son of man came to save that which had perished.' 'Before God our savior who wishes all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth.'

"And behold the conditions: Obedience to His will; and His will—that there should be but one God, one faith and one baptism. Outside the true worship of the true God, away from the one faith, without the one baptism, there can be no salvation. You cannot restrain and limit Christ. You have to choose between two sides,—to denounce Jesus Christ, the church and salvation, or accept the offers of Jesus made you in His church for redemption. If one is able to be saved outside the church, the cross is but folly, the apostles' creed but a page to be torn up, the decalog only a law to be abolished, the sacraments but mere signs without virtue or efficacy, and the prayers that we address to God feeble cries to which he is insensible. Once it is felt that the monopoly is lost, that the privilege of saving souls is not the church's, that there is no further need of expecting certainty and truth in this world, we go back to the speculations of heathen; there is no way of life traced out for us and no happiness here or hereafter to be conquered.

"But what is it to be outside the church and by consequence excluded from salvation? Nothing is more uncertain or more mysterious. 'Many,' says St. Augustine, "appear to be without the church and are within; many appear to be within and are without.' There are then within the church visible and exterior, souls who are not of her; while they are seemingly without the church souls that are of her. It is impossible for us to say who is elected or who reprobated in the church visible and invisible. What is plain and clear to the logical mind is this, that the church is the divine institution of Christ; that it is Christ himself working in the world for the world's redemption from every form of evil; that it is the one great force and power and authority that has been able to stand unbroken before the storms and changes of these many Christian centuries, and that consequently it is the duty of every man, recognizing this fact, to place himself in communion with her, no matter at what cost and with how great sacrifice, and to have for his portion the inestimable gift of one Lord, one faith and one baptism."

Description of the Church.

The church is the finest in this section, and cost $100,000. It is Gothic in design. Its walls are of Brookfield brick, trimmed on all the arched openings and buttresses with rock-faced Longmeadow sandstone. The church is rectangular in form and contains an auditorium, divided by two arcades of lofty decorated arches. The sanctuary is spacious and there are side chapels and two large sacristies. The entrances at the front of the church are through three doorways. Over these entrances is the organ loft, where the large organ is placed, and there is space for a choir of 50 voices. The loft is reached by a staircase in the tower. An easy flight of southern pine steps leads to the main entrances. These steps will be replaced by granite ones.

The roof of the church is slated and the ends of the buttresses and the tower are finished in copper. The tower is located in the upper front corner and terminates in a truncated pinnacle spire with a paneled base. The distance from the ground to the top of the cross on the spire is 142 feet. The top of the cross on the front gable is 92 feet above the ground, and the sanctuary apse terminates in a handsome copper turret for ventilating purposes. Prominent features of the building are the transepts, which are arranged after old Scotch models and project slightly beyond the side walls. The nave consists of seven bays divided by clustered columns with richly carved capitals, from which spring arcade arches. Over these are the clear-story equilateral windows, Gothic in design. The rest of the building consists of two roofs, one carrying the slating and the other carrying the ceiling. The intervening space is used for ventilating purposes.

The interiors of the nave, aisles, sanctuary and chapels are finished with vaulted ceilings. The auditorium, sanctuary and choir are lighted by 40 windows, eight on each side, five in the sanctuary walls, one in each gable, and 12 clear-story windows. The seating capacity of the church proper at present is 950, but can be made 1200. The interior finishing of the church is of red quartered oak, of the finest quality. The auditorium, sacristies, vestibule, stairway and organ loft are all finished with paneled wainscotting five feet high and of beautful design. The three entrance doors are double acting, and are five by eight feet. The floors are of the best Georgia pine, and are as smooth as marble. The organ loft is octagonal in shape and rests on three beautiful Gothic arches, supported by handsome Gothic columns, with capitals of the same architecture. The sanctuary rail is of red quartered oak and cherry, and is a marvel of beauty. All the doors in the building are fitted with the very best bronze trimmings.

The grand high altar is of white pine and white wood, and is of Gothic design, with elaborate wood carving. On the front are carved emblems of the sheaf of wheat, grapes, the lamb and seven seals. Near the tabernacle is carved the pelican, its nest and brood, and the chalice surrounded by tracery. It has four richly carved canopies for statues, ending with towers to the height of 28 feet, which are paneled with glass, and may be lighted by gas or electricity. The shrines are placed on each side of the foreground in the sanctuary, and have a main tower of 20 feet high, flanked on either side by smaller ones 14 feet high, with a redos between, while the main tower has paneled and rift canopies for statues, with elaborate tables below. The altar is finished in cream and gold, and is the gift of the Women's Sodality of the parish.

The five chancel windows, which cost from $500 to $1000 each, were furnished by the Tiffany glass and decorating company of New York, and are made of glass known as the "Tiffany fevrile." In the center window is a beautiful figure of the Savior. This window is in memory of the parents of Rev. James Boyle, rector of the church. In the window on its right are the figures of St. Peter and St. John the evangelist. This one memorializes the late Philip L. Keefe. The corresponding window on the left represents St. James and St. Paul. It was given by Rev. Thomas O'Keefe of West Springfield. The other two windows are purely ornamental, but carry a series of inscriptions made up from the general invocations found in the litany of All Saints.

Inside the sanctuary and within the chancel rail are two beautiful figured windows. One represents St. Patrick, and is in memory of the late Patrick McMahon. It is given by his widow. The other one is of St. Joseph, in memory of Jeremiah and Catherine Byrns, and is given by their children. All the other stained glass windows in the body of the church are given by members of the parish. There are windows in memory of Christopher Boyle, in memory of Andrew Crowley, in memory of Luke Reilly, in memory of the parents of Mrs. John Harrison, given by Mrs. Harrison; in memory of Catherine McMahon, given by her husband; and windows given by Margaret Lambert, the Young Ladies' sodality, Thomas McBride, James McArdle, Bridget Darcy, John Kelley, Owen McArdle, John O'Connor, P. J. Downey and the Ancient Order of Hibernians. These windows and two in the sanctuary were furnished by Phipps, Slocum & Co. of Boston. The building is heated by a horizontal tubular boiler of 24-horse power. The pews are Gothic cathedral pews, made from best quartered red oak and paneled on the ends and backs. They were furnished by Ansa Pratt & Co., of Lowell. The furring and formation of the groined ceiling, arches and ribbing was the work of Toomey & Shea of Holyoke. The lighting fixtures are Gothic design. The fixtures are of the style known as the combination, being adapted for both electricity and gas, and the switches connected with them are so arranged that either a portion or the whole of the lights can be used as desired. They were put in by R. Hollings & Co. of Boston.

The interior mural decorations, which were executed by W. J. Dolan of Boston, are in excellent taste throughout. The combination of tints are happily conceived and admirably carried out. The soft hues of gray buff and pearl gray, which predominate, give a most harmonious effect to the entire church. All the modeled stucco work is enriched with light touches of gold. The sanctuary is treated in the same general style as the auditorium, growing deeper toward the base. In the rear of the altar there is rich brownish red hue, on which a fleur-de-lis ornament is executed in gold, and the altar is in cream and gold. The plastering was done by Edward McDermott of East Boston. The hard-wood finish was done by Shea & McCarthy of Ware. The beautiful carpets in the sanctuary and the matting in the aisles were furnished by John H. Pray, Sons & Co. of Boston. Charles Sargeant of Ware had general charge of the interior wood-work finish. The new vestments to be used in the church were purchased at Lyons, France, by the rector, Rev. James Boyle, while recently in Europe, and consist of a complete set of the different colors, in accordance with the rubrics and regulations of the church. The vestments are of moire antique silk, with trimmings of gold embroidery.

Some of the interior and exterior dimensions of the church are as follows: Extreme length from front of tower to back of sacristy, 165 feet; extreme width at trancepts, 76 feet; extreme width of body of auditorium, buttresses included, 71 feet; interior dimensions of auditorium, 63 by 116 feet, 6 inches; sanctuary, 30 by 38 feet; side chapels, 15 feet square; sacristies, 27 by 15 feet; front vestibule, 13 by 32 feet; hight of auditorium sidewalls above the floor, 28 feet; hight to nave and sanctuary ceiling, 55 feet; hight from floor to ridge of roof, 74 feet. The church as now completed is a gem of architectural beauty and one of the finest houses of worship in the state. Cummings & Co. of Ware were the building contractors, and their bill for the work of construction was $43,300. This company also did the interior woodwork finish. The interior furnishings bring the total cost up to $100,000. P. W. Ford of Boston was the architect. The high altar was furnished by Thomas & Co. of Worcester.

Under the church proper is a basement 13 feet high, where services have been held the past five years since the old St. William's church was pulled down. This basement has its nave, aisles, sanctuary and chapels, and is entered through porches at each end of the building. Sixteen large mullion windows, eight on each side of the church, afford light to the basement, the floor of which is only two feet below the finished grade on the lower side of the church. The basement has a seating capacity of 1200 and is fitted up with the furniture used in the old church. The corner-stone of the new church was laid August 19, 1888, by the late Bishop O'Reilly of Springfield, and the sermon on that occasion was preached by the late Rev. J. J. McDermott of the Sacred Heart church in Springfield.

New British birds, indeed, show higher and closer adaptation to special conditions than our dreamy nightjars, essential insect hawkers of the dusk on open and treeless uplands. Their large and mysterious eyes, their gaping mouths, their straining fringe of bristles, their delicate, owllike plumage, their swift and silent flight, their agile movements, their eerie cry, their curious, lovesick nature—all mark them out as marvelously modified nocturnal variants on the general type of the swifts and trogons.

They are, in fact, specialized descendants of the same primitive ancestral form, whose bodies and souls have undergone weird and beautiful changes in adaptation to a wild and poetical life in the shades of dusk on the unpeopled moorland, for birds of twilight have always passionate cries and passionate natures. Not accident alone has given us the whippoorwill and the nightingale.—English Illustrated Magazine.

HOW COULD I KNOW?

So many flowers bloomed in that noonday sun,
How could I know
That when I trod on one
And crushed its golden glow,
Now wandering in dim lowlands brown and sere,
The tiniest faded blossom would seem dear?
How could I know?

There were so many days the sunshine kissed.
How could I know,
When one I gayly missed
And, laughing, let it go,
That in long watches of some solemn night
Dawn's dullest ray I should call heavenly bright?
How could I know?

So many dear ones in those happy years!
How could I know
That when I mocked their tears
And left them, loving so,
In lonely, barren aftertime I'd pray
For weakest touch of hands I flung away?
How could I know?

MICKY HOPKINS.

On the west of Clare, where the mighty billows of the Atlantic beat out their fury against the iron bound coast at the head of a fine bay, is situated the pretty little summer resort of Kilkee. Kilkee at the time of which we are writing was not the fashionable place it has since become. It consisted of a few scattered houses, not more than 40 in number, and one more pretentious than its fellows that rejoiced in the title of "hotel."

It was a wild night in the early winter of 1818 when our narrative opens. Six men were crouching under a promontory to the left of the bay, known as George's head, and were clinging firmly to the underlying rocks to save themselves from being washed away by the waves that ever and anon broke over them.

"She's moighty long widout showin her lights," said one, who appeared to be the leader.

"Musha, but 'tis a pity!" responded the man addressed. "'Tis a foine noight to land the guns. Here, Micky Hopkins, ye've got cat's eyes an can see in the dark. Can ye make out if there's any loight out ther ahead?"

The personage called Micky Hopkins climbed a little higher on the ledge and peered eagerly forward into the night. He was a man of about 45 years old, of small but powerful build, notwithstanding round shoulders which amounted to a deformity. His hands were huge, with long muscular fingers, resembling the talons of a tiger's paw. A bullet head, a coarse mouth, with thick and sensual lips, a decided cast in one watery gray eye, a low forehead and long matted red hair hanging down upon the deformed shoulders, short, bowed legs and long splay feet made up a tout ensemble that was as repulsive as the soul of the man himself. But he was keen and sagacious, and, having a ready and fluent tongue, together with a smattering of education and the reputation of being a good patriot, he exercised no small influence over the ignorant simple minded, truthful fishermen and villagers on the wild western coast of Clare.

After a few minutes spent in peering into the obscurity of the night he called out, with a low, cackling laugh:

"Yis, yis; there 'tis! There's the loight shure enough. Here comes the boat now. Bye, get together an look out for her."

Soon a light was seen rising on the crest of the wave and then being hidden only to rise again. The little group gathered together close to where a small sandy beach jutted down between the cliffs. On came the boat, and, borne on the breast of an incoming billow, it was cast up almost into the arms of the expectant men. Six wooden cases were handed out by the crew and hurriedly carried away.

"Wild noight, captain," said the leader of the men on the shore to one of the new arrivals, a tall, slim person with dark eyes, aquiline nose, long, raven hair and a huge imperial.

"Yes, O'Rourke, you bet it is," replied the stranger. "I have seldom seen such weather between Baltimore and the Irish coast, but it's good for our purpose, Jim. I have over 5,000 stand of arms in the Sea Swallow out there, and I guess I will have them pretty well distributed over the Clare, Cork and Kerry coast by Monday if these dark nights and wild weather last. What news have you got? Is the government watching us, do you think?"

"Not they," said O'Rourke. "Micky Hopkins has fooled thim all roight. They take all he says for gospel. Ye see, his name helps him. He 'lets on' to thim that he's kapin track of us for thim, an whinever we are goin to do anything we send Micky to tell the sogers to watch out for us in a place ten moiles away from where we are going to go entoirely!"

The captain laughed, and his task of landing the arms being accomplished turned his boat's bow once more toward the ocean, and under the steady pull of eight strong arms it disappeared in the darkness.

It was early morning, and Major Robert Singleton, commander of the little British garrison in the town of Kilrush, was just turning over in bed to enjoy the delight of 40 winks of second sleep before rising for parade, when a knock came at his bedroom door.

"Who's there?" he demanded, with sleepy petulance.

"Plase, yer honor, major, there's that humpy back down stairs that you always said you was to see whin he called," said his handmaid.

"Oh, show him up!" answered the major, jumping out of bed with an alacrity in strange keeping with his usual dignified deportment.

Shuffling feet were heard ascending the stairs, and soon Micky Hopkins stood in the doorway, hat in hand, and straining his hump in his bows of reverence.

"Come in, Micky," said the major cheerfully. Then, lowering his voice, he added, "Well, what about the guns?"

"Well, major, all the guns are come now. The last cargo landed last noight. I will lade the sogers down by the secret way we have for gettin to the cave whinever ye give me the wurd."

"Do you thing they suspect you at all, Micky?" inquired the major.

"Not me, sor. Shure they think 'tis me that's foolin you all the time. But they'll foind out to their cost tonight, an ye'll have to take care of me and me family after that, major."

"Don't you fear, Micky," said the major. "The English government never forgets its friends."

The midnight moon was shrouded in a cloudy pall over George's head. The wind swept in from the sea, moaning as if bearing the souls of drowned mariners to eternal doom. A belated sea gull, like a whirling snowflake in the dark, occasionally circled around the cliff's stern brow. The waves splashed calmly 100 feet below. All else was wrapped in silence.

Creeping slowly and tediously by a narrow, rugged pathway down the side of the cliff to the shore were 30 armed men, led by a short, squat hunchbacked little fellow. Each of the 30 men wore the red uniform of England. Their guide was dressed in his ordinary fisherman's clothes.

"Just turn the corner cliff to the roight," he stopped to whisper to the officer in command. "Thin ye will see the mouth of the cave. Run roight in, an twinty feet ahead ye will come to a door. Batter it in, an ye have the chickens an the eggs."

He then climbed up the steep face of the cliff with the agility of a monkey.

The soldiers crept on, formed in front of the cave, rushed down the passage, burst open the door at its end and captured 16 unsuspecting fishermen who were in the act of drilling by the dim light of several rush lamps that disclosed many stands of arms lying around.

A short, desperate struggle, and the 16 men, with handcuffs on their wrists, were marched out to the coast guard's boats that had crept up unseen on the other side of the headland. The arms found in the cave were piled in with the prisoners.

Major Singleton was angry, and when Major Singleton was angry those about him generally knew it.

Micky Hopkins stood crouching like a whipped cur in the corner, while the major strode up and down the room relieving his feelings.

"So, Hopkins, so!" exclaimed the major, "you promised me to have O'Rourke in the cave when we surprised it, and the bird had flown—the game rooster of the barnyard! Now, look here," and the major pointed his long, bony forefinger menacingly at the badly scared Micky, "until you find out where O'Rourke is hid not one penny do you get nor a ticket to Canada for your family either!"

"Oh, murther!" cried the luckless Micky. "Oh, major, darlin, I'll do me livin best, but 'tis a hard job y'er settin me."

The Widow O'Rourke was sitting in front of her little cabin. The declining sun cast its gentle rays upon the old, weather beaten, timeworn face, with its quaint crown of snowy hair, the sunshine a harbinger of the eternal radiance that ere long should shine forever on the time bent figure when it should be rejuvenated beyond those clouds that now appeared like golden headlands where the sun went down.

The Widow O'Rourke was nearing the threescore years and ten, and she might well have said "Few and evil have my days been" since the hungry waves had sucked down her husband and two brave sons off the treacherous coast near Loop head many drear days agone. He, Jimmy, the child of her later years, was all that was left to her now, and Jimmy, a tall, powerful, fearless young fellow of five and twenty, with an eye like an eagle, a frame like a colossus and a face like an Apollo, was a son of whom any mother might be proud.

The widow was gazing dreamily upon the placid ocean, shining now like beaten gold, and beneath whose bosom her three loved ones were sleeping their last long sleep. Her knitting had fallen into her lap; her hands hung idly by her side; her eyes had that faraway look of those whose mental vision conjures up the forms of those long loved and lost.

"Good evenin, Widow O'Rourke!" said a dry, harsh voice beside her, and raising her eyes she beheld the repulsive and cunning face and the crooked figure of Micky Hopkins.

"Yera Widow O'Rourke, but the toimes are awful, astruh!" he continued, seating himself on the stump of a decaying mast washed up by the sea. "To think of thim 16 brave byes bein marched off to jail to be hanged for t'rason at the next assizes! Lord, lord, but the man that gave them away should have holes bored through his toes an be hung be them till he was dead."

"True for ye, Micky Hopkins," said the widow. "Shure the noight of the arrests my Jim had suspicions of ye an said he thought ye were too anxchus entoirely to get him to the cave thin, an he said this mornin that he was more fixed than iver now that ye tould the sogers, for ye took care not to be in the cave yerself when they kum. But I sez to him that ye was always talking about Oirland bein free, an ye samed a true man, an thin ye had known him since he was a 'gossoon' an that ye knew his father before him, God rest his soul! an would do him an his no harm."

"True fer ye, widow," said Hopkins, "me name's agin me, I know, an Moike Sheehan, the blauguard, told me to me face that me father was an English coachman of Lord Clare's an wint back on me muther after givin her a child for her cradle before she had a husband for her bed. The spalpeen, Sheehan! At the lasth fair of Kilrush I het him on the head wid a rock for his smart sayin, an he niver knew who struck him aither."

"Well, well, Micky," said the old woman, "yer not to blame for yer name nor for the sins of yer parents, but I always took ye to be partial to me an me bye, an ye wudn't do us hurt, wud ye?"

"Widow O'Rourke," said the spy, rising himself as erect as his round shoulders would allow, "may I never recave the mercy of God if I'd see wan of the hairs of aither of yer heads injured. I'd give me heart's blood for ye an yer foine bye, widow, that I wud!" And Micky put a grimy hand across his face and whimpered.

Every Irishman is a born actor and can with ease assume whatever role he desires. Snuffling down his feigned emotion, Micky continued: "Yera widow arragil, but I was anxchus to hear about the bye when word came that the sogers had tuk the cave. I knelt down on me knees an prayed that the Holy Vargin an all the saints moight protect him, an me prayer was answered, wasn't it, widow?"

"Yes," said the widow, her aged eyes beaming on the one to whom her boy's life was apparently so precious, "an as yer so anxchus to know he's safe I may tell ye betwane us that he's asleep on the loft within."

A gleam of fiendish gratification lit up for an instant the evil face of Hopkins, and after keeping the widow in conversation for a sufficient length of time to allay all suspicions on her part he left her sitting there by the cabin, gazing out upon the golden sea.

DR. HOLMES TO A YOUNG MAN.

He Had No Work For This Literary Aspirant, but Gave Him Advice.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once wrote as follows to a young and ambitious literary aspirant who applied to him for a position as private secretary:

DEAR SIR—I regret that it is not in my power to direct you to any place of employment such as you desire. In a city like this the crowding toward all such employments is very great, and there are a few situations to be divided among a great number of applicants. As for myself, I am not (as I am often supposed to be) an editor and have no writing to do which I am not competent to do myself with a little occasional aid from the members of my own family.

I regret not to be able to give you encouragement as to employment in Boston, but the truth is there is next to nothing of the kind you mention, most of our writers being as poor as rats themselves and no more able to keep an amanuensis than they are able to set up a coach and six.

I do not even know how to advise you beyond this simple counsel, which I have occasionally given to young aspirants: If you think you have literary talents, write something for the best paper or magazine you can get into, keep to one signature, and you will be found out by a public which is ready to give the highest price for almost every kind of literary ability.

I do not "turn from your petition with cold indifference," but it is utterly out of my power to do more than give you these few words of kindly advice. O. W. HOLMES.

Burial Among the Sihanakas.

Among the Sihanakas there are no regular burying places for the dead bearing any resemblance to the cemeteries with which Europeans are familiar, and in the majority of cases nothing but a simple sepulchral mound marks the spot where interment has taken place. In a few solitary instances I have found rude human figures carved in wood placed upright at the four corners of a tumulus of oblong form, but such as I have seen are in an advanced state of decay, and I have not heard of any of recent date.

The looking glass, the snuffbox, the comb, knife, spear and walking stick and the necklace which belonged to the deceased, and also a bottle of rum, are, as a rule, buried with the corpse. Many will recognize in this a very ancient custom observed by other nations. In the tombs of Assyria, discovered and opened by Mr. Layard, were found beads, small ornaments apparently belonging to a necklace, vases of green pottery, copper mirrors and copper spoons, bracelets of silver, a pin for the hair, bowls and small alabaster bottles.—Sunday Magazine.

The Mule and the Turtle.

"To the traditional antipathies of the animals," gossiped the planter from North Carolina, "must be added the mutual dislikes of the mule and the turtle. Whether it is the uncanny appearance or the subtle, fishlike odor of the turtle I am unable to say. But if he pops up his head from the water in the same field where a mule is at work there will be no more plowing corn that day.

"I have known mules which would not go near the brook for days because a turtle had trailed off under the bushes when they were taken down to drink. And I have seen them take the bit between their teeth and break out of a field on a dead run when the scent of turtle was in the air.

"There are some who believe that the mules mistake terrapins for muskrats. Nearly every plantation mule which has worked by the waterside has been annoyed by putting its hoof through the soil down into the muskrat's winter home. And his antipathy for the muskrat thus becomes a question of experience if not of instinct."—New York Mail and Express.

OLD COLONEL CAMERA.

"What's all this fuss about,
This frantic rushing up and down?"
"Oh, haven't you heard the news, my dear?
Everybody is wild with fear,
For old Colonel Camera
Has come to take the town."

Right and left the people were running;
You could hear the fat ones pant and strive,
And a bride and groom were shouting madly,
"We'll never, never be taken alive!"
There was nobody in that devoted city
Whom Mrs. O'Flaherty had not scorned,
For she was a cook with a deep conviction
That her profession she well adorned,
But when she saw how she was taken
She sat her down, and she wept and mourned.

The valiant few who resisted boldly,
As a matter of course were taken first,
And the noncommittal, who looked on coldly,
As they deserved, were taken worst.

Not one escaped from the doughty colonel.
He nobody spared, nor great nor small.
Their flights and struggles were worse than useless,
For at last they were taken, one and all.

So, if you should meet this conquering hero,
Don't try to hide or to run or fight,
But assume your very best expression
And put yourself in a pleasing light.
—Margaret Vandegrift in St. Nicholas.

THE AYAH.

The bungalow in the white radiance of the moonlight seemed deserted. Its broad gallery, reaching to the roof of the low thatched building, rang no echo to happy voices, but the faint glimmer of a light from one of the windows gave proof that one occupant, at least, was keeping a vigil.

Near the bungalow, at short distances from one another, were pitched tents, like silent sentinels at their post, keeping mute watch.

At the opening of one of these stood the quiet figure of a man of strong athletic build and military bearing, a face browned by the fierce Indian sun and clear cut Saxon features. He looked "every inch a soldier." Divers were the thoughts that held Captain Gartshore's fancy on this calm and peaceful night.

He had just left the merry company at the bungalow and gone to his tent to sleep, but sleep was impossible. The wonderful beauty of the night—which, almost as brilliant as the day, was a duplicate robbed of the intense heat and mellowed by a gentler radiance—held him spellbound. An agitation of mind that had possessed him passed away under the tranquil influence of the scene, and a serenity stole upon him like some invisible power, irresistible and not unwelcome.

He reviewed the events of the past seven months to the most minute detail—from the day that the steamship arrived in Bombay with his superior officer Colonel Campbell, who, returning from a furlough, brought a bride and her most intimate school friend, Helen Arundel.

Alec Gartshore was a man who had never believed in the strength of first impressions or love at first sight, but there was a witchery about Helen that had interested him from the start. It was not her beauty—though her face, ever vivacious and lighted up with expressive brown eyes, was charming in its piquant grace—but her sweet and innocent nature was her greatest charm. From the first they had been thrown together.

The object of the journey to the jungle was twofold—the colonel had come to inspect wild horses that were being trained for army use, and as the camp was delightfully situated as well as healthful he had decided to make a pleasure trip of it. Gartshore had caused his canoe to be brought on the shoulders of stalwart, swarthy Indians on the 80 miles journey, that Helen and he, like old voyagers, might glide down the winding river to that poetry of motion.

Often Helen in a sweet voice would sing snatches of songs in which Alec joined, while the swishing of the paddles dipping in the water added the refrain. Halcyon days these and never to be forgotten!

Upon Helen's arrival in India an ayah had been secured for her whose duties were those of a maid or duenna, and whose doglike fidelity and affection for her young mistress were reciprocated by much kindness and indulgence on Helen's part. A docile, tractable creature, tall and lithe, yet with great dignity of carriage, eyes dark and humid, with features regular and the full pouting mouth of the oriental, always garbed in the soft Indian muslin swathed about her figure.

On this evening the ayah and her strong affection for Helen had been a theme for conversation and criticism in the little company, Helen and the colonel's wife contending that the woman's fidelity was genuine, and that not a trace of hypocrisy was in her nature, while the men, laughing a little derisively, said that after the ladies had lived in India longer their confidence in the faithfulness of native servants would be weakened if not entirely lost.

Helen, aroused in behalf of her servant, had said spiritedly: "Thank heaven! I am not skeptical, nor can I be made so. I trust and love my good ayah as I do my friends."

"As you do me?" Gartshore asked in a low voice as he took her hand to say good night. Helen made no answer, but her hand trembled in his close grasp.

Alec thought of his question and Helen's silent reply as in his reverie his thoughts had drifted back to the events of that evening, and, rousing himself, he hastily wrote a few words which he gave to a native lying near and told him to deliver to Miss Arundel.

Entering the house, the Indian gave a low knock at the door of Helen's apartment. The ayah, her bare brown feet making no sound on the matted floor, opened the door, took the message and with a low salaam laid the little missive in her mistress' lap.

Helen was seated in a low wicker chair in her little dressing room, her hair unbound and falling in luxuriant masses over her shoulders. Her eyes were fixed pensively on the pages of "Selections From Buddha," and these words were sinking deep, deep into her heart "Oh, worldly men! how fatally deluded, beholding everywhere the body brought to dust, yet everywhere the more carelessly living. The heart is neither lifeless wood nor stone, and yet it remembers not that all is vanishing!"

So absorbed was Helen in these words fraught with such potent meaning that she had not noticed the woman's movements until suddenly seeing the note she read the following words, while a soft color rose to her cheeks:

DEAR MISS ARUNDEL—Will you go with me for an early canter, say at 5 tomorrow? I am anxious to tell you of something. If you will go, you need send no answer. Again good night. ALEC GARTSHORE.

"Ayah," said Helen as the woman, with her low salutation, was about to withdraw to the mat that served as her bed outside the door of the apartment, "ayah, you may wake me at 4, as I go for an early ride with Captain Gartshore."

The woman had stopped on the threshold, hesitating and ill at ease.

"Well, what is it?" asked Helen, somewhat impatiently. "Tell me what you wish."

"Nothing, missy. Ayah wish for nothing, but ayah wish to say something to missy—wish very much."

As no familiarity is attempted by these servavants of the tropics, it was with great difficulty the woman begged for the interview. Helen saw the trepidation and pitied her.

"My good ayah, tell me what it is you desire. Do you need money, or are you weary of the jungle life and wish to return to Madras?"

"Ah, no, memesahib," expostulated the Indian. "Ayah wishes no greater happiness than to be near you. No money ayah requires, nor her heart longs for the beautiful city. It is one little story she wishes to tell you," and her richly tinted skin flushed, and her gentle eyes looked troubled. "Do you love the captain, dear lady?"

"How dare you ask such a question?" cried Helen indignantly. "You displease me greatly, ayah."

"Forgive me," was all the woman said as, kneeling, she put her forehead to the hem of her mistress' gown.

Helen's was a sympathetic and tender heart, and, seeing the utter abasement of the Indian, she relented, and, putting her hand softly on the ayah's head, she said, "I will hear your little story."

It was a vivid, glowing picture that the candles in the queer twisted eastern candlesticks lighted up. Helen, in a loose white wrap, was seated before a mirror, her eyes fastened on the woman's reflection. The latter had risen from the floor, her pliant form swaying to and fro as she brushed her mistress' hair. She looked like some seeress about to utter a prophecy or incantation as she began her little tale, speaking now in broken English and now in Tamil, her native dialect.

"Ayah has in her heart a great love for her dear lady—a love like the waters that separate missy from her home, deep and strong. It is not one easy thing for ayah to speak, but her heart say 'tell,' her love say 'speak.' She knows that missy like the captain very much, and he loves you, but while missy gives him her whole heart he cannot give her his whole love, for that is divided—part to missy and part to another."

Helen listened, a growing sense of danger and apprehension that she could not fathom making her dumb, while the ayah went on, her voice taking a dreary monotone.

"In Madras there is a dark woman, beautiful, but not like the missy. One day the captain he sees this native, and she gives him a drink that she makes from one herb, and it causes him to love her."

A rigid grip seemed clutching at Helen's throat and heart. She put her hands forth vaguely to tear it away. She tried to speak, but her tongue was palsied, and the Indian, divining nothing, continued in her singsong minor tone.

"The captain gives this Maya—for that is her name—much money, silks and jewels for her hair, but Maya never loves him, and she only gets his love by always sprinkling the potion about his house and in his wine. When he is away from her, he hates himself and her, and his heart is all for missy, but when he goes back to Maya he will love her again."

Helen had drunk the bitter cup in all its strength, for she could not doubt a word of the narrative. Her first great trouble had found her alone, and she must meet it single handed, for what comfort could this poor child of darkness, with her mystical religion, bring to her?

Moments passed; the ayah had thrown herself prone to the floor. Helen, pale and shivering, gazed on the prostrate figure as if it were something polluted that had been cast at her feet by some receding tide. She tried to stand, but her sound young limbs lacked power.

Then the distressed soul whose love was unquestioning seemed to feel rather than see the sorrow she had wrought, and, shuffling to her feet, she took Helen like a babe in her arms and laid her on a couch, trying ineffectually to soothe by softly stroking her face and head. Finally as a palliative she began to speak in an appeasing, crooning voice, as one would lull a child to rest. "Listen, dear missy, to what ayah tells. She knows one medicine man, a native. From him she will get a potion, and with it she will go to the captain's house, and the native butler, who knows her well, will let her in to see the house. Then it is she will secretly sprinkle the floors and walls. Then, when the poor captain shall come home he sees Maya at once in her true self, and he shall send her from the house. Then he come back to missy, and his whole heart will be for her."

These words seemed to rouse Helen from her apathy. "Stop," she commanded sternly.

"Oh, missy," said the eastern woman meekly, but earnestly, "I cannot work the charm without your permission. Will dear missy consent?"

"Oh," answered Helen drearily, for she realized the utter impossibility of reasoning with this child of mystery, "there is no need of charms or potions or my consent, for I do not love this man. And now you may go. But wait," as a sudden thought came to her mind, "I wish to send a note to Captain Gartshore." And with trembling, cold fingers that could scarcely do her will she wrote these words:

CAPTAIN GARTSHORE—I cannot ride with you tomorrow. HELEN ARUNDEL.

"Go now," said Helen solemnly, her face like that of some accusing spirit, "go and pray to your God for peace."

Long after the ayah had softly closed the door Helen sat immovable, hopeless and alone, the drawn lines of her mouth indicative of her heart's pain and struggle.

Hour after hour went by. They seemed years to Helen, and when at last the signal of Captain Gartshore, the ardent sun, sent its first rosy rays in at her window it fell not on Helen—she was ever to be in shadow—but on those words of wisdom:

"O worldly men! How fatally deluded, beholding everywhere the body brought to dust, yet everywhere the more carelessly living! The heart is neither lifeless wood nor stone, and yet it remembers not that all is vanishing!"—Mabel Wynne in Boston Transcript.

Jumping Pills.

A Germantown bachelor of convivial habits, missing his last train, spent the night with a friend in town and met with a harrowing experience. When they awoke in the morning, the Germantown man, to use his own expression, felt like a fur salesman who had swallowed his samples. He was still a trifle under the influence of the rosy, and his nerves were not in the best possible condition. On the dressing case was an open pillbox containing two pellets. He was about to ask his friend what kind of pills they were when one of them gave a little squirm and turned completely over. The Germantown man rubbed his eyes and stared in amazement. Then the other pill slowly began rolling about the box, and his eyes threatened to bulge out of their sockets. The two pills next began hopping up and down, as though trying to escape from the box. Thoroughly frightened, the Germantowner gave a yell, and, jumping into bed, pulled the clothes over his head.

"Take 'em away," he groaned.

"Take what away?" asked his very much surprised friend.

"Those pills in that box. Have I got 'em, or are they really jumping about?"

"Pills!" was the laughing reply. "They're not pills. They're a couple of those jumping beans I bought yesterday and put in the pillbox to keep."—Philadelphia Record.

A Remarkable Addition.

Two menageries recently arrived in Bologna, one of which was under the management of Signor B——, and the other under that of his wife, traveling respectively on their own account. Here they decided to join their forces, and the fact was announced on the bills as follows:

"Owing to the arrival of my wife, my collection of living animals is considerably augmented. B——."—L'Uomo Allegro in Conversazione.

Disputed.

Papa came down to dinner one day with a coat on much the worse for wear at the elbows. As he took his seat he apologized for wearing so rusty a coat outside his study.

A Brief Summing Up.

The late Justice Denman of London had on one occasion to review a great mass of evidence in a damage suit. Following this came long winded addresses by the opposing lawyers. Justice Denman summed up by turning to the jury and saying, "How much?" In less than a minute came the reply, "Five pounds." And the case was over.

HAVE YOU HEARD?

A Little Secret Whispered for the Ladies. This Secret is Not Only for Young Ladies, but for the Mothers of Families and for all Interested.

MRS. E. L. TAYLOR AND DAUGHTER.

Wonderful and extraordinary events among well-known women strongly and powerfully interest all. This country is filled with noble-minded women who earnestly desire to promote the welfare of their sex. One of the brightest and most intellectual of these is Mrs. E. L. Taylor, who resides at 17 Baker Block, Main street, Ticonderoga, N. Y. She says:

"A year ago I became fearfully nervous and completely run down so that I was obliged to stop work. I got so that I could hardly eat anything and what little I did eat distressed me terribly. I had nervous prostration and dyspepsia, and was terribly weak.

"I tried physicians and medicines but all to no good. I had heard much about the wonders of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and began to feel that it would do me good. I determined to try it. After commencing it, I began to feel better almost immediately and steadily improved under its wonderful influence.

"After taking five bottles I was completely cured of all my complaints, and was a perfectly well woman. I cannot tell you how thankful I am for having taken Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I advise everyone to use it, for I know the good it did me and what it is doing for others."

The positive and straightforward statements made by the fore-sighted and deep-thinking men and women who are cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, gives to these testimonials such strength and influence that everybody acknowledges the genuine worth and marvelous power to cure of this wonderful medicine.

Everybody takes Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy for it always cures.

It is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by any one, at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

CHARLES E. LYNCH.

JUST a thought to-day! Have you seen LYNCH'S OVERCOATS, ULSTERS, SUITS? They are creating a wide-spread interest everywhere. Such fabrics, such trimmings, such workmanship, above all such magnificence of style and proportion are rarely, if ever, seen.

They are bound to please and give satisfaction. Better goods are not made.

LYNCH'S OVERCOATS.

LYNCH'S $10 Kersey—a fine, substantial, serviceable Overcoat. It would have sold easily for $15 in former years. Lynch's $15, $18, $20 garments are simply grand—built for service, style and comfort. They will please and serve you thoroughly. LYNCH'S $25, $30, $40 and $50 garments truly rival the finest Custom garments that have been or that can be made.

LYNCH'S ULSTERS.

A splendid $10 ULSTER. Shawl or notched collar. Extra long. Specially designed. The banner Ulster to-day. Well made and substantial. It can't be equalled anywhere.

A Fine Frieze Ulster for $15. Lined throughout with heavy worsteds. Waterproof. Windproof. Compare it with $20 and $22 Ulsters. It's just as good.

Finer grades at $18, $20 and $22.

LYNCH'S SUITINGS.

LYNCH'S LEADER. A fine line of Black Cheviots. Double stitched seams throughout. A most serviceable Suit. $10. It would be reasonable at $12.

At $15—A splendid all-wool Clay Suit. Well worth $20. Regent Frock or Cutaway Sack. Stitched or bound edges. The greatest value yet.

At $18, $20, $22, $25, $28, $30—Fine Cassimeres, English and German Worsteds. Choice imported fabrics. The very choicest materials possible.

PASKOLA.
(Trade Mark)
A FLESH FORMING FOOD.
(Artificially Digested.)

For pale, thin people. The tired and weary feeling which accompanies all wasting diseases will be relieved at once, the wasting will be arrested and new healthy tissue will be formed so that they will become plump and strong. An increase in weight will be noticed at once. It is stimulating although it contains no alcohol. It is assimilated without digestive effort. Paskola supersedes Cod Liver Oil, but has not its repulsive taste. You can buy it at any drug store. Send your name to the Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade St., New York, and get their interesting pamphlet.

TO THE WORLD OF WOMEN.

Mothers and Daughters Restored to Health and Strength.

Weak, nervous, delicate, overworked women are the ones that need a strength builder, a tonic for their nerves, and a cure for that awful internal trouble that is wearing out their lives. Thousands of women have found such in Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Mrs. Christiana Beal, of Jonesport, Me., writes that her daughter had been a great sufferer from female trouble, and after repeated trials of doctor's prescriptions and other so-called cures, she used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and it permanently cured her.

If you have headache, uterine catarrh, leucorrhœa, or irregular monthly sickness, chronic weakness, bearing down incidental to change of life, or any of the attending evils that are present in female complaints, use Favorite Remedy, for it will build up quickly the run down constitution and bring refreshing sleep. It will dispel those tired looks and feelings, restore the nervous system and permanently cure you. Our daughters grow up weak and delicate; mothers can avoid such conditions by giving them Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. 32

November.

Forsaken fields and forests bare,
The sun that sinks—a ruddy ember,—
The naked trees, the nipping air
Make thy nativity known, November!

The saddest daughter of the year!
Born naked as a human creature,
No wonder pained she doth appear,
And pallid as she's pinched of feature.

Without a charm, the chilly days
We grumble at, are shorter growing;
And very soon, (the prophet says,)
E'en in a wee, it will be snowing.

When winsome warblers fly afar
On wafted wing and pulsing pinion,
The glowing stove 's the brightest star
That duty does in our dominion.

Haul home the logs and feed the fire
With fuel till the rooms are rosy,
Till every face that we admire
Becomes a perfect winter posy.

And while the storm blows stiff without,
And rain against the pane is pelting,
Good cheer shall put our cares to rout,
And memories move our hearts to melting.

Nor let us ghostly guests forget—
The loved ones silent, lost but living:—
O not in vain the chair is set
That seemeth vacant at Thanksgiving.

Though nature now doth go asleep,
To spring she'll know a brighter waking
Than if she broken watch did keep,
And smiled the while her heart was breaking.

Below the brown and shriveled leaves
The grass as yet is green and tender;
And garnered are the golden sheaves,
For nature is her own defender.

The skies may frown, may come the frost;
Beauty is gone,—we couldn't save it;
And yet the good is never lost,—
It all goes back to God, who gave it.

But pity her without who stands
And stares like one who could remember.
Nasturtiums cannot warm her hands,
Though they're on fire for nude November.

MOSES TEGGART.

MOLLY'S TWISTS.

"Sure, Molly's the most unfortunate craythur that iver you see," said Donald, "for misunderstandin' gintale conversayshun intirely. Shure, no matter what you're pleased to say, she'll take it in its literary sinse; like as whin, in spakin' of the great shower of rain we had, the praste said 'the windys of heaven were open.' 'It's right, your riverence is,' says Molly, 'for faith I heard the smashin' of one of the panes.' And if the stupid gurril wasn't afther gazin' up into the skoi, to see if the windy had been shut!

"Molly's me cousin, sorr, as we make it out in Ireland, and very aisy reckonin' it is, for, in straight decint backward, me great-grandfeyther and Tim O'Gorman's great-grandmother were brothers, and Tim's wife's grandmother and Molly's stepmother's feyther's uncle were sisters.

"So you see that whin Molly's feyther was transported and her mother died, me feyther couldn't let his own flesh and blood perish with hunger, and he took her in, and we were brought up like two twinses in the same cradle. Well, there niver was enough of anythin' in the shanty for two babies, and whin Molly had the sup of milk I hollered with an empty stomach, and whin I was covered up with the bedquilt she ran around to keep herself warm, which is my understandin' of how it happened that I got all the brains and she got all the good looks. There wasn't enough of ayther for the two of us. And sure its a beauty Molly is intirely, with the purtiest rid checks, and black hair that reaches down to the knees of her. And great rollin' eyes, soft and gentle, and set wide apart in the honest face of her, like those of a little Kerry cow; eyes that look you straight in the face and yet never seem to see nothin.' She was never sinsible that you were pokin' fun at her, and she hadn't a mimory long enough to remimber an onkoindness.

"She nursed me feyther when he died of the faver, and she cared for me poor bedrid mother, and kept me at school, and dug the pertaties, and did all the work there was to be done till I was grown a man in size. Sorra a bit of thanks did she get for that same. For, by the same token, the more you give a bye the iddication of a gintleman the more he'll look down on thim that slaved thimsilves to death to raise him; leastwise it was that way with me, sorr, and me pet name for Molly in thim days was, 'You blunderin' ignyramus of a grane cabbage head.' And sure it would have angered a saint to have seen the stupid things that Molly did, all the time tryin' her very best to moind what I said, all through the thickheadedness of her understandin'.

"Well, one day I brought home a piece of mate, and it's not often we had the luxury of a beefsteak in thim days, and by the same token, Molly had no more idea how she should cook it than if it was the dinner of an imperor. 'Put it on with a cabbage-head!' says I, 'and sure an illegant biled dinner we'll be after makin'.' With that I took me hoe and went to work at the end of the lot. But, howly saints! when I came back hungry for me dinner, what did I see but the pig munchin' the breakfast forninst the cottage, and Molly goin' about her wurruk singin' as merrily as a lark in the mornin'.

"'Why, Donal, dear,' says Molly, 'you said put it on a cabbage head, and first I thought it was my own head yees was manin', for that is what you're always callin' me, and thin I thought it couldn't be that, sure, and so I laid it on the biggest cabbage in the yard. It's thinkin' about these things that muddles me up, and after this, Donal, dear, I'll niver think about anythin',' and the tears riz in her eyes as she spoke. 'And oh! Donal, do yees think it will do the pig any harm?'

"Well, I was that mad I could have bate her, but a Malloy is always a gintleman, and never beats a lady—savin' and exceptin' his lawful wedded wife. 'Molly, Molly,' says I, 'this is beyond all bearin'! Sure it's lavin' you I am, for his Holiness the Pope couldn't live with you after this,' says I.

"'Just as you plaze, Donal, dear,' says Molly; 'but if you're goin' away I'll go wid ye, for sure I couldn't live widout you.'

"I made her no answer, but just struck out across the fields, not rightly knowin' or carin' which way I wint; but happenin' to look round, I saw her followin' after.

"'If you will be comin',' says I, 'draw the door to behind you,' for I mistrusted that while she went back to shut the door I could get well out of sight of her. To do this the better I made straight for a bit of boggy woods, and lapin' into the midst of it, I went crashin' me way through till, before I knew it, I was in the open bog, and a sinkin' deeper and deeper with every plunge in the bad ground. This brought me to me sinses; and I tried to turn round and come back, but I was in a sort of quicksand, and the more I struggled the more I sank, till I was up to me waistband in the cowld clammy mud. I hollered and I bellered, without any likilihood of making mesilf heard in that lone place, and with the illegant prospect of having me mouth soon stopped with the mud; and I,d about given mesilf up to me fate when I heard Molly callin' 'Donal, where are you, Donal?'

"'Here, Molly, darlint,' says I, 'but look careful where you're steppin', and forgive me for all the evil things I've said of you, for it's dyin' I am.'

"'Whist! Donal, be aisy; I'll git you out,' says she.

"'Ye can't do it,' says I, 'for even if you should lay down a log for me to catch on to I mistrust it wouldn't bear me up; what I nade is a flat boat, and there's no time for the gittin' of that, for I'm sinkin' deeper ivery minute.'

"'By the same token, it is this that I've brought the doore for,' says she. With that she laid the doore of our cottage flatwise on the bog, and I managed to crawl upon it and get safely to sound land.

"'And how, in the name of all the saints, did you happen to have the doore wid ye?' says I, as she scraped the mud off me trousers. 'Why, Donal, dear,' says she, 'don't you mind how you towld me to draw the doore to behind me? Sure, I'd have been here the sooner but for the trouble I had gettin' it off its hinges and tyin' the halter well around it and draggin' it afther me.'

"I was sinsible enough that it was Molly's blunderin' that had saved me life, and she looked so purty, with her cheeks a-flamin' and her eyes a shinin' that I kissed her thin and there, and as I did so I minded how she had said that she couldn't live widout me, and a new idea come into me head and nearly knocked me sinseless. I thought that Molly might be even more satisfactory as a wife than as a cousin, and what a fool I had been not to have thought of it all these years. I was afraid to ask her right out would she marry me, knowin' how much it would surprise her and misthrustin' that no one had iver axed her before. So I waited till we had eaten our pertaties that avenin', and as I was sittin' on the door-sill smokin' me pipe and Molly was washin' the dishes, I says, careless-like:

"'Molly, did you iver think of bein' married?'

"'That same I have, Donal,' says she.

"'Well, what have yees thought about it?' says I.

"'I've about made up me moind,' says she, 'that it's married I'll be.'

"'What!' says I, 'yees don't say that yees already promised? Who is the gossoon?' says I, 'tell me, and I'll break his head for him. How long has this been goin' on, ye desateful craythur?'

"'Don't be angry, Donal, dear,' says Molly, 'but I've been thinkin' about it iver since yer mither died. Sure, it isn't dacent for me to be kapin' house for yees in this lone way.'

"'Whin are yees after bein' married?' says I.

"'What do you think of Christmas day, Donal?' says she.

"'Make it Michaelmas,' says I, 'and maybe by that time I can scare up a wife mesilf, for it will be lonesome widout yees.'

"'Just as ye plaze, Donal, darlint,' says Molly, and we settled back again into the ould ways.

"But though I kept watch for him niver a peep could I catch of Molly's young man, they were that sly, the craythers! and though I considered in me moind all the gurruls in Tipperary, there was not one of them I wanted for a wife, and I had no money to go courtin' with, and whin I considered how hard it was to make me livin' with Molly, I wondered what should I do when she was gone.

"Those were sad days for Ireland, for, by the same token, what with the landlords livin' in London, away from the estates, and the agents carin' only how they could squeeze the rint out of the tinants, and turnin' thim as were behind out of their cottages and farms, to starve on the roads, no wonder the byes, with the discouragemint, got wild like, and did crazy things entirely. They made a society amongst thimsilves, and they helped the poor people that were thrown out of their shanties, and they bothered the bad landlords. But I niver had any doin's with thim, for by one way or another I had always had the rint ready, though the pig wint for it one quarter, and sorra another bit of mate did we have that winter after the steak that Molly put on the cabbage. No more had Molly a new dress or a bonnet, and she had denied herself the amusement of ivery wake that had been held in the parish till her spirits were growin' as heavy as her understandin'.

"There was a fair at Cashel, and one fine day, 'Molly,' says I, 'I'll take what eggs we have in me handkercher an' I'll sell thim at the fair an' bring ye home a ribbon,' says I, and with the eggs in one hand and me shillaly in the other off thrudges I to the fair.

"Now, while I was gone, who should come to the cottage but one of the byes to get me to meet with thim the night at the crannach to help thim with some of their diviltry.

"Now they were not that sure of me that they could out with their business to once, so Murtagh began, in a roundabout way, and 'Whist! Molly,' says he, 'is Donal a 'Ribbon man?' ' says he.

"'Not yit,' says Molly, thinkin of the ribbon I had promised to bring her; 'but by the same token, he's thinkin' of bein' one when he comes back from the fair.'

"'That's good,' says Murtagh, 'and if it's sure you are that he's with the 'Ribbon,' tell him to meet with us at midnight in the skirts of Ballymoran forest.'

"'I will that same,' says Molly, and to be sure that she shouldn't forgit, knowin' her talent for twistifyin' a message, they made her repeat it three times—'Midnight in the skirts of Ballymoran forest.'

"Now it's right you are in thinkin' that Molly made a mess of it intirely, but before I tell you the how and whyfore of that, you must know the luck that came to me on the way to the fair.

"I was thrudgin' along whistlin' to mesilf when I heard a great rackit behind me, and whin I looked around, there was a gintleman's dog-cart a-runnin' away with his horse, and the gintleman himself a-runnin' afther, and by great exartion, losin' a rod or two the minute. I planted mesilf in the middle of the road, and droppin' me eggs I grabbed hould of the bridle and hild on to the baste till he tired of draggin' me, and the gintleman come up pantin' and blowin'.

"The horse it quieted down afther a bit, and presently the gintleman's footman came up a rubbin' of his showlder, which had been hurt with bein' tumbled in a ditch. 'Ye'd better go back to the hall, Terry,' says the gintleman, 'an' have the docther look at your showlder,' says he, 'I'll drive on to the fair if this honest lad will get up beside me and hould the horse when I get down,' says he.

"'Thank you, your honor,' says I, 'and it's just what I'd like for I'm goin' to the fair mesilf to trade me eggs for a ribbon for Molly,' and then I looked around and there were me eggs all scrambled, ready for the atein', into what the Frinch cooks to the gentry calls a epaulette, or an amulit, or the likes of that.

"Well, the gintleman, when he see the condition of the eggs, first he laughed, and thin he said it was a pity, it was, but niver moind, Molly should have her ribbon and the best he could find at the fair. With that we rode on togither, and a right pleasant-spoken man I found him, barrin' a great trick of askin' questions about the tinants and the agent, and how much the pertaties sold for, and how much could I save when the rint was paid, and this, that, and the other. And at the fair he was here, there and everywhere, talkin' with iveryone, and askin' and askin' more questions than a praste with the catechism. But he didn't forget Molly's ribbon, don't you be talkin'; an illigant one it was, with a rid satin shtripe and roses blossomin' all over it. Thin he said, 'Donal, come in; let me see you take a turn at the dancin';' but though there was a harper an' a fiddler on the grounds there was no one dancin'. 'And why is this?' says his honor.

"'If your honor pleases,' says I, 'it's because the poor people of this country have little time, money or heart to spend on the dancin'.'

"'It doesn't please my honor at all,' says the gintleman. 'I've heard so much of the blithe village games of Ireland I fancied a fair would be much gayer.'

"'You should have seen our fairs in the ould days,' says I," whin

"'The byes were all in muslin dressed,
And the girls in corduroy.'

"Thin we set out for home, and on the way we stopped at a school-house, and it's empty we found it, and no glass in the windys or floor, barrin' the ground.

"Feyther McClosky, the parish priest, saw us comin' out of the schoolhouse, and he came over from the church, and his honor bowed to him, and asked him a mort o' questions, as he had me,and gave him some money for the church poor. And whin Feyther McCloskey tould him that the rayson the children didn't go to school was because they had not time from the work, and besides it was no one's business to send us a tacher or rid' up the schoolhouse.

"'It's, my business,' says his honor, 'an' what that agent of mine's been doin' these years I can't consave.'

"With that they shook hands friendly, and in a short time we reached me cottage, and there was Molly standin' in the floorway with the surprise knocked into her to see me come drivin' up like a lord.

"'Is this where you live?' says his honor; why it's on me own land.' And thin' whin he come to a stand so that he could look into the cottage:

"'Is it possible that human crathers live in sich a hovel?' says he.

"'Please your honor to look in, you'll find it clane,' says I. 'It's not much that Molly has brains for, but scrubbin' is not above the measure of her understandin'.'

"'I thought the Irish kept their pig in the parlor,' says he.

"'Please your honor,' says I, the pig wint to pay the last quarter's rint, and Molly has been lonesome enough without the darlint.'

"With this he says, 'Come up to the Hall and I'll send you back with one of me best Suffolks.'

"As I was climbing into the dog-cart he noticed that there was no doore to the cottage, and av course he asked me the why of that, and I tould him how we lost it in the bog, and I thought he would a died of laughin'.

"'She's a good girl is Molly,' says he; 'a faithful heart like hers is better than the best intellect in the world.'

"'Sure it's truth your honor is spakin',' says I. 'If I could find out who the spalpeen is that has the ownin' of her heart, sure it's a good drubbin' I'd give, for I misthrust he's not treatin Molly right, for they were to have been married last Michaelmas, and it's two months gone.'

"'Find him out,' says his honor, 'and give him a good batin', with me compliments.'

"'I will that same,' says I, and that was the first and only promise that I iver broke to his honor.

"He sint me home with a basket of victuals and a beautiful little spotted black-and-white pig, tied by the hind leg of him, which gave such a chase that whin I reached home again I was worn out entirely. But it was a lucky day for us both, and Molly was taken with admiration, what first with the pig and thin with the victuals, and lastly with the thought that our own landlord had come home to live amongst us like a Christian, that she clean forgot to give me Murtagh's message until it was nearly bed-time.

"Now if she had given me the errant as it was given her, divil a bit wou'd I have starred out of the shanty that night, but, says she, 'Whist! Donal, and you haven't caught all the good luck that's stirrin' yit,' says she, 'for Murtagh was here the mornin', and he says for you to come to the crannach in the Ballymoran forest at midnight, dressed in me petticoats, and you will see some fine fun for the night.'

"'Dressed in your petticoats!' says I, 'and what rayson did Murtagh give that I should rig meself out as a woman, as though it were a Candlemas procession?'

"'Niver a bit of a rayson, but belike, it's some fun of the byes, for it's particular he was about it and made me say over three times, 'be sure he comes in skirts to the forest.'

"Well, I felt gayer that night than I had for many a day, and I thought I would like nothin' better nor a frolic with the byes; so I let Molly disfigure me by putting her Sunday dress on me, one with big flowers on to it, a stoilish kind of caliky that they cover sofas with in the houses of the gintry. An' I tied a kerchief over me head an' I hardly knew whether I was Molly or Molly was I Thin I took the remnints of our supper along in the basket, for I thought I'd treat the byes and we'd all drink to the health of our young landlord.

"Well, I wint on gaily enough till I come to the hedge foreninst the forest, and thin two of the byes jumped up from a ditch, with guns in their hands and pinted thim at me. 'Give the pass-word,' says they, 'or you're a dead woman.' With that I threw one of 'em a hunk of mutton-pie, and the other a piece of plum-puddin' and they lowered their guns and let me pass. 'It's Molly Malloy,' says one. 'Whin is your cousin comin'?' says the other. 'He's not far off,' says I, imitatin' me cousin's vice. 'Where are the byes?'

"'They are in the crannach,' says one, and I wint on, but I misthrusted now what sort of a frolic I'd fallen into, and purty soon I found mesilf amongst a dozen or twinty of them all talkin' and conspirin' amongst themselves. 'What have you let that woman come here for?' says the leader to one of the guards.

"'Sure's she's the bearer of important dispatches,' says he, an' he says in a whisper, 'it's only half-witted Molly Malloy, and she's that thick-headed she'll niver understand nothin',' says he.

"With that I dropped thim a curtsy and thanked the gentlemen for their politeness, and said that me brother, who had come home from the fair with a broken head, had sint them some pervisions to testify his kind feelin's. They grumbled to themsilves, and some one said, lowlike, that if Donal had come he wouldn't have got off that night, for there was work to be done, and thim that were not moinded to help should have their mouths shut. Thin they sint me away, but not till I had heard by bits that there was an attack planned for that very night, come two hours, when all were asleep at the hall, an' that they meant to give the new landlord a house-warmin' that should not be of a welcome. Afther this they hustled me out of the wood, and I took to me legs with all me might for the hall and informed on thim—the villains!

"But his honor didn't have the house put into a state of defince at all, at all. Instid of that he ordered it lighted from garret to cellar, and tould the servants to hurry and set out a big supper, and me to run for Feyther McClosky to come in and make a spache of welcome to his company. And Feyther McClosky arrived in the nick of time, and come out on the balcony with his honor, just as the byes marched up forninst the house. 'And,' says he, 'his honor has heard of your kind intintions to give him a surprise party,' says he, 'and has pervided a little supper, to which he bids yes all welcome.'

"Well, whativer Feyther McClosky tould the byes to do, that they did; and whin he touldt him to ate, first one slipped his blunderbuss into his coat-tail pocket, and another threw away his shillaly, and another hid his shotgun behind the hedge, an' so they all came into the hall and ate their fills.

"Thin his honor talked to thim, an' tould thim his intintions of doin' his best by them, and they inded by givin' him three cheers.

"The schoolhouse has been rid' up, and Molly has took to the larnin'; by the same token she makes fewer mistakes than formerly, and a better behaved or more peaceable parish than ours you'll not find in Tipperary, or a kinder landlord, and all through the twistifications of Molly.

"And the weddin'? Sure, a finer was niver seen in the parish, for his honor sint the band from Cashel, and we had dancin' on the green and a barbecue, at which the spotted pig had the pleasure of bein' roasted, and other good victuals galore. For it's mesilf that would give Molly a good send-off, more especially as I had no fault to find with her swatcheart, barrin' his slowness in the courtin'. It was the day afther the house-warmin' at the hall that I had the pleasure of makin' his acquaintance.

"'Molly,' says I, (we were workin' in the field togither,) 'Molly, that swatcheart of yours is a bit backward in comin' forward.'

"'He is,' says she.

"'Spake the word and I'll larrup him,' says I.

"'Don't trouble yourself, Donal, he can take his time.'

"'Oh, give him up, Molly, bad luck to him! Sure, it's not much you care for him, I'm thinkin', and there's others a-waitin' to take his place. Sure, I'll marry you mysilf, if ye'll tell me who he is, and let me give him his walkin' ticket, the villain!'

"'Sure, I'll niver give him up,' says Molly, 'nor if his honor himself axed me to be lady of the Hall, for I love him more than the wurrld besides. And yees needn't look so black, Donal, for it's you, darlint, that I'll marry, and no other at all, at all!'

"'Molly, Molly,' says I when I could spake for kissin' her, 'this is the worst twistification of all, for who could have thought that I was your swatcheart?'

"'Thin it's you that has twistified the matther,' says Molly, for it's mesilf that knew it all the time,' says she."—The Home Maker.

AN OLD CHINESE WATER-CLOCK.

In another tower, reached by a flight of rickety stairs, is the water-clock that has measured time for the Cantonese for nearly 600 years. Four copper pots, crusted and dingy with age, stand raised on steps, each one above and slightly behind the other. In the base of the three upper pots are lips over which from a pinhole outlet the water filling the top vessel trickles drop by drop, and passing through each of the first three, drips finally into the fourth, or lowest. Through a slit in the cover of this vessel is seen a graduated brass scale attached to a float below, which rises with the increasing volume of water. Every twenty-fourth hour the water accumulating in the lowest pot is transferred to the uppermost, and the scale sinks down with the float, only to rise again with the hours as the vessel slowly fills up.—Century Magazine.

A TALE OF CHIVALRY.—The bold Knight du Bois pranced up and down before the castle of Montgomery on his gayly caparisoned steed.

Presently a fair lady looked out over the portcullis toward him.

And she was very fair; so fair that the bold Knight du Bois stopped his prancing steed to look at her. She was not agitated by his gaze, but continued watching the knight.

He waved his sword at her, but still she was unmoved.

"By my halidom!" he shouted as he looked upon her.

She shook her head.

"No," she replied, "no, we don't want to buy anything to-day."

And so saying she disappeared.—Detroit Free Press.

TAKE YOU PICK!—Old superstitions respecting the wedding garments run thus:

Married in white,
You have chosen all right;
Married in gray,
You will go far away;
Married in black,
You will wish yourself back;
Married in red,
You will wish yourself dead;
Married in green,
Ashamed to be seen;
Married in blue,
You will always be true;
Married in pearl,
You will live in a whirl;
Married in yellow,
Ashamed of the fellow;
Married in brown,
You will live out of town,
Married in pink,
Your spirits will sink.

PALMER NEWS.

More Special Trains.

Last Saturday the merchants of this village tried the experiment of running a special train to Thorndike in the evening for the accommodation of their customers. No questions were asked; the train was run and any person who wished to go to Thorndike or Three Rivers—the train was stopped at the Town House crossing for these—was invited to get on and ride. The weather of Saturday was the worst possible for the inauguration of such an experiment, being cold and rainy, making the streets nasty with the slush of the melting snow, but for all that the experiment was a success, in that it proved that considerable trade was attracted here by it. The train was extensively advertised, and though the number of passengers on the train was not large, there were fully as many as could have been expected in view of the inclement weather. Many persons came to town in the afternoon in their own teams, no doubt attracted by the inducements offered by the merchants in connection with the advertising of the special train. Last Saturday's trade in Palmer was unusually good, considering the weather. At all events, the merchants will continue the experiment a while longer, and have arranged for special trains every Saturday night before Christmas. To-morrow the train will run to Monson and Three Rivers, connecting at Three Rivers with the train for Bondsville. It will leave for Monson at 9.10, and for Three Rivers at 9.30. People who wish to go to these places are invited to get on board and ride home; no tickets will be required and no questions asked. Other trains will be run as follows: To Thorndike, stopping at the Town House crossing, Nov. 24, Dec. 1 and 22; to Monson and Three Rivers Dec. 8, 15 and 22.

The Late Allen F. Calkins.

The Elizabeth (N. J.) Journal of the 3d inst. gives the following sketch of Allen F. Calkins, whose death we recorded last week:—

Mr. Calkins was one of the brightest and most energetic young men of this city. He was a warm and lasting friend, and exceedingly popular with all who rightly claimed his good will and fellowship. He had rare business ability, as may be evidenced by the fact that he alone, of all those employed last year in the establishment of Gribbon Brothers, New York, was able to keep his sales up to the standard of previous years. His business was handkerchief salesman, and he controlled a splendid trade for the firm.

He contracted a severe cold several weeks ago. It was persistent, and gave him much trouble, but he kept at work until it developed into bronchitis. Three weeks ago the doctor was consulted, and ordered him to remain at home. At that time the disease had made such progress that his strength was largely exhausted, and the doctor's skill did not effect the desired results. He grew worse, and for the past eight days he sat in a chair, leaning on a table, unable either to lie down or straighten up because of the intense agony it caused him.

It was evident yesterday that he could live but a short time, as his disease had developed into bronchial pneumonia, and heart failure threatened at any moment. Of this he was as conscious as any about him, and he sent for his intimate friends, bade them goodby and sent kindly messages to those whom he remembered. The end came peacefully, in the presence of the family, his physician and two or three of the members of the Elizabeth Wheelmen, who had watched with him during the night.

Mr. Calkins was an enthusiastic wheelman. He was the most active member of the Elizabeth Wheelmen, and the one who, above all others, worked to promote its interests, and keep alive a true spirit of genuine sport. No other man in the club would be so greatly missed as will Mr. Calkins. He has been captain of the club for two terms, and was himself a member of the club's racing teams.

An Important Business Change.

Robison & Taylor, the Central street grocers, announce an important change in the method of conducting their business, which will go into effect next Tuesday, the 20th, when they will commence to do business on a strictly cash basis, giving no credit to any person, no matter how reliable the person may be nor how small the amount of credit asked. They do this in order to avoid bookkeeping, of which there is necessarily a large amount when doing credit business, and of course more or less errors. By the new order of things the liability to err in the making up of the accounts is done away with, as there will be no books to keep but an order book. Another point will be that the firm will have the money when it wishes to buy new goods and can discount its bills, which will mean a material saving in the course of a year, and will enable the firm to make better prices on some classes of goods than heretofore. For the convenience of that class of customers who now have pass books and settle at regular intervals, weekly or monthly, the firm will issue, when desired, a book something like a railroad mileage book, with coupons representing any amount which the customer desires, to be torn out as goods are ordered; this book must be paid for in advance, however, for which a special discount will be allowed. The experiment is a novel one for Palmer, and the outcome will be watched with interest by the other merchants of the place.

What Was His Scheme?

An elderly man, claiming to be a Quaker, has been in town for a few days endeavoring to find a market for pianos at $200 each, Haines pianos, listed at $400. His story was that the firm had failed or was about to fail, and had these pianos on hand which they were desirous of getting rid of before the creditors got hold of them. A carload was to arrive in Palmer, but if desired they could be sent by team from Springfield, which would cost a dollar extra. It is difficult to see the fellow's object, as no money was asked in advance and no agreement was signed. He drew up a paper in which he agreed to deliver the piano and the customer agreed to take it, but no signature was asked for; instead he drew from his pocket a cent and placing it on the paper had the customer place his or her finger on the coin and make oath to the payment of one cent on the price of the instrument, to prevent the creditors from taking it, as he claimed they could if no money had been paid. This he claimed was the Quaker method of affidavit to anything. It is needless to say that the pianos, which were to have been delivered on Monday, have not yet been seen.

The Postmastership.

The question of who will be the next postmaster of Palmer has assumed a new phase this week by the circulation of a petition among the business men in favor of A. L. Hills, the ticket agent at the Boston and Albany station, and it has received a great deal of favor wherever it has been shown. As is well known, James Gallegher is in the field for the place, having been the first to make a move. Another candidate is F. A. Royce, who has made no move yet, however, considering it unseemly haste to begin the scramble while the present incumbent has yet some three or four months of his term to serve. When the right time comes Mr. Royce will be found in the field with a petition.

H. McGilp is to move into J. N. Lacey's house on South Main street.

Mrs. L. E. Child has gone to Springfield, where she will spend the winter.

The mercury touched a pretty low point Monday night, getting down to 12°.

The selectmen have appointed Fred O. Carter inspector of slaughtered animals.

Miss Blanche Ramsden gives an art party this evening at her home on Church street.

Many Palmer people have attended the chrysanthemum show in Springfield this week.

Hampden chapter, Royal Arch Masons, will hold a regular meeting next Monday evening.

Miss Gertrude Calkins of Elizabeth, N. J., has been the guest of C. B. Fiske for the past week.

Mrs. Rufus Flynt will resume her place as contralto in the Congregational church choir next Sunday.

Miss Florence Holden of Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, spent Sunday in town, the guest of Miss Phœbe Hastings.

The Lend-a-Hand club of the Congregational church has changed its afternoon of meeting from Monday to Thursday.

Plans are being made for a union Thanksgiving service, to be held Wednesday evening, the 28th, in the Congregational church.

E. May Buckley has opened rooms for fashionable dressmaking in the Nassowanno House, and guarantees the best of work and perfect fit.

The Y. P. C. U. of the Universalist church held a social in the church parlors Wednesday evening. Ice cream and cake were served.

The ladies of the Baptist society cleared about $25 at their turkey supper Tuesday evening, which was decidedly appetizing and well served.

The winter time schedule went into effect on the Wales and Brimfield stage line Monday, and the stage now leaves Palmer at 4.30 in the afternoon.

Revere chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, will have a social after the regular meeting next Friday evening, with refreshments and an entertainment.

Miss Julia Allen was the delegate sent by the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church to the annual state convention at Fall River Tuesday and Wednesday.

A slight change of time went into effect on the New London Northern road Sunday, and the train which formerly left for the north at 8.35 a. m. now leaves at 8.22.

Rev. C. R. Minard preached in the Baptist church last Sunday, and in the evening there was a baptism, one person being immersed. The right hand of fellowship was extended to three.

Several Palmer people went to Ellington, Ct. Wednesday evening to attend the opening of the Crystal Lake hotel, the ceremonies being accompanied by a game supper and a general good time.

The telephone exchange is to be equipped with a new switch board, which will give the subscribers better service than in the past, as the board now used is an old one, having been in use some time.

Dr. G. H. Wilkins attended the annual meeting of the Worcester County Homeopathic Medical Society at Fitchburg Wednesday, and at the banquet responded to the toast, "Freemasonry in Medicine."

District Deputy L. L. Gage of Warren, and suite, paid an official visit Monday evening to Thomas lodge of Masons. After the work of the initiatory degree there was a social time, with a collation and speeches.

The auditor, W. W. McClench, has filed his report in the suit brought against the estate of Talma and Louan Brown by C. R. Shaw for some $3000 balance of a running account with the brothers, and finds $862.80 due the plaintiff.

The autopsy performed last week to ascertain the reason for the death of Mrs. Mary Finerty, who was found dead in her room Friday morning, revealed the fact that death was due to natural causes, the trouble having been with her heart.

Mr. and Mrs. John Newman of Palmer Center, who have been seriously ill with pneumonia, are now recovering, as is also their daughter, who has had typhoid fever, and their son, who has been having a high fever as the result of a cold.

Surely Palmer is becoming metropolitan. A "Hot pop corn" man has been doing business for a week on the corner of Main and Central streets, and with an "all hot" stand running certain nights in the week the place is certainly growing citified.

The monthly meeting of the Universalist ministers of Western Massachusetts was held Monday in St. Paul's church. Rev. Mr. Conklin of Springfield gave the address, which was on "Church Methods." Dinner was served at the Converse House.

Last Saturday's weather was rather unfavorable for the concert in the evening in the Congregational church by the Philharmonic orchestra of Springfield, and only a small number attended. Those who did were treated to some fine music, however.

Luther W. Cobb, who has been employed for some time in the baggage room at the passenger station, has been promoted to night ticket clerk, Charles Holt being removed to the freight house, while Fred Atchinson of Ludlow comes back to his old place in the baggage room.

The invitation of the school committee to visit the schools Wednesday seems to have been quite generally accepted, in spite of the inclement weather. The record of visitors at the several schools was: Palmer, 115; Bondsville, 95; Three Rivers, 89; Thorndike, 69; high school, 5; total, 373.

A special town meeting is to be called soon to raise money for the running expenses of the town. The suits for damages which have been decided against the town have been settled, the money being taken from the contingent account, which leaves that department in a decidedly crippled condition.

The Pauline Brotherhood connected with the Universalist church was formally organized last evening with these officers: S. A., Rev. H. F. Moulton; S. Y., Harry M. Graves; J. Y., Guy C. Stanchfield; D., Frank Keith; chaplain, Joseph Page; secretary, Walter Brown; treasurer, C. L. Johnson; guard, W. E. Goodes.

The cold snap of the past week has caught many farmers with potatoes and turnips still in the ground, and they will be worth little after the freeze lets up. One Monson farmer has four acres of potatoes which he is thinking of blasting out, while patches of turnips which are held in the grasp of the ice king are frequent.

A healthy specimen of the Mephitis mephitica was discovered Wednesday forenoon in the cellar of the house on Pleasant street occupied by L. W. Cobb, and not knowing in what other way to get rid of the animal a neighbor was called in to shoot it. The family is still searching for a method of getting rid of the remains, and there is much that still lingers.

The Boys' Brigade of the Universalist church meets weekly. Rev. H. F. Moulton is instructor and Horace Paine is drill instructor. Several applications for membership have been received within the past two weeks. The boys are always glad to see their friends at the meetings, that they may become acquainted with the work of the Brigade.

In view of the stormy weather which has prevailed for some time past, the remark of a small boy the other day was quite apropos. His parents moved to Palmer three weeks ago, and one day this week, apparently getting somewhat weary of having to stay in the house all the time, he suddenly asked: "Say, mamma, don't the sun ever shine in Palmer?"

It took the telephone and telegraph people some time and a good deal of hard work to get the wires in working order again after the storm of last week. The telephone company had all wires but one working last Saturday, but Willimantic was not secured until Monday of this week. The Western Union telegraph was not quite so fortunate, as a Boston wire was not had until Wednesday.

If one may judge from the size of the last meeting of the Quaboag Literary Circle, it has taken a new lease of life. The Circle will hold its regular meeting this evening, to which all, whether members or not, are cordially invited. The programme will include a reading from Will Carleton's works by Miss Phœbe Hastings, readings from the Round Table, and a paper, "The Influence of the West on our National Life," by H. C. Strong.

Frank McGahey of Westboro was drunk last Friday, there was no mistaking it, and so the officer gathered him in and allowed him to sober up in the sumptuous apartments of the Hotel Allen, in the basement of the bank block, until Saturday morning, when His Honor, in the district court, concluded that inasmuch as he had parted with all his substance in riotous living he had better take up his abode for a couple of months in the house of correction and ponder on the unprofitableness of his past proceedings.

The parents of Frank Conway of Springfield, a lad of 14 who had run away from home, were made glad last Friday by recovering their son at Palmer. He applied at the office of the Boston Duck Co. at Bondsville for work Thursday morning, claiming to be an orphan, but his actions aroused suspicion, and an officer brought the boy to Palmer. Notice of his having left home had been seen in the papers, and his parents were notified. His mother came to Palmer Friday morning and identified the lad, taking him with her.

Editor Palmer Journal:—In ustice to Mrs. Lawson, whose article appeared in the JOURNAL last week, it should be stated that it was first read before the Quaboag Literary Circle, where the writer stated that no claim was made to originality, as much of the material had been gathered and arranged from works on the subject. As the essay presented a pleasant resumé of the olden times it was voted by the Circle to have it published in the JOURNAL. As the paper was not intended for publication as first written, the quotation marks were not inserted, a matter which was overlooked when it was sent to your office. O. P. ALLEN.

The committee appointed by the Business Men's Club to secure furnishings for the club rooms have contracted for the most of the furniture, to be made by Meekins, Packard & Co. of Springfield. Work on the rooms is being pushed with all possible speed, and the club hopes to get into its quarters within two weeks. The circular sent out by the secretary a few days ago is being responded to quite generally, and the membership fees are coming in very well. Those who have not yet paid should make it a point to do so at once, as when the rooms are completed the trustees can probably find good use for the funds in meeting the bills for the furnishings.

The L. L. Merrick Woman's Relief Corps, No. 76, was organized November 19th, 1886, and the organization will celebrate its eighth anniversary next Monday afternoon, having invited the corps from Springfield, Monson, Ware, Warren, West Brookfield and Brookfield to be present and assist in the exercises. The work of the order will be gone through with, and will be inspected by Mrs. Clare H. Burleigh of Athol, the department president. Supper will be served for the visitors at 6 o'clock, to which the members of the post have also been invited. In the evening there will be an entertainment, consisting of music and literary selections, and the farce "The Sniggles Family."

The members of the Baptist church have unanimously decided to extend a call to Rev. Mr. Minard, who filled the pulpit last summer, at the time of his graduation from the Newton theological seminary next June. Mr. Minard is popular in Palmer, and if he will accept the call the pulpit will be temporarily filled.

The above, from the Palmer items in the Republican of the 14th, is somewhat at variance with the facts, as the church has held no meeting to consider the question of calling Mr. Minard. Doubtless he would be given a call very quickly if he would leave his studies, and it may be a fair presumption that one will be extended to him next spring, in view of the esteem in which he is held both in the church and in the community.

A letter has been received by a citizen from the King's Daughters and Sons Mission on the frontier in Northern Michigan, asking aid for the sufferers from the recent forest fires. These fires have completely devastated their mission field, which is chiefly among the lumbermen and miners. The workers have been giving relief to the sufferers, and will continue it as long as they have anything to work with. Almost everything is wanted, all kinds of clothing, table linen, towels, sheets, etc.; most of all money is wanted A committee of three has been appointed to pack a box in Palmer, Mrs. C. E. Dewey, Mrs. C. W. Bennett and Mrs. Cambridge Moulton, and any who wish to contribute articles of any kind may leave their contributions at the residence of any member of the committee.

Charles Hutchinson, who has been wanted by local officers since the 20th of last July, was captured early Tuesday morning by Deputy Sheriff Studley. Hutchinson was wanted for the larceny of a razor, sum of money and a quantity of clothing from the room of the brothers Poggoli at Three Rivers, but skipped out before he could be arrested. Sheriff Studley received word Monday that he had returned, and about 4 o'clock Tuesday morning, accompanied by four other officers, he went to the place where Hutchinson was staying, the large force being deemed necessary because of Hutchinson's well known capabilities as a sprinter, he having once escaped from custody in this way. The officers found him sound asleep, however, the first thing he knew being when the bed clothes were stripped off and he looked up into the faces of the men who surrounded the bed. In the district court Wednesday he was bound over to the grand jury in the sum of $500, and was committed in default of bail.

The suits of Franklin Blanchard, W. B. Bennett and Mrs. Cornelia H. M. Blanchard against the town of Palmer for damages to their property by the changing of the grade of the highway at Blanchardville, have been tried in the superior court at Springfield this week, and the jury rendered its verdict yesterday as follows, the amounts including interest for about two years: Franklin Blanchard, $1018.95; W. B. Bennett, $1698.25; Mrs. Cornelia H. M. Blanchard, $1868 08. The amounts awarded, without interest, were $900, $1500 and $1650. Franklin Blanchard asked about $2000, on the basis of his place having been worth $4000 before the change and having been damaged one-half; Bennett called his place worth $3000 before the change, but considered it valueless now; Mrs. C. H. M. Blanchard thought her property had been cheap at $6000, but had depreciated half by the change of the highway. The town only pays 10 per cent of the above awards.

THREE RIVERS.

Charlie Barnard has opened his hay and grain store.

Dr. Bliss is quite sick this week, having typhoid fever.

Dr. Bouley has been suffering this week from erysipelas.

Thomas Sullivan has purchased a horse from J. F. Twiss.

Albert Fenton is recovering from a severe attack of tonsilitis.

Master Howard Calkins enjoyed a birthday party last Saturday.

Will Herren is acting as clerk in Shaw Bros's. grocery store.

Mrs. Amos Olds spent a few days in Springfield this week.

Charles Ruggles has taken the contract to shingle a large barn for the Boston Duck Company at Bondsville.

H. D. Geer is rushing business at his horse radish factory. Orders are coming in faster than they can be filled, and he has just received an order from Boston for 300 dozen.

Three Rivers people will be given free rides home from Palmer to-morrow evening, when the merchants are to run a free excursion train leaving Palmer at 9 30. No tickets will be required, and any person who wishes is invited to get on board and ride home.

The cottage which J. W. Cheney purchased at Red Bridge and which has been in process of transportation during the past week, has arrived here in sections, though in a dilapidated condition. Keefe Bros. have been doing the work and undertook to move it to this place in one day, but found the building too unwieldly to move wholesale, which fact has caused them much chagrin and Mr. Cheney much dissatisfaction.

BONDSVILLE.

The class for Bible study met at Rev. F. J. Hale's Sunday night.

Miss Ora Parent of Smith College spent Sunday with her parents.

Jerry Carmody has been laid up with a sprained ankle the last ten days.

David and Delphia Brean have moved their families to Three Rivers this week.

Mrs. E. J. Fuller is visiting her brother, Fred H. Rood, in Springfield this week.

Mrs. Fred Moore and daughter Mildred spent the Sabbath with her sister in Springfield.

Presiding Elder Thorndike preached in the Methodist church last Sunday night to a crowded house.

A large class of children was confirmed at St. Bartholomew's church Sunday by Bishop Beaven of Springfield.

R. L. Bond is putting up a barn for the Boston Duck Co. on the site of the one struck by lightning and burned in the summer.

The Kickapoo Indian Sagwa company is at Liberty Hall for two weeks, selling their Indian remedies and giving short entertainments every night.

Miss Mattie Smith of Northampton, a former teacher in the schools here, spent Saturday and Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Armstrong.

Daniel Shea's family of five children are all very sick with whooping cough and pneumonia. One little one five months old has died and was buried Saturday.

Bondsville people who wish to visit the stores in Palmer will have an opportunity to do so to-morrow evening and still get home at a seasonable hour, as the merchants of Palmer are to run a free excursion train to Three Rivers, leaving Palmer at 9.30. This will connect at Three Rivers with the train on the Athol branch, getting Bondsville people home soon after 10.

THORNDIKE.

Miss Annie Carroll of Bristol, R. I., is visiting here.

Miss Nellie Riley is visiting her sister, Mrs. E. C. Lyons, in Springfield.

The Polanders will hold another dance at Union Hall to-morrow evening.

Mrs. A.P. Adams has been the guest of her son at West Gardner during the week.

Several new attractions are being booked for the coming season at the Opera House.

Granger F. Clark has accepted a position in Providence, R. I., and left here on Tuesday.

John Clifford of Millbury is visiting his son, T. J. Clifford, at the Clinton House for a few days.

A large number from this place attended the services of confirmation at Bondsville on Sunday afternoon.

Rev. F. J. Lynch of St. Mary's church went to Bondsville on Sunday to assist at the confirmation exercises.

N. W. Bond has started a new milk route, and Mr. Clark, who has been in the business for about four years, is to retire.

Daniel Broshnan, Sr., and Henry McGilp, two old residents of this place, are very ill at their homes, and their recovery is considered doubtful.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Messia's little child was accidently burned quite badly on Wednesday morning by overturning a vessel filled with boiling milk.

Mr. Shuttleworth of Maine succeeds Mr. Prescott as overseer in the beaming and spooling department at No. 1 mill, and commenced his duties on Monday.

The Kickapoo Medicine Co. closed a very successful engagement of two weeks here on Saturday last, and left on Monday for Bondsville, where they expect to remain two weeks.

Morrill Prescott, who has been employed by the Thorndike Co. as overseer in the beaming and spooling department of the No. 1 mill for several years, severed his connection with the company on Saturday last.

The long bridge near the upper railroad crossing has been strengthened by large timbers, which have been placed underneath it in order to secure safety in conveying the large new boilers which the Thorndike Co. is soon to receive for the new boiler room.

Jeremiah Shea, 75 years of age, who has been ill at the home of Samuel Sargent for a few weeks, died on Friday. Mr. Shea was well known in town, particularly in Bondsville, where he had lived for over 40 years. His funeral was held from his late home on Sunday, and was largely attended.

Parents' Day was observed in the schools here on Wednesday. Invitations had been given to all parents, and a large number responded. The exercises, which consisted of the regular work, speaking, singing, etc., was well rendered, and reflected much credit upon the teachers and the system of school work in town.

Michael O'Neil, who was spoken of in last week's issue of the JOURNAL as being quite ill at the Soldiers' Home in Bennington, Vermont, died at the latter place on Saturday. Mr. O'Neil was well known in town, and the announcement of his death was a general surprise to his many friends here. The interment took place in Vermont.

Tickets are selling rappidly for the Columbian Bands's concert on Thanksgiving Eve., and a crowded house is assured. The concert promises to eclipse any thing ever given in town, and the public and citizens will be given more than their money's worth. The Alpha Mandolin and Guitar Club of Springfield, is well known in this part of the state, and their selections alone will be worth the price of admission. They will be assisted by Miss Anna T. Desmond of Gilbertville, a soprano soloist who is spoken very highly of, and those who attend will be sure of a very pleasant evening. The concert will be followed by a social dance, with music by the Thorndike Orchestral Club, five pieces; S. J. Tobin of Rockville, Ct., will prompt. The following is the concert programme:

High School Cadets March ..... Sousa

When the steamers New York and Paris of the American line were, by special act of Congress, admitted to American registry, it was under the condition that at least two ships of equal capacity should be built in this country and added to the line. The first of these two, the St Louis, was launched from the shipyard of the Cramps at Philadelphia Monday, and was christened by Mrs. Cleveland, who broke a bottle of American champagne on the bow of the vessel as it started for the water. The St. Louis is the largest steamship ever built in this country, and will be one of the finest afloat, equal if not superior to any built abroad. The length is 554 feet, breadth 63 feet, and 26 feet draught. A new departure will be made in the engines, which will be quadruple expansion; the working pressure of the steam will be 200 pounds, and the horse power is expected to reach 20,000, while the contract calls for a sustained sea speed of 20 knots an hour. The vessel will have five decks, with the latest appliances in the way of ventilation and everything for the comfort and convenience of the passengers, of which she can carry 1440, besides a crew of 400, and will be a veritable floating palace. The other vessel, the St. Paul, is yet in the yard.

With the death of the Czar of Russia and the succession of his son to the throne much anxiety has been felt as to the future prospects in Europe. But little has been known of the new ruler, Nicholas II, and upon his views of matters and his disposition toward other countries depends the future peace of a large territory. He has been described as weak and incapable, but now he is vouched for by Dr. F. H. Geffcken, who has written a great deal about men and affairs in Europe, as possessed of a "noble, generous character, opposed to every kind of persecution, and especially to religious fanaticism." Whether he will have strength of character enough to swing Russia into line on this basis remains to be seen.

For some time, ever since New York criminals have been executed by electricity, there has been a controversy as to whether they were killed by the electric current or their life was really ended by the autopsy which is afterward performed, and so Prof. P. J. Gibbons of Syracuse is to experiment on a murderer now under sentence of death in the Auburn prison. After his electrocution next week an attempt will be made to resuscitate him with special apparatus invented for the purpose of Prof. Gibbons. Governor Flower has given his consent, and the condemned man is willing.

There is no reason why New York should not have a cleaner administration next year. With a mayor elected as a reform man on a ticket based wholly on that platform, and 16 of the 30 members of the board of aldermen Republican, while one other is anti-Tammany, the citizens of that metropolis have a right to expect a change from the administrations of the past.

How complete a revolution was made in the election last week may be judged from the present and future complexion of the National House of Representatives. In a total of 356 members the Democrats have a majority of 82 in the present Congress, while in the 54th the Republicans will have a majority of 140, the figures being: Republicans 248, Democrats 85, Populists 23.

That young man in Ohio who has been exposing himself to the small-pox with the idea that he can ward off the disease by his faith in the faith cure, may find that his faith is not equal to the strain put upon it. The authorities ought to put him where his faith will have an uninterrupted opportunity to work until the question is definitely settled.

The Lexow committee will resume sessions in New York again December 1st, when it is rumored that a high police official will go on the stand and tell just where the alleged $15,000,000 a year blackmail went to. If this is so, and every claim made by the Lexow committee has so far been verified, a decided sensation may be looked for.

It is said that one result of the election last week will be chairmanships of committees for five Massachusetts congressmen in the next national House, Walker on banking and currency, Gillett on merchant marine and fisheries, Wright on militia, Draper on patents and Apsley on either agriculture or invalid pensions.

America will give the English another try at yacht racing in English waters next year, and try and atone for the defeat of the Vigilant the past season, as Howard Gould has given the Herreshoffs an order for a fast boat, to be built "regardless," and will take her across the water in April on the deck of a steamer.

The government proposes to borrow another $50,000,000, and on Tuesday invited bids for a series of 5 per cent bonds to cover the amount, the bonds to be payable in ten years.

WELL MADE, STYLISH CLOTHES.

It is truly remarked that "Fine feathers do not make fine birds," neither do "Fine clothes make a man," but fine clothes make men look much better than poorly cut and ill-fitting garments. Good clothes cost no more than poor ones—often-times not so much. I make none but the best, and guarantee to fit and please you.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FREE RIDES FROM PALMER.—The merchants of Palmer will run a free train to Monson to-morrow evening at 9 10 for the accommodation of Monson people. The train is free as air—get on board and ride home; no tickets required, no questions asked. Come and see us. We have as fine stocks of goods as can be found in Eastern Hampden county, and our prices are as low as any for the same quality of goods.

The Edgerly Tableaux Company has been secured for an entertainment in Memorial Hall next Thursday evening, November 22. This company presents a series of high class living pictures, or statue poses, representing sixteen famous groups from ancient Grecian statuary. In addition Karl Marshall White, the impersonator, will be present and give several selections. Tickets have been placed at 25, 35 and 50 cents, and will be on sale at Keeney's Monday, November 19.

Death of Mrs. Fanny Bradford.

Mrs. Fanny Bradford, the oldest inhabitant of the town, died at the home of her daughter Sarah at one o'clock this morning, at the age of 100 years, 2 months and 21 days. Mrs. Bradford was the only daughter of Asa and Fanny Gates, and was born in the house which for a long time has been the home of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin S. Pease. Her early education was received in the public schools here, and in 1823 she married Otis Bradford.

For some years Mr. and Mrs. Bradford kept the Academy boarding house, and they were much respected and beloved by all the students who came under their care. Mrs. Bradford's death will be mourned by former studen s scattered all over the world. Her husband died in 1873 at the age of 78 years. With the exception of nine years spent in Leverett and three in Amherst, her home has been in Monson. On the 20th of last August she celebrated her one hundredth birthday, when she received many letters of congratulation from old friends and acquaintances, and numerous appropriate gifts and reminiscences which told the great esteem and love in which she was held by all who knew her. Of four daughters only one, Sarah, survives her, with whom she has made her home for several years. The funeral will be held Monday afternoon at 2.30.

The Park Avenue Association met Tuesday evening and elected George L. Fuller clerk, to fill a vacancy. The association is disposing of lots very rapidly. Charles J. Hanson has bought a lot on Park avenue, T. J. Hines has bought two lots, and Thomas O'Keefe bought one for which he paid $175.

There is in Flynt's store window a chart drawn by Lyman C. Flynt in 1877 showing the building lots on and in the vicinity of Flynt avenue and Pleasant street. There are still six lots for sale, which are described as being on high ground, with good drainage, fine prospects, pure water, and at moderate prices.

George L. Kenney, who has recently moved his business into the south store in Heimann & Lichten's Main street block is in his more commodious quarters, able to carry a much larger stock and display it at a better advantage than at his former stand, and his many friends are glad to find him so pleasantly located.

A branch of the Ancient Order of Hibernians was formed Monday evening with twenty-two members. The officers are: David D. Maney, president; John Casey, vice-president; John Mack, recording secretary; John Guion, financial secretary; John Dunn, treasurer. A meeting will be held Sunday at St. Patrick's church.

The attendance at the A B T Club concert Wednesday evening was not as large as the merits of the affair warranted. Miss Murray has a soprano voice of wonderful power; the reader, Miss Powers, compares favorably with others who have appeared here; Miss Sullivan as pianist was excellent, and Prof. Coy satisfied his many friends in his capabilities as a musician and showed marked development.

One of the officers of the academy has just received a package from New York containing a suit of clothes. The letter accompanying it says the clothing "was intended for one of the unfortunate young men that had his clothing injured at the time of the election day bonfire. I assume that there is such a one from what I saw in the paper. If this suit fits him I shall be very glad."

Harrry T. Chapin, on account of the death of his father, Harlow Chapin, decided not to return to Tufts College, but will leave Monday for Boston, where he will enter the School of Pharmacy. Mrs. Chapin will continue her late husband's business, hiring a clerk who is a registered pharmacist to assist her. Mrs. Chapin has been taking inventory this week. She has cut flowers for sale in addition to her regular stock.

The harvest supper in the Congregational church parlors Tuesday evening drew out a large number of people. The entertainment which followed, under the direction of Miss Alice A. Morris and Miss Mabelle K. Flynt, was the illustration of the book of Ruth in pantomime, accompanied by readings and singing, with Miss Bertha Manchester as Ruth, Miss Litha Potter as Naomi, and Henry F. Miller as Boaz. No entertainment has been given in the church in recent years combining so much of dramatic suggestion and fitness for such a place, as this.

The Mount Ella lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen was instituted with twenty-six members last Friday evening, and the following officers installed: Past master workman, William H. Deering, Oliver Hyde; secretary, G. H. B. Green; treasurer, W.E. Bridgman; directors. H. M. Dunbar, Wilson Hamilton, G. I. Davis, George E. Sanford, E. N. Fisher. The treasurer reported $675 in the treasury.

A squirrel hunt was enjoyed by some of the citizens last week. The captains were Avery Stacy and Lewis Fisher, each side having 27 men. Fisher's side won, scoring 152 head of various kinds, while Stacy's men had only 78. The losing side claims however that foxes, skunks and stuffed birds were among the trophies on the other side. A supper was enjoyed at the Belcher house after the hunt.

WILBRAHAM.

The open session of the Philo society will be held to-morrow evening.

The ladies of the First Congregational church gave a chicken-pie supper in the chapel last evening.

The senior class at the Academy held a reception in Fisk Hall Monday evening. S. Hubbard and Miss Lottie Clark were host and hostess. An especially fine musical programme was also rendered, consisting of a piano solo by Mrs. E. N. Ford, a selection by four senior members of the Glee Club, a piano duet by Miss Lottie Clark and M. Penfield, a selection by a mandolin trio consisting of Messrs. Page, Pulver and Hubbard, and a selection by a quartette composed of Miss A. M. Northey, Miss M. Dyer, B. Russell and Roy Jones.

The annual meeting of the Springfield District Grange was held Wednesday in the vestry of the Congregational church, about 150 being present. The session lasted all day, dinner being served at 1 o'clock. The fifth degree was conferred on nearly 100 members. The most important business transacted was the disbanding of the lodge and the formation of a Springfield district Pomona grange. These officers were elected and installed, James Hildreth of Lunenburg, the state grange deputy, being the installing officer: F. G. Bennett of Ludlow, W. M.; J. M. Burt of East Longmeadow, O.; W. S. Elijah Perry Breckenridge, the oldest native of the town, died at the home of his brother, W. L. Breckenridge, at Ware Center last Friday, aged 86 years. He had been blind for some years.

The "Bee Hive," the name given to the new store in the Hampshire House block, has a new sign by Eldredge, the new sign painter of West street. It is a model of good taste and workmanship.

The firemen are to have a novelty which will be much prized by those who get them for their souvenir programme for their Thanksgiving concert and ball. It is no stock affair, but is gotten up entirely at the office of Eddy, the Printer.

There is to be a show at the town hall Friday and Saturday, Nov. 23 and 24, which will be well worthy of patronage, arrangements having been made with Prof. D. M. Bristol for three exhibitions of his school of 30 educated horses. This show is always pleasing to the ladies and children, to see to what a marvelous extent the horse can be trained.

Rev. James Boyle has received his patent, under date of Nov. 13, 1894, for his invention of a candle extinguisher, for use in churches or any place where the candles are not easily reached. It is neat in appearance, convenient and cleanly in use. There has already been one large lot sold to a Boston house, which will introduce them throughout New England.

A temperance Sunday school concert was held in the East Congregational church last Sunday evening in place of the usual Harvest concert, at the request of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The motto displayed in front of the singer's gallery was "Be not drunk with wine, but filled with the spirit." The recitations and singing were excellent.

The case of Nora Foley against Edward McBride was heard at the district court last Friday, and the court room was cleared of spectators. The complainant and Dr. Spencer appeared as witnesses for the prosecution and no defense was offered. Judge Strickland, after hearing the evidence, placed the defendant under bonds for $500 to appear at the superior court at Northampton in February.

The new high school building had a narrow escape from fire on Monday night, just before six o'clock. Fire was discovered in the laboratory, taking from some chemicals which had been thrown among the waste. A slate bench under which the fire was discovered was badly cracked, and the floor somewhat burned. Iron receptacles, with covers, will hereafter take the place of baskets and boxes for the waste.

At the annual meeting of Eden lodge of Masons Monday night these officers were elected: W. M., A. A. Green; S. W., H. M. Coney; J. W., Geo. K. Thornton; treasurer, D. W. Ainsworth; secretary, J. H. Schoonmaker. The following appointments were made: Chap., Wm. Kennedy; M., W. P. Steele; S. D., W. J. Nimmens; J. D., F. H. N. Gates; S. S., E. B. Nash; J. S., Isaac Jeffries; T., D. O. Holden; I. S., F. W. Ward. The officers will be installed the first Monday in December.

Mrs. W. B. Parker will, about Dec. 1st, open a Ladies' Exchange at her residence on Church street. A number of ladies have become subscribers to this enterprise, and will place on sale fancy articles, embroidery and paintings, also on certain days there will be cakes, rolls, jellies, English plum pudding, chicken and lobster salads, mince meat for pies, etc., all home-made. Orders by mail for any of these home productions will be delivered.

Collis & Tucker, local florists, are to be congratulated on their success in growing chrysanthemums. Their general display at the great show at Springfield this week consisted of 350 blooms from their choice varieties, and they took the second prize on general collection, third prize on 25 blooms, third prize on 12 blooms, third prize for single bloom that measured 12 inches across, and third prize on general display. The prizes in all amounted to nearly $50.

The first couple to be married in the new All Saints' church were James M. Maloney and Miss Margaret Feehan, the ceremony taking place Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock, Rev. J. P. Leary officiating. Jeremiah Spaight was best man, and Miss Nancy Feehan, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. The presents were numerous, and some very costly. The happy couple left on the noon train for Boston. The couple were both well known, Miss Feehan having for some time been bookkeeper for Coe & Naylor, and Mr. Maloney prominent in politics and clerk of the fire department. On their return Saturday night they will be given a reception by his fellow firemen.

Disorder.

That is the state of your stomach. You know it, you feel it, you show it. The remedy you need is Ripan's Tabules. Safe, sure and effective.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

A Splendid Free Offer.

There are thousands of people, who, while not exactly sick, are out of order or ailing in some way. They don't feel and can't understand what the trouble is. You can learn exactly what ails you, without its costing anything, by writing a letter to the noted and successful specialist, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., and telling him just how you feel. He will answer it, explaining every symptom in your case and telling just what to do to get well. He gives most careful attention to every letter, and makes his explanations so clear that you understand exactly what the matter is, and how to cure it. And all this costs you nothing.

He makes a specialty of treating patients through letter correspondence, and the method has proved wonderfully successful. His vast experience enables him to understand from reading the symptoms the exact nature of your complaint. He is the discoverer of that wonderful preparation, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, the best nerve medicine in the world. People living at a distance from the city will at once see the great advantage of this system. No long journey and no doctor's fee. Write him and it will probably be the means of your getting strong and well.

SPRINGFIELD'S NEW STORE.

MEIGS & COMPANY.

FORMERLY THE
D. H. BRIGHAM CO.

Friday evening, October 19th, we opened our new store to the public for their inspection, no goods being sold. On Saturday, October 20th, the store opened for the sale of goods, and has been crowded with customers daily ever since.

"LOW PRICES FOR HIGH QUALITIES"
IS OUR MOTTO.

What we try to do in getting up our Clothing, is to pick out what intelligent people would want if they knew cloth as we know it.

There are different wants and different tastes. We mean to provide for them.

There are also a worldful of cheaper-looking Clothing that is made to waste money on.

We don't sell that sort. Everything is dependable here.

MEN'S SUITS.

At $8, we have a good assortment of Cassimeres and Fancy Cheviots in D. B and S. B. suits. All sizes, 34 to 44.

At $10 we show an immense line in both Sacks and Cutaways, including a famous Black Cheviot, the name of which we're not allowed to tell. Sizes 34 to 44.

At $12, $13.50 and $15, the lines are larger yet, and include our famous Clay Worsted Dress Suit at $15. We have sold hundreds of them. They lead easily. Sizes 34 to 44.

At $16.50, we've got the best that 's made anywhere. The assortment that we show at these prices is far larger than you'd spend time to look through. Sizes 34 to 44.

MEN'S OVERCOATS.

At $7.50 there's stock enough for a fair selection: The best in the lot is a clean, Black Cheviot with silk velvet collar.
These coats would easily sell at $10.

At $10 our great "Home Ruler" comes to the front as being the best in the business. Made from all wool beaver in three colors, Blue, Black and Brown. They are the equal of any $12 coat in this city.

At $12, $13.50 and $15 an assortment of Beavers' Kerseys and few Chinchillas, made and trimmed in the best possible manner. At these prices we show over four hundred Overcoats.

At $18, $20, $25 and $29, the cream of the Overcoat world.

All the leading shapes and cloth and all the newest kinks of the tailor's art.

We want to punctuate right here our Great lines of Men's Winter Ulsters.

We're going to make a reputation for ourselves this winter on Ulsters. It's a bit early to talk them, we know: but when you want one you'll do best with your dollars by consulting our stock.

We start them at $6.50 to $25, with whole counterful at $8, $10, $12, $13.50, $15, $18, $20 and $22.

By all means consult us on Ulsters!

ONCE A CUSTOMER, ALWAYS A CUSTOMER WILL BE THE RULE HERE.

Where Is He Going?

Gentle reader, he is hurrying home. And it's house-cleaning time, too—think of that! Fifteen years ago, he wouldn't have done it. Just at this time, he'd be "taking to the woods." But now, things are different. His house is cleaned with Pearl-ine. That makes house-cleaning easy. Easy for those who do it—easy for those who have it done. No hard work, no wear and tear, no turmoil and confusion, no time wasted, no tired women, no homeless men. Everything's done smoothly, quickly, quietly, and easily. Try it and see.

COLLARS AND CUFFS that are waterproof. Never wilt and not effected by moisture. Clean, neat and durable. When soiled simply wipe off with a wet cloth. The genuine are made by covering a linen collar or cuff on both sides with "celluloid" and as they are the only waterproof goods made with such an interlining, it follows that they are the only collars and cuffs that will stand the wear and give satisfaction. Every piece is stamped as follows:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

If anything else is offered you it is an imitation. Refuse any but the genuine, and if your dealer does not have what you want send direct to us, enclosing amount and stating size and whether a stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted. Collars 25c. each. Cuffs 50c. pair.

Poet—"Can you make anything out of this poem?" Editor—"I guess so. John, hit her a lick with that muscilage and see how she works as fly paper."—Atlanta Constitution.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton, Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhœa of long standing in six hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results, and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine, and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles.

For a pain in the side or chest there is nothing so good as a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It affords prompt and permanent relief, and if used in time will often prevent a cold from resulting in pneumonia. This same treatment is a sure cure for lame back.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

TWO AMERICAN HEROES.

There are two men in the United States navy whose heroism has never been told. The report of their valor and courage was not made until many years after the war. It will be published in the official history of the Civil War, which the Navy Department will issue in many volumes.

It was in November, 1861, on board the United States steamship Santee, that a young lieutenant named Jouett volunteered to take a small party in open boats into Galveston harbor, and attack and try to capture or destroy two of the enemy's ships. Two launches were given him, and early in the evening he started out. They reached, after a long pull, one of the vessels, the General Rusk, but the party was discovered to the enemy by a collision between the two boats, and the daring men were obliged to turn back and make for the other ship, nearer the mouth of the harbor, the Royal Yacht. The boats were seen by people on the enemy's schooner, and were fired upon. By an accident one of the boats became separated from the boat in which Lieutenant Jouett was, and mistaking the latter for the foe, the occupants fired into their own friends, killing one man. The boat then evidently turned back to the Santee, for Jouett neither heard nor saw his companions during the fierce fight which followed.

There was a gunner named Carter on board the Jouett launch, and he was the first to board the Royal Yacht, and immediately opened fire on the crew with his revolver. The boat with his comrades had floated away from the schooner, leaving him for some minutes alone with a ship's crew who were trying to shoot him down. When Jouett finally reached the deck with his men he found gunner Carter wounded slightly, and he himself was immediately attacked by a man armed with a pike, which was fiercely thrust into his side, causing him great pain. He finally overpowered the man with the pike, and knowing the Royal Yacht would soon sink from the effects of a twelve-pound shot below her water-line, which had been discharged by Carter before he leaped on board the schooner, Jouett set to his work to capture the crew and set fire to the vessel.

The captain and his men had rushed below by this time, and Jouett stooped down beneath the cannon on board to light a match and start the fire. He found that he was going to sleep, and he then realized that he was bleeding to death. He struck his head against the gun to arouse himself, and padded the wound in his side with his woolen shirt to stanch the flow of blood.

He then directed his own men to go below and drive the enemy on deck, but his comrades held back, and Jouett himself jumped down into the hold, where he found a dozen men crouched in corners watching him in the dim light of a small lamp. He ordered them on deck through the hatchway, where Carter stood with a pistol in each hand. Two of the rebel crew started toward the ladder, when Jouett heard the word given for retreat, and was horrified to hear his own men rush for the boat.

"I rushed on deck," he says, "and found that all my party, save the brave Carter, had fled to the boat, and were pulling off from the schooner. Shouting to Carter to hold the hatchway and keep the enemy below, I flew wildly to the stern of the schooner just as my boat had shoved off. With a desperate leap I cleared the rail and landed in my boat across the gun.

"Again I took the painter and made the boat fast to the schooner, and again led my crew on board. Meanwhile the forts were firing into us, and the enemy's steamers were coming nearer. Our situation was getting desperate, and I found myself growing weaker. I again went down into the hold, and had hardly given orders for the prisoners to go on deck when I again heard the dread cry, 'Santee,' which was the watchword for retreat, and heard my men make another wild stampede for the boat. With a sickening sense of failure and physical weakness I again forced my sailors at the muzzle of my revolver to sit down, and facing them I slowly backed to the hatchway and crawled on deck. The gallant Carter alone remained at his post. All the rest had fled to the boat. I was too sick to go further, so I called upon the faithful Carter to go and drive the crew back while I held the hatchway. Carter ran to the stern of the schooner, and finding the boat some fifty yards away, called out to the men: 'Go back, cowards! go back, and tell your shipmates that you deserted your officers. Mr. Jouett and myself will bring this vessel out alone.' These scathing words recalled them to their senses. They came back.

"Mr. Carter then went below and sent the rebel crew on deck. The captain and two others in the cabin refused to come up. I ordered them on deck. They again refused. Then I threatened them with a loaded shell, but lighting instead a large fire ball, I threw it down among them and leaped down the hatch myself, at the same time shouting to them to come up. They, thinking it was a shell, sprang quickly on deck and became our prisoners. I took the schooner's colors, got my crew and the prisoners in the boat, and shoved off. There was no time to lose.

"I put the burning schooner between our boat and the pursuing steamers, now very close, and with only eight well men to pull, with thirteen prisoners, with compass lost, with our pilot shot and with wind and sea against us, I shaped my course back to the Santee, many miles away. The gallant Carter, though wounded, took his place at the gun. All my hopes of defence against attack lay in that gun. I gave the coxswain a star to steer by, ordered the men to give way strong, and then supplied the wounded men with water, when Carter came aft and whispered to me that the boat was jammed, and that I must maneuver the boat so as to work it.

"I then took my seat on the gunwale of the boat, between the captain and mate of the schooner. The greatest compliment I ever received was paid me then by the rebel captain. He remarked: 'I don't know who you are, but you are a brave fellow: deserted twice by your crew, and yet got the vessel! You are a brave man.'

"I found great difficulty in giving an order. The pike seemed to have injured my right lung. Wrapping the folds of my shirt around my fingers I stopped up the hole in my side. This made my breathing easier. Thus I sat for three long weary hours.

"Thus in a boat crowded with prisoners and wounded men we sat, at intervals firing pistols as a signal of distress, waiting and watching for daylight to discover to us the Santee. The rest is soon told. We got alongside the ship at six in the morning. On reaching the deck I fainted and was carried below. Not a man knew that I was wounded until I was taken to my room."

Both of these officers are living now. The then Lieutenant Jouett is now a rear-admiral on the retired list of the navy. He lives in Washington. Mr. Carter is still a gunner in the navy, and is stationed at Crany Island, Virginia.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

HEART DISEASE!

Fluttering, No Appetite, Could Not Sleep, Wind on Stomach.

"For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought that every minute would be my last. There was a feelling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I could not sweep a room without resting. My husband induced me to try

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

THE FANCY WORK OF THE SEASON.

This is an era of needlework. There are, indeed, still seen dainty and beautiful articles decorated with painting, but as a rule the brush is superseded by the needle in the ornamentation of fabrics. This is as it should be, for the brush finds an ample sphere in work of permanent value; when it invades the province of the needle and decorates fabrics it gives pleasure but for a day; painting upon velvet, plush, satin and like materials is pretty, but its beauty is fading, while embroidery and knitting endure for a lifetime.

All kinds of embroidery are in vogue, each done in appropriate materials; and knitting, crocheting and tatting are developed in both simple and elaborate designs for all manner of articles.

For several years past white linen as a foundation for embroidery has been growing in favor, and this season it is unquestionably the queen. For portières, table covers and sofa pillows we see used heavier materials, silk turcoman and cottons, like Momie-cloth, the "New Worcester" cloth, denim, and for picture throws china silks, laces and ganzes, but for all other articles in fancy work white linen is "the correct thing." There is heavy linen duck, twilled linen, butcher's linen, plain linen of many qualities, linen lawn and Japanese grass, varying from stiff heavy cloth to a fabric of daintiest texture. For thread, linen, cotton and silk are all used for embroidery, but the wash silks are most effective and most beautiful, and consequently are most used. One well known silk company advertises sixteen varieties of knitting and embroidery silks; the following are the most used: Filo silk floss, Roman floss, Honiton lace silk, wash etching, silk, rope silk, embroidery silk and darning silk. Then there is the Toka and the Japanese silks, much like Roman floss and filo. Gold thread appears in some kinds of embroidery, but as it cannot be laundered it is never put upon white linen nor cotton materials. Novelty braids, rick-rack and point lace braids are put upon suitable materials very effectively, the cotton braids upon denim, the lace braids upon linen and China silk.

Denim deodorized, comes in beautiful shades of blue, and in browns and reds. For table covers and cushions this inexpensive material embroidered in artistic designs with heavy cotton cord or rope linen combined with novelty braid, and fringed with ball cotton or white linen fringe is very effective and does good, honest service. For handsomer table covers and cushions the new Worcester cloth, cotton, mouire, twill and satine in ecru and coffee colors, are also inexpensive. These are embroidered with a conventional design in each corner done in outline with rope silk. If the design is floral the silk of the natural colors of the flower is used. Art squares of these cloths are sold having tinted designs, to be outlined with rope silk. The table covers are finished with fringes, the sofa cushions with china silk frills. Sofa cushions are also covered with figured china silks. These have a deep frill of silk, either like the cover, or of unfigured silk to match the cover. There are sofa cushions of all sizes and also of almost all shapes. At an opening of one of the leading Boston houses cushions were shown made of exquisite Japanese embroidery and of elegant brocaded silk. These were about one-half yard square and had a narrow frill or doubled ruffle of silk.

Rococo work is done with a crochet needle in crochet stitch, combined with braid. This heavy lace, made either of cotton or woolen, is suitable for heavy silk, silk and wool, and woolen fabrics; put on the edge for table covers and portieres, and appliqued for sofa cushions. Beautiful doilies are made of linen, silk and cotton thread, knitted, crocheted, netted and tatted.

There are innumerable patterns especially for crochet work that rival and imitate the exquisite laces we see in museums.

Needle Honiton, Venetian or Roman embroidery, and other work upon white linen I will reserve for a future column.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gundermann, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. Dr. King's New Discovery, for consumption, coughs and colds, each bottle guaranteed—Electric Bitters, the great remedy for liver, stomach and kidneys. Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world, and Dr. King's New Life Pills, which are a perfect pill. All these remedies are guaranteed to do just what is claimed for them, and the dealer whose name is attached herewith will be glad to tell you more of them. Sold at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

A MISTAKE SOMEWHERE.

A lady who had recently returned from a Mediterranean trip says that as the ship was leaving the harbor of Athens a well-dressed lady passenger approached the captain, who was pacing the deck, and pointing to the distant hills covered with snow asked:—

"What is that white stuff on the hills, captain?"

"That is snow, madam," answered the captain.

"Now is it, really?" remarked the lady. "I thought so, but a gentleman just told me it was Greece."—The Argonaut.

SWEET GIRL.—The wind rustled in the palm trees and not far from where they sat the equator divided the earth into two equal parts.

The ocean moaned.

"Lovely girl," observed the tall native with the mole on his chin.

"Too sweet for anything," rejoined his companion. "May I trouble you for the salt?"

With the application of the proper condiments the cannibal succeeded in making her more agreeable to his taste.

The ocean, however, seemed to experience no relief whatever.—Detroit News-Tribune.

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

THE THRILLING EXPERIENCE OF A PROSPECTOR.

He Was Attacked by a Centiped, a Grizzly Bear and a Crow Indian—An Escape That Was Little Short of the Miraculous. He Got the Bear's Hide.

"I had some pretty close calls in the old days fighting Indians and bears single handed," says Colonel Burrows of Montana, "but once I was cornered by a grizzly, a centiped and a Crow Indian, and getting out of that corner I had the closest shave of my life, I guess. I was prospecting along the foot of the Rockies one summer.

"One morning I started to follow up a small ravine that I had discovered the day before, along the banks of which were some very scant outcroppings of silver. I got so interested in examining specimens of rock that I pushed on, quite forgetful of time and distance, until a feeling of emptiness warned me that it was noon.

"It was a hot day, and when I had finished my dinner I was sleepy. I lay down in the shade of a tree to take a short nap, knowing that I would wake up in less than an hour, which would give me plenty of time to get back to camp before dark. I took off my coat and put it under my head, rolled up the sleeves of my flannel shirt and made myself as comfortable as possible. I had been asleep possibly 15 minutes when a peculiar tickling sensation on my right arm caused me to wake suddenly. Fortunately for me I did not spring up with a start.

"Opening my eyes, I looked first at my arm where I had felt the tickling. As I did so my heart stopped beating for a minute, it seemed to me, and I felt a cold sweat starting out of every pore. Half way up my arm was a full grown centiped crawling around on the bare flesh.

"I could see the venomous insect without even turning my eyeballs, and I lay perfectly still. How I did it I don't know. It seemed to me that there was a ton of weight on my chest holding me down, and although it was a scorching hot day I was soon as cold as if I had been lying in an icebox. The centiped would crawl to where my shirt sleeve was rolled up, then crawl all around the arm, back to the wrist and then back again. He must have made the circuit 20 times, and the strain on my nerves was telling on me fast.

"Suddenly a new danger appeared before my staring eyes. I heard a rustling of leaves, and a moment later a huge brown bear, gaunt and hungry looking, walked out of the bushes and came straight toward me.

"Then I gave myself up for good, and half closing my eyes I tried to think of a prayer to say. The bear walked straight up to me, and beginning at my feet began to smell and push me with his nose. The centiped saw the bear coming and crawled around on the under side of my arm and stopped. Every instant I expected to feel the sharp sting of the insect, and I was trying to nerve myself up to let the bear finish me in short order rather than suffer the torture of the slower death.

"But the bear looked me over, pushed my arms and legs about and licked my face. Still the centiped did not move. The bear stood there for several minutes, it seemed to me, but at last appeared to make up its mind that I was dead, and he would leave me to the coyotes. Then he turned and lumbered off in the same direction from which he had come.

"But the deadly centiped was still on my arm, and by this time I was so weak as to be in danger of rolling over in utter collapse. Then a sudden warning of a new danger gave my nerves another shock.

"The bear had gone less than 50 feet away when I heard the sharp crack of a rifle on the other side of me, heard the hiss of a bullet as it flew over me and saw a bunch of fur fly from the side of the bear. The animal had been hit just back of the left shoulder, but the bullet did not even knock him down. With a growl of rage, the big shaggy monster turned and came toward me with a rush.

"I was certain that the shot had been fired by an Indian, and if there was any faint hope of escape lingering in my breast before it rapidly vanished. The centiped had been startled by the shot and was now running down my bare arm.

"I quickly made up my mind that if my time had come I had rather be shot by an Indian or torn to pieces by the bear than to be stung to death by the centiped. With a bound I sprang to my feet, and to my intense relief the centiped dropped from my arm to the ground without stinging me. But I forgot to grab my gun as I rose, and when I got to my feet the bear was so close I did not have time to stoop and get it. In fact it was only by a quick leap to one side that I escaped the clutch of the grizzly as he rose to his hind feet and made a lunge at me with paws outstretched and mouth wide open.

"As I leaped aside and faced about I caught sight of a murderous looking Crow Indian, who stood, rifle in hand, not less than 30 yards away. The Indian was evidently not aware of my presence until I jumped up from the ground, and had his rifle raised for a second shot at the bear. He was so startled by my sudden appearance that he lowered his rifle, and instead of taking a shot at me ran away as fast as he could go.

"But I was not yet out of danger by any means. The pain of his wound made the bear frantic. Growling furiously, he turned and made another rush at me. He was now between me and my rifle, and my only weapon was a long hunting knife, which I carried in my blet. Glancing back over my shoulder for a second, I discovered another and serious danger. I was within 20 feet of the bank of the ravine, which was directly behind me. A stumble or slip of the foot would carry me over the brink, which meant a fall of 100 feet, to strike on the rocks below.

"As I dodged about to avoid the savage rushes of the animal I kept getting nearer the brink of the ravine. Finally I stood on the very edge of it, with the bear facing me 20 feet away. Again he rose on his hind feet and came to me, with a vicious growl. I stood until I could almost feel his hot breath in my face. Then, dueing to avoid his outstretched fore legs, I sprang quickly to one side.

"My plan of escape was a success. The momentum of the big brute was such that he could not stop in time, and he punged headlong over the bank and tumbled to the bottom of the ravine. I heard him strike the rocks 100 feet below with a thud, and then as I realized that I was safe I dropped to the ground as limp as a wet rag. I was as weak as a baby from the effects of the strain on my nerve, and it was nearly an hour before I was strong enough to pick up my rifle and start back to camp.

"With my two companions to help me I went up the ravine the next day and secured the hide of the bear."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

HIS SIN FOUND HIM OUT.

Strange Story of a Grave Robbery Which Restored the Dead to Life.

Juliet, the daughter of a prosperous French gentleman, was afflicted with a disorder of the heart. She one day fell dead, as was supposed, and after a suitable time was laid away in the family vault. Her body was arrayed in her first ball dress, with her rings, bracelets, necklaces and other jewelry. Her father, prostrated with grief, returned to the house and sought his chamber. His valet, who had assisted in the burial, waited upon him, tended to his wants and retired. The gentleman passed a sad and terrible night. It was cold. The wind howled outside, the snow flew, and he could think only of his beloved daughter in the tomb.

Suddenly, at 3 o'clock in the morning, he was startled by the ringing of the front doorbell. He jumped to his feet, wondering who could arrive at such an hour.

Again the bell rang. The servants either did not hear it or feared to go to the door. He took a candle and descended the stairs, but before opening the door demanded, "Who is there?"

There was no answer, and in his weakness and grief, feeble with fright, he slowly opened the door. In the shadow he saw a ghostlike figure, dressed all in white. He fell back stammering, "Who are you?"

"It is I, papa!"

It was his daughter. He thought he was going crazy. He recoiled from her and motioned her back with his hand.

"Do not fear, papa. I was not dead. Some one robbed me of one of my rings and cut off my finger. The blood began to run, and that revived me."

He saw then that she was covered with blood. Then, recovering himself, he appreciated the good fortune that had come to him. He took her up to his chamber and rang for his valet to rekindle the fire, procure some nourishment and go for the doctor. But when the man entered he uttered a piercing cry and expired. It was he who had broken into the tomb, knowing that the corpse had been attired with valuable jewels, mutilated her hand and left her, as he supposed, dead. When he saw her standing in the room, he thought it was her ghost come back to denounce him, and he was frightened to death.—Paris Journal.

On a Port Tack.

—Life.

"Gent" Is Not Modern Slang.

The word "gent" nowadays seems to wear its hat cocked on one side of the head and to walk with a caddish swagger of vulgar self importance, but I know a worthy old lady in the country who calls her husband the "old gent," using it as a title of respect, and such it was in her childhood and long before. In 1754 the Rev. Samuel Davies, afterward president of Princeton college, traveling in England, describes the Rev. Dr. Lardner as "a little pert old gent," epithets that would not be flattering to a minister today nor even dignified for a minister to use. "Pert" here has the sense of "lively," much as a Kentuckian might use "peart," or a New Englander "perk." Indeed I suspect that Davies gave the word the sound of "peart." That Davies used "gent" as a term of respect is shown by his characterization of another reverend doctor as "a venerable, humble and affectionate old gent." It will not do, therefore, to account a word recent because of its slanginess. When a smoker professes fondness for "the weed," he does not dream that he is using an epithet applied to tobacco by King James I in 1620, and that nearly 200 years earlier than James, in the reign of Edward IV, the hop plant just coming into England was called "the wicked weed." What plant had worn this title of contempt before the hop I do not know.—Edward Eggleston in Century.

A Great Financier.

The somewhat impecunious young man had married the daughter of the rich legislator so much against the father's will that he had left them to shift for themselves.

"Your wife's father," remarked a friend one day to the young man, "is a great old financier."

"Yes, but he is no statesman."

"Is that so?"

"Of course, for when I married his daughter he demonetized her, and we've had hard times ever since."—Detroit Free Press.

Mantegna's Paintings.

Mantegna was the first painter who engraved his own designs and owed no little of his celebrity to the multiplication of his works by engraving. His "Triumph of Cæsar," a series of nine water color cartoons, is deemed one of the grandest works of the fifteenth century. The cartoons are at Hampton Court in England.—Exchange.

HIS OPENING NIGHT.

JUMPIN JOE APPEARS WITH HIS MONSTER AGGREGATION.

Being His First Appearance, He Made Things Ready to Skip, but His Fears Were In Vain—Tremendous Success Waits on His Efforts.

I take great pleasure in informin the intelligent and enthoosiastic public of the unqualified success that attended the openin of my monster aggregashun in the town of Palestine on Wednesday eavenin last. The applause begun an hour before my tent was erected, and the patriotism of the free-born American citizens was still bilin over when I packed up next day and headed fur the town of Jerusalem Hill.

A JUMP OF TEN FEET.

This was my fust appearance afore a cultivated congregashun with anything appealin directly to the soul, and half an hour previous to the openin of the show I got things ready fur a sudden skip in case the crowd met with a disappintment. Whar I made my fust plumb center shot at the liberty luvin inhabitants of Palestine was in my advertisin, which reads as follers:

FREE TO ALL!
ON WEDNESDAY EAVENIN NEXT.
JUMPIN JOE'S GRAND PANORAMY
AND MONSTER AGGREGASHUN!
40 Paintin's! 1 Five Legged Wolf!
1 Grasshopper!
1 Jumpin Frog! 1 Eddecated Hog!
Also interdusin fur the fust time in this locality his world renowned
CHEROKEE SASSYPARILLY
AND MAGIC CEMENT!
After the performance is over the undersigned will marry all couples which may cum for'ds free of cost.
JUMPIN JOE.

The idea of a free show aroused the smothered flames of 1776, and they blazed forth till everything which could walk piled into my tent an hour ahead of time and shouted fur the conkerin hero to show hisself and begin bizness. The minit I appeared that vast and patriotic aujence riz up as one purson and indulged in thunderifick applause, doorin which time, overcum by the excitement of the occashun, my jumpin frog escaped from his lair and made a clean jump of ten feet eight inches and lighted on the back of my five legged wolf. When the tumulchus demonstrashun had died away, and the patriots and patriotesses had got settled down on the benches, I placed my hand on my heart and stepped for'ds and interduced myself and the aggregashun and called pertickler attenshun to the fact that thar was nuthin to pay. Sum yelled and sum wept, and it was easy to see that I had the populashun with me.

The fust thing shown on the panoramy was a pictur' of Niagary falls. I had six taller candles back of it and six in front, and the pictur' was thrown out so vividly that my eddecated hog fetched a grunt and started for'ds to git a drink of the refreshin liquid runnin to waste. As the small and humble minded boy whom I had hired for the occashun slowly turned the crank and Niagary falls glid insidiously across the stage I explained its principal feachurs to the breathless aujeence, which ar': An abundance of water, a fust class situashun, an opportunity fur the roarin to roar without conflictin with any city ordinance, several Injun squaws with beadwork to work off on the public, Goat island with nary a goat and an aggregashun of hackmen with unbounded ambishun to beat natur's own exhibit. Some of my listeners cheered, and some broke down and wept, 'cordin to the sort of bottle they had imbibed from jest afore cumin in.

"MY EDDECATED HOG FETCHED A GRUNT."

When the end of Niagary falls had bin reached, I signaled to the boy to put on the airbrakes and hold the machinery in statu quo, and I then purceeded to interduce my Cherokee sassyparilly, which, as I hev several times explained, is compounded from roots and yarbs of my own gatherin and is warranted to tech the vital spot in case any vital spot ar' left in a human critter to be teched. Keep in a cool place if ye kin. If ye can't, then keep in a tub of hot water. She'll do her best in all climates and under all sarcumstances. In the space of ten minits I sold 15 bottles of the great fam'ly remedy and general elixir and pocketed the cash. The old and feeble and wayworn cum for'ds in a way that brung tears to my eyes, and the last bottle had skeercely bin sold afore the fust buyer, which was a woman seemingly in the last stages of gallopin consumpshun, flung down her bonnet and yelled and then purceeded to kick most of the feelin's outer my eddecated hog. Another of the buyers was an ole man who was brung two miles on his son's back in order that he might see a panoramy once more afore he breathed his last. Arter the fust dose he got the use of his limbs and cantered about like a yearlin colt, and the second had skeercely bin swallowed when he proposed matrimony to a widder with 'leven children and was held on her lap doorin the rest of the performance fur fear he'd git away.

"PUT ON MY SWALLER-TAIL."

The second pictur' was a scene in the Alps. Not being very well posted, I announced her to the aujeence as "Washington Crossin the Delawar'." It didn't make the slightest difference to any one thar, as no body had ever heard of either the Alps or the Father of His Kentry, except in a roundabout way. I let on that Washington and the Delawar' war lookin fur the British behind the mountains, and the patriots howled fur liberty and the star spangled banner and let'em keep right on lookin. Arter showin this pictur' I keerlessly interdooced my Magic cement, which has bin prevusly referred to as the best thing ever put afore the public fur mendin the fam'ly crockery and furnichur.

On this occashun, to prove that thar was no deecpshun, I removed my exhibishun grasshopper from his bottle fur the fust time in six weeks and purceeded to break off his legs and cement them on again in sight of the aujence. I hadn't but 24 boxes of the cement with me, and those didn't last ten minits. When that inseck rallied and begun friskin about, usin his legs as limberly as if nuthin had happened, the enthoosiastic populace knowed that I was no deceiver, and they blessed my name.

The panoramy was then finished, and I gin the congregashun a free exhibishun of the intelligence of my eddecated hog and the wonderful jumpin powers of my jumpin frog. Nuthin like it had ever bin seen in Cherokee, and at several stages of the game I had to stop and feelin'ly request the overexcited natives to stand back and gin me air. The performance wound up jest as I advertised it should. I tied my eddecated hog to a stake, put on my swallertailed coat and white gloves and desired all those who wished to be united in the bonds of wedlock to step for'ds. The hull populashun moved as one. Couples who had bin married fur 40 y'ars wanted to be hitched up again, and widders and widowers and young men and wimin saw that it was the opportunity of a lifetime and decided to delay no longer. The hour bein late and the children sleepy, I married the hull crowd to once and without axin any embarrassin questions or obleegin 'em to hunt up weddin rings. Half an hour later I got the last patriot outer my tent, fastened the door and lay down in the midst of my monster aggregashun to feel that I had contributed to the happiness of my feller men and to dream that I had not lived in vain.

AUSTIN KEENE.

Hang or Marry.

In the feudal days of Scotland, when noblemen thought it no disgrace to steal their neighbors' cattle, a baron protected his vassals from the aristocratic cattle lifter by hanging outright those taken red handed without waiting for the slow process of the law.

When Sir William Scott was a young border laird, he made one night a foray on Sir Gideon Murray's lands. While driving off a herd of cattle he was caught, and, being brought before Sir Gideon, ordered to be hanged. Hanging a cattle thief was such an everyday affair that Sir Gideon went about his ordinary business. But his wife, hearing that a handsome youth of a good family was to be executed, sought her husband and indignantly exclaimed:

"Heoot, Gideon, what do I hear? You tak' the life of the winsome young Laird of Harden, wi' three ill faured lasses in the house o' yer ain to marry!"

"Ye're reeht, Maggie, my dear," replied the baron, grasping the situation. "Willie shall tak' our muckle mou'd Meg, or else he'll stretch for it."

The helpless prisoner consented, and, much to his father's surprise, returned home with a bride from the neighbor's house he had ridden out to harry.—Youth's Companion.

Not the Truth.

"Say, Willie, what yer doin wid yer dress suit on at dis time in de mornin?"

"Well, Freddie, yer see, I wuz at de club all night, and when I reached me chambers dis mornin I found me man had skipped wid all me odder clothes, even me yachtin suit, so I'm jist on me way to me tailor's. See?"—Truth.

Hoyt and the Honest Musician.

Charley Hoyt, the humorous playwright, said: "A few years ago I was playing in one night towns, and, finding I should be late in reaching one of them, I telegraphed ahead for the orchestra to meet me at the theater upon the arrival of the 6:30 train, so as to rehearse before the performance began. I arrived upon a bleak fall afternoon and rushed hurriedly to the cheerless looking little theater. All within was dull and cold, and the gathering gloom gave a sepulchral appearance to all within. Up and down the stage walked a wizard looking man smoking a huge pipe, with a tremendous cornet under his arm.

"'Where is the orchestra?' I asked.

"'It has gone across the river to play at a dance—all but me,' answered the ghostly figure.

"'And are you all I've to depend upon for music?'

"'That's all in sight,' said the strange cornet performer.

"'And I suppose you are full of music and a great player, then?'

"'No,' said the isolated musician. 'I ain't worth a d—, or I'd be at the dance too.'"—Richmond Times.

Cleanliness.

We can fully appreciate the adage, "Cleanliness is next to godliness," when Professor Vivian Lewis cites in Nature the case of a child who was gilded all over to pose as a statue, and who died in a few hours, all owing to the stoppage of the functions of the skin. We can live for days without food, our liver may stop and render life a burden for several days, but if we stop the action of our skin absolutely we die in a few hours. We have about 3,500 sudoriferous ducts to the square inch of skin, which throws off from our body about 25 ounces of perspiration in 24 hours, this being produced by combustion of the waste tissue by the oxygen of the blood, and which evaporates from the skin without any sensible moisture, but this evaporation leaves behind about an ounce of solid matter, which, mixing with the oily and resinous secretions and the dirt adhering to the skin, forms a compound which clogs the pores and leads to disease and death. The removal of this scurf is responsible for the light and fresh feeling experienced from the bath and massage.—Atlanta Constitution.

Boiled Ham, German Style.

To cook a ham in German style all day and a night before boiling the ham must soak in a boiler of sour milk, set on the back of the stove, over a slow fire, this to draw out the salt and to make the ham very tender. Next morning the ham is to be removed, the boiler filled with cold water and in this the ham slowly boil for the rest of the day. Then, at about 6 o'clock in the evening, take the ham out of the water, and while it is yet warm carefully remove the skin. After sticking in cloves all over the fatty surface apply a coat of sugar glace and set the ham away where it will cool. Do not cut a slice of that ham until the next morning, and you will have a juicy morsel.—Philadelphia Ledger.

LOVE'S OPPORTUNITY.

When a pair of red lips are upturned to your own,
With no one to gossip about it,
Do you pray for endurance to let them alone?
Well, maybe you do, but I doubt it.

When a sly little hand you're permitted to seize,
With a velvety softness about it,
Do you think you can drop it with never a squeeze?
Well, maybe you do, but I doubt it.

When a tapering waist is in reach of your arm,
With a wonderful plumpness about it,
Do you argue the point 'twixt the good and the harm?
Well, maybe you do, but I doubt it.

And if by these tricks you should capture a heart
With a womanly softness about it,
Will you guard it and keep it and act the good part?
Well, maybe you will, but I doubt it.

HER OLD FOSSIL.

There was so much talk about Professor Chesney before he arrived that Larry declared herself sick of the subject.

Larry was the only one of the family who had not met him, and with her usual perversity made up her mind not to like him. He was learned in mathematics, which only scored against him in her eyes.

"The calculating power alone should seem to be the least human of qualities," she quoted, her small nose in the air. "There is something wrong about a man whom everybody likes. My prophetic soul tells me I shall not take to him, at least."

The Wednesday the professor was expected Larry went for a long walk. She met Ned Erskine and Harry Winthrop, two young artists with whom she was good friends, and enjoyed herself very much, getting in barely in time to dress for dinner.

They were all assembled round the table when she slipped into her place, and there was a reproof in her mother's voice as she said, "My third daughter, Larinda, Professor Chesney."

If there was anything that her third daughter hated, it was being addressed by her baptismal name. With a pout of her red underlip she bowed hastily, and it was not until she had disposed of her soup that she looked at her opposite neighobr.

A tall, thin man with brown hair and a short brown beard and mustache thickly streaked with gray, a large, domelike forehead and nearsighted gray eyes that looked kindly at herthrough his spectacles.

He was a little surprised at the hostile expression in the brilliant brown eyes, which surprise deepened into astonishment when, in answer to a low voiced remark from, the young lady replied also in a low tone, but so distinctly that he heard every word, "I think he is an old fossil!"

Notwithstanding this, several times during the meal his eyes strayed to the white robed figure, the bent, shining brown head, and once in the midst of a remark from Augusta he turned quickly to listen to a peal of merry laughter from Larry.

Several of her friends came in during the evening, and she devoted herself to their entertainment, completely ignoring the professor. When she kept up this behavior for nearly a week, it attracted the attention of her family as well as that of the visitor, and when gentle hints were scorned Larry was severely reprimanded.

"You are positively unladylike," said Mrs. Austin, "and I insist on at least civility. He must think you an ill mannered child."

"I dare say I do seem a child to his advanced years," saucily answered Larry.

"You are exceedingly impertinent," answered Mrs. Austin, who was now very angry. "I insist on your being polite to Professor Chesney and doing your share toward entertaining him, or I shall certainly complain of you to your father. Leave the room, miss!"

A little ashamed and wholly angry, Larry whisked out of the room almost into the professor's arms, with such force as to rather stagger him.

With a hasty "Excuse me!" she sped along the corridor and up the stairs, while the "estimable gentleman" stood and looked after her.

"An old fossil!" he murmured, with a slight smile, stroking his beard.

Shortly after this, to the surprise of all, Larry suddenly changed her tactics, and at dinner one day addressed the professor. He answered courteously, and very readily joined in the argument between herself and Jim. Her remarks were bright and amusing, if somewhat crude, and the brown eyes and changeful face were very attractive. In the evening she played and sang for him and was as bright and bewitching as the heart of man could desire, much to the surprise of some and the annoyance of others of her family.

"She means mischief," thought Jim uneasily. "Are you beginning to succumb to the professor's charms?" he whispered. "You know, I gave you a week."

"I am thinking of getting up a collection of fossils," she answered, with a mocking laugh, "and this is too fine a specimen to lose. Don't you dare interfere!"

"Poor wretch!" rejoined Jim. "He has my sympathy!"

Unable to account for the change in Larry's manner, the professor nevertheless found her very agreeable, and, though never neglecting any one else, it soon became evident that she was the attraction. The other two reluctantly gave way to her, and she it was who went with him to picture galleries and lectures and concerts, who was the life of theater and opera parties—saucy, willful, charming.

With all his gravity and erudition it was plain that he admired this ill regulated young woman. He had never before been thrown closely into companionship with such a creature. He admired her beauty, her dainty costumes, even her girlish extravagance of speech and saucy disregard of his opinion pleased him better than Augusta's unvarying politeness or Gertrude's cleverness. His eyes followed her every movement, a wistful light in them sometimes that touched Jim.

Larry was curled up in a deep window sill, overlooking the park, basking in the sun, for she was a veritable Persian in her love of sunlight, when Professor Chesney came into the room. He leaned against the side of the window, looking at the picture she made in her quaint puffed and furbelowed gown, the sunlight falling on her brown head.

Larry looked up, nodded with a smile that showed her small white teeth and settled back in her original position, waiting for him to speak. And so he did after awhile, but not as she expected.

"I am going away tomorrow, Miss Larry," he said. "My pleasant visit has come to an end all too soon."

"Tomorrow!" echoed the girl, sitting up straight. "I am very sorry you are going."

And, much to her own surprise, she realized that the remark was perfectly sincere.

"I am glad to hear you say that," said the professor, trying to keep his voice steady. "It makes it a little easier to say something that is in my heart."

Then he told his story in warm, eager words, very unlike his usual calm ones—words that stirred Larry strangely. There was a queer expression on her pale face as she stood before him.

"Professor Chesney," she said, with quivering lips, "I am not worth the love you have offered me. You'll realize that when I tell you that I have only been pleasant and civil to you all these weeks, not from any liking for you, but to—to plague the others."

Thoroughly ashamed, she bent her head, unable to meet his eyes.

"You mean that you have deliberately played a part all these weeks? You whom I thought so frank and true? How could you do it? Then you have not the slightest love for me in your heart—that, I suppose, is out of the question?"

There was a hurt, shocked tone in his voice that touched Larry keenly.

"I don't love you," she answered, "but I shall be very grateful if, after what I have told you, you will let me be your friend."

She put out her hands and moved a step nearer to him, but, to her mortification, her extended hand remained untouched.

"I did not ask for your friendship," he said unsteadily, "and just at present I want only what I ask for. By and by I may be able to appreciate your offer. I shall try, but you've taught me a hard lesson, Larry, one I'm not likely to forget. Perhaps I ought to have known better, but"—with a break in his voice—"I'm not used to women. I'm only an old fossil, after all."

And, without another word, he left her.

Up in her room Larry was still more surprised to find a bit of crying necessary. She could not account for the unhappy feeling that took possession of her as she reviewed the past weeks and realized that the kindly, pleasant companionship she had accepted so heedlessly was at an end.

"I suppose he'll hate me now and forever," she thought between her sobs, "but how could I say I love him when I didn't?"

Then she sobbed all the harder.

The professor left the next afternoon, while Larry was out.

A box of white roses lay on the table addressed to her, a card attached, on which was written, "From your friend, Roger Chesney." That was all, but she guessed dimly what an effort it cost him to write it.

With trembling fingers she made three parts of the flowers and gave them to her mother and sisters.

"I don't want them," she said proudly, in answer to her mother's remonstrance. "I was only civil to him to please you all."

Jim noticed that the brilliant eyes were full of tears, and that she took the card away with her.

"It must be a relief to you to have him gone," he said as they stood for a moment in the hall. "Association with such a serious man must have been a trial to you."

He was unprepared for the way she flamed out at him.

"Such a trial as makes me more willing to accept the statement that man is made after God's own image and possesses some godlike attributes. Now go!"

And he did, a lurking smile under his mustache and a most emphatic "By Jove!" upon his lips.

One bright morning early in June Jim opened the door of Mrs. Austin's sitting room. Larry was there alone. She had an industrious fit on her, and with the sleeves of her blue morning dress turned back, displaying two prettily rounded arms, feather duster in hand, she was whisking the dust off some rare pieces of old china.

"Larry, here is an old friend of yours," Jim announced. "Treat him well, for he sails for Egypt tomorrow, never to return. I'll be back in a minute."

He vanished, and there, inside the closed door, stood Professor Chesney, thinner, grayer, but with the old kindly smile on his lips that she remembered so well. Startled out of her self possession, Larry stood with her duster suspended over gran'ma's hundred-year-old teapot.

"I sail for Egypt tomorrow," said the professor, taking a few steps into the room, "and I may never return. Won't you wish me godspeed, Larry?"

Crash went gran'ma's priceless teapot in a dozen pieces on the polished floor, and the next thing Larry knew she was crying.

The professor approached her.

"Are you crying because I am going away, or because you have broken the teapot?" asked the visitor.

"Both!" cried Larry, with a convulsive sob, which was smothered in the folds of the professor's coat as the arms of that "estimable gentleman" closed around her.

"How about your prophetic soul?" Jim asked, later on. "I thought you called him a fossil?"

"So I did," answered the young lady, quite unabashed, "but I also said I was getting up a collection of fossils and recognized the fact that he was too fine a specimen to lose. Don't you remember?"—Bow Bells.

TOO HASTY.

He Thought It Was Her Baby, but He Erred.

A man got on a Michigan Central train just as a woman was getting off. The result was a collision and bad blood on both sides.

"Look where you're going, stupid!" snapped the woman. "You ought to go out with a guardian!"

"Oh, you think you're smart!" retorted the man, and then the train pulled out, leaving the man on the steps of his car glaring after the woman, who was hurrying off in the distance.

"Looks mighty suspicious," he said to himself.

He went into the day car and found only one seat not fully occupied, and that had an infant asleep in it.

The man looked at the sleeping child and then gazed around the car with the look of one who was searching for some one he did not find. Then he darted to the door, seized a brakeman and dragged him into the car and to the seat occupied by the sleeping infant.

"Where is the mother of that child?" he demanded in a suppressed voice.

"I'm sure I don't know," said the brakeman. "She doesn't seem to be here."

"I know," pursued the new passenger. "She got off the train when I came on. she has deserted her child—that's what she's done."

"Looks like it," said the brakeman. "I'll call the conductor." And he did.

The conductor knew just what to do. He had seen such cases before, and he left the baby at the first station they stopped at, with orders to forward it to Detroit, to the police, with a description of the absconding mother.

Then the man who wanted a seat got one and gloated over the fact that he had outwitted a termagant of a woman.

After awhile a woman who had slept long and soundly in a seat at the farther end of the car arose and looked about her as if listening for something. Then she walked to the seat occupied by the new passenger.

"Where's my baby?"

There was a deathless silence. Then a voice that grew ten feet higher with every word it uttered repeated the query, "What have you done with my baby?"

It took the conductor, the brakeman and the rest of the passengers to hold the woman while the man tried to explain the facts in the case, and after he had settled the item of telegraphing, costs of transportation for the baby, damages to the mother's feelings and other expenses he was permitted to go on his way unmolested. And he never again will try to get even with a woman.—Detroit Free Press.

She Deserved Shaking.

She looked so pretty as she stepped aboard the car that the man with a cold in his head moved into the draft to give her plenty of room, and the conductor rang up two fares before he realized that she had given him a Canadian dime. The long legged little girl with her kept up an incessant stream of questions, but she answered them all pleasantly. The next time the car stopped a soldierly looking lady got in, and the pretty girl blushed very much as she greeted her.

"Is this your little sister?" the soldierly looking lady asked presently. "Do you know who I am, my dear? I am Harold's mother. I hope you like Harold."

"Oh, yes! He brings nicer candy than any of them. Only Mabel always makes me go out of the parlor to eat it."

The pretty girl, with an agonized blush, mumbled something about "crumbs" and "the carpet."

"Quite right, my dear," replied the soldierly looking lady, "and it is foolish of Harold to waste his money on candy. He will need it all by and by."

The pretty girl became two shades pinker and looked out of the window.

"Well, my dear," returning to the small girl, "I hope you will like me as well as Harold, but why do you look at me so closely? Is anything wrong with my bonnet?"

"No'm," with an angelic smile. "I like you very much, and I don't think your nose is long at all."

"Grace!" cried the pretty girl.

"My nose long! Mercy, child, who ever said it was?"

"Why, sister did. She said that when she and Harold were married you had better keep that long nose of yours out of her affairs, or she would—why, Mabel, what on earth are you stopping the car for! This isn't our street."

And as the passengers in the car looked back they were pleased to see that Mabel was shaking her with all her might.—Chicago Tribune.

WHISKERS OR WIFE?

Captain Larcomb Refused to Shave and So Lost His Sweetheart.

Every one in old Greenwich village, this city, knows Captain Larcomb because of the luxuriance of his whiskers. Without the whiskers his own kin wouldn't know him. If the captain had to choose between death and losing his whiskers, most of his acquaintances on the west side of New York agree that he'd say, "Gimme death." They are black and as glossy as silk floss. There is nearly enough hair on either side of his face to stuff a pillow.

The captain is a rich bachelor and about 40 years old. If by spending $1,000 the luster or bushiness of his whiskers could be increased in the slightest degree, Captain Larcomb wouldn't hesitate a minute. He puts a double value on them, because they cost him the only woman he ever loved. He told her of his passion, and, like the girl in the "Bab Ballads," "she reciprocated it."

"Will you marry me, then?" said the captain.

"I love you," she replied, "but I cannot attach myself permanently to such a pair of whiskers. Shave them, and I am yours."

"But I could not think of such a thing!" protested the captain.

"Well," said she, shrugging her pretty shoulders, "it's for you to decide. Which is it to be—me or the whiskers?"

"Whiskers!" sighed the captain.—New York Advertiser.

THE PROFESSOR'S CHICKENS.

His Knowledge of Poultry Farming Was Rather Limited.

This may not be new, but it was new to the reporter who overheard it on an East Providence car, so it is likely that there are others who have never heard it. The young man who told it was evidently a collegian, as was his companion.

"I heard a good one on Professor —— of Andover," he said.

"What was it?" queried the other.

"Well, you know, he was married during the winter and went to housekeeping just outside the village. This spring he thought he would add a few hens to his stock. He already had a dog. He set a couple of the hens and in time had two large broods of chickens. He was very proud of them, but in a week or so the hens began to die. He called in a neighbor to look at the chickens and offer advice. They were certainly a pretty sealy lot of chickens that the neighbor viewed. They were skinny looking and apparently without ambition.

"'What do you feed them?' asked the neighbor after a brief survey.

"'Feed them?' responded the professor, as though he didn't hear aright. 'Why, I don't feed them anything. I thought the old hens had milk enough for them.'"—Providence Journal.

Always a Cigar For a Friend.

My friend Brown, who goes into society as she exists, says he is acquainted with a man who keeps a box of cigars for his friends, and nearly every cigar in the box is different from all the rest. The man doesn't smoke himself. For a long time my friend Brown was a good bit puzzled to account for this curious combination of the weed and once asked the society man about it, but beyond a meaning smile he got no answer. Having discovered the source of that apparently inexhaustible supply of queer cigars at last, my friend Brown hastened to relieve my anxiety so that I might tell the rest of the world.

"You see," says my friend Brown, "he doesn't smoke. Well, when he is offered a cigar, don't you know, he takes it. See? When he is out to dinner, you know, he takes a cigar every time the box is passed, d'ye understand, and, by Jove, sometimes two or three, you know! He manages this way to worry along on $20,000 a year—oh, yaas, by Jove, it's so infernally mean, you know! And when you smoke his confounded cigars picked up that way, you know, you really don't know, you know, what you're getting. See?"

And my friend Brown grew quite indignant about it and thinks it ought to be exposed, so I expose it. This thing of being expected to smoke the fag end of other people's dinners is a social outrage.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Colossal Harp.

The largest harp ever made, so far as is known, was that invented and constructed by M. Veritan, provost of Burkli, near Basle. It was known as the gigantic meteorological Æolian harp. It was 320 feet in length and was erected in the garden of its inventor in 1787. This harp consisted of 15 iron wires, 320 feet in length, stretched between two poles. The wires were from two to three inches apart, the largest being one-sixth of an inch in thickness and the smallest one-twelfth of an inch. They were placed in the direction of north and south and inclined in such a manner as to form an angle of from 20 to 30 degrees with the horizon, being stretched by means of rollers properly disposed for the purpose. Whenever the weather changed, the wires sounded with such loudness that it was impossible to go on with a concert in the house. The sound sometimes represented the hissing noise of water in rapid ebullition, sometimes that of a harmonicon and sometimes that of distant chimes or an organ.—Brooklyn Eagle.

As True as Gospel.

A married man wails thus:

"Nothing maddens me more than to attempt to read the paper to my wife.

"I'll sit down and begin—it's always something interesting—and she'll be scated for a minute or two. Then she'll rise and say:

"'Go right ahead, dear. I can hear every word.'

"Then she'll prance into the next room and tinkle and tinkle with things on the mantel or the bureau while I raise my voice and have to roar out some paragraph that loses all its sense by that means.

"Then she'll disappear again, and I'll hear her voice come out in muffled tones from the clothes closet:

"'Wait a minute, dear; I'll be back.'

"But I don't wait.

"I put on my hat and go down town and read to myself all the way."—New York Recorder.

A King's Retort.

King Victor Emmanuel used often to tire before the termination of a day's sport, and mules and horses being out of the question in the precipitous mountain paths he would mount on the back of his chief huntsman, an Alpine Hercules, named Borretta. One day Borretta, having the king on his back, was crossing a torrent. The king having raised his foot to avoid getting his gaiter wet, the sudden movement almost capsized Borretta. Unmindful for a moment of the rank of his burden, he growled out, "Tente au, bourric" ("Hold steady, you jackass"). Without manifesting the least irritation or surprise, the king replied, "You apparently ignore, friend Borretta, that the jackass is the one who carries the load." And nothing more was said about the matter.—San Francisco Argonaut.

One day the children were having an object lesson on the blue heron. The teacher called attention to its small tail, saying, "The bird has no tail to speak of." The next day she asked the scholars to write a description of the bird, and a little German girl wound up by saying, "The blue heron has a tail, but it must not be talked about."—Babyhood.

When you have strained your plain boiled potatoes, take them at once to the open door or window and give them a vigorous shaking in the draft. They will become white and mealy. Try it once, and you will do it always, so great is the improvement, says the New York Telegram.

HORSEFLESH FOR FOOD.

The Taste For It Spreading In Europe, Sentiment and Science Against It.

Hippophagy, or, to speak less euphemistically, the habit of eating horseflesh, is spreading in Europe. While savage man is known to have sated his ravenous hunger on horseflesh or any other variety of flesh he could find, the modern origin of this peculiar taste dates from the siege of Paris during the Franco-Prussian war, when the populace were compelled from dire necessity to sacrifice this noble quadruped to sustain life. Many acquired a taste for the meat, and the demand for it did not cease with the capitulation of the city.

It was to be seen on sale at many of the butchers' stalls and has been ever since a staple article of diet for thousands of the poor of the French capital. For horseflesh is much cheaper than beef. Beef in Paris is worth 20 cents a pound, while horseflesh can be had for 8 cents a pound, which affords a reason why the barbarous custom should take such a firm hold upon these people when once necessity gave it root.

Once planted in Paris, the practice spread to other continental cities, especially to Berlin, where horseflesh is now consumed in considerable quantities by the poorer classes, and the medical authorities and humanitarians are raising their voices against what they justly consider a barbarous and dangerous custom.

The medical men warn the eaters of horseflesh that the horse is peculiarly liable to the disease known as trichinosis, also found in hogs, and while cooking generally destroys the germs of this disease it cannot always be depended upon to do so. The disease is frightfully fatal in its effects and baffles medical skill.

The humanitarians take the ground of sentiment, urging the almost human affection of the horse and the close companionship he has shared with man since the dawn of the human race. A base return, they deem it, to slaughter and eat this noble creature. In spite of these warnings and protests hippophagy is on the increase in Europe. It has not yet reached England, nor is it likely to as long as the roast beef and mutton of Australia and New Zealand last. Still, if the sentimental Britishers are too squeamish to eat their horses, they are not too squeamish to sell them to the continent to be eaten. Quite a number of superannuated equines are exported for that purpose.—New York World.

Telling the Old Story.

It was very late, and she had yawned more than once, but the young man with his hair parted in the middle and waxed down on both sides still sat there wondering what he should say next. Suddenly an inspiration seized him:

"Autumn leaves"—he began when she interrupted.

"Does she? That is encouraging."

He stared at her solemnly, and not comprehending took another tack.

"Don't you admire moonlight nights, Miss Julia?"

"Very much, but moonlight mornings are stupid, don't you think?"

He scratched his head delicately, hoping that a little light might enliven the gray matter and set him to thinking, when a distant whistle arrested his attention.

"Is that a policeman's whistle?" he asked doubtfully.

"No; I believe it's a mill whistle calling the men to their day's work," she responded, with a shiver.

"No, weally, I had no idea it was so late, don't you know, Miss Julia?"

"It isn't late; it's early. You will be able to see your way home now, I think. Papa is sitting up to let you out."

That broke up the young man and his romance, and when he makes a call now he sits facing the clock.—Detroit Free Press.

Queer Signs.

In front of the sign painting establishments is a great banner which says, "As a rule, we don't believe in signs unless they happen to be selected from our new and handsome patterns."

A clothing store on the West Side has adopted as its catch line, "Even snakes shed their skins." This is supposed to be a gentle invitation to purchase a new suit of clothes.

In front of a lower State street place is a sign which causes many a grin. It announces, "A bowel of soup with every drink."

On a bill of fare in a down town restaurant is the following notice: "Any inattention or lack of courtesy on the part of employees will, if reported to the management, be gratefully appreciated."—Chicago Times.

Not Surprising.

A young woman, lately returned from Europe, was talking with a friend about her experiences. If she is correctly reported by the Boston Transcript, it must be admitted that a foreign tour is not of necessity a liberal education.

She was telling about the wonderful smoothness and pleasantness of the homeward voyage.

"It is a little surprising that you should have had clear weather and nothing else," remarked her friend, who felt obliged to say something.

"Not at all," answered the young lady. "I was told that the captain swept the sky with his telescope the first thing every morning."

Costly Picture Frames.

Some splendid picture frames may be seen every year at the Royal academy exhibition, but the finest and costliest frame ever made for a picture was that which incloses the "Virgin and Child" in Milan cathedral. It is made of hammered gold, with an inner molding of lapis lazuli. The corners of this valuable frame have hearts in large pearls and precious stones. Its estimated worth is £25,000.

One of the pictures in the Vatican at Rome is in a frame studded with jewels. The picture is a valuable one, but the frame nearly equals the value of the painting.—London Standard.

Will He Keep Them?

Stern Father—I want you to drop the acquaintance of young Wildleigh altogether.

Daughter—Why so, papa?

Stern Father—I don't think he is a promising young man.

Daughter—Oh, yes, he is, papa. He has promised me all sorts of things after we are married.—Brooklyn Life.

The Sting Out of It.

"But the disgrace my family will suffer," protested the doomed man, "because of my death by the ax."

"Pray give yourself no uneasiness on that score," urged the kindly deapot. "The affair will be officially gazetted as an operation for appendicitis."—Detroit Tribune.

Not Possible.

She—That last battle of yours must have been a terrific one, major.

The Major—It was indeed (proudly). I wish I might have had a photograph of myself taken on the field.

She—But they didn't take instantaneous pictures then.—Detroit Free Press.

A PLUCKY WOMAN

And What She Was Able to Accomplish.

She and Her Daughter Have a Remarkable Experience.

She Was a Hard Working Person, and This Will Interest All Workers.

All kinds of diseases and weaknesses leave their marks on the system. It is very easy for the stomach, liver, bowels and kidneys to become deranged, and when they do, the person soon feels tired, languid, weak, low-spirited and gloomy.

The nerves become weak, and insanity or paralysis may follow. The blood gets bad, there is coated tongue, bad taste in mouth, constipation, the complexion grows sallow and life looks dark. All persons complaining of any of these troubles will read with wonder the following letter from Mrs. James Roake, a well-known lady living at 145 Washington street, Peekskill, N. Y.:

"About fifteen years ago I was taken very sick. After seven months I got over that, but have never been well since. I have suffered terribly with pains in the chest, back, kidneys and head. There was a disagreeable feeling in the eyes and I would be very sick in the morning.

"My mind was always gloomy and I felt very low spirited. I had terrible numb spells and would have to be rubbed some time before I could get around. Some of these numb spells were so severe my friends thought I would not recover from them.

"I tried doctors and medicines but got no better. Finally I began the use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, as my husband had been most miraculously cured by it. After using it a short time there was a most wonderful improvement.

MRS. JAMES ROAKE.

"I continued to steadily gain in every respect until I was cured of all these terrible ailings. This wonderful medicine had now cured my husband and myself of the most fearful suffering, but this was not all. I now want to tell about my little girl.

"She has never been well since she was born. No doctors have known just what ailed her. She was out of her mind most of the time and had constant pain in her side. She has had spasms continually, from six to seven a month.

"She is the smallest child of her age that can be found. All medicines could do nothing for her until I gave her Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and then she was cured in a short time. I cannot say enough in praise of this wonderful medicine, it has done so much for me and my family. I heartily advise everyone to take it."

If you have any of these complaints or for any reason don't feel just as well as you want to, take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and you will be made well and strong. It positively cures all such complaints.

All physicians recommend it, as it is the discovery and prescription of the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. He can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

GOOD : CLOTHES.

OVERCOATS, ULSTERS, SUITS.

LYNCH'S is the store of PAR EXCELLENCE in Springfield to-day for "good clothes." That's an accepted fact. That's LYNCH'S specialty. That's the truth that underlies LYNCH'S success, that tells the story of LYNCH'S magnificent and fast growing business.

Take a peep, if you will, at LYNCH'S New Goods. LYNCH'S OVERCOATS at $20, $30, $40 and $50 would do honor to any tailor. They don't require talking. They speak for, they commend themselves. Custom garments at any price could be no better. They alone would establish LYNCH'S reputation for leadership in "good clothes." LYNCH'S $10, $12, $15 and $18 garments are fine. Splendid materials. Well made. Built for service, style and comfort. As to ULSTERS, LYNCH'S $10, $12 and $15 Garments are most desirable. Friezes in Black and Oxford Mixtures. Windproof. Waterproof. Warm. Better values cannot be had.

Again look at LYNCH'S SUITS. Examine, compare them. Try them. You will realize, as perhaps never before, the meaning of shapely, perfect fitting, fashionable "Good Clothes." $10, $12 $15, $18, to $30.

PALE, THIN AND EMACIATED PEOPLE.

The country is full of them. They do not know what it is to feel well like other folks. Medicines of all kinds have been tried without good results. Cod Liver Oil and the preparations of Malt have all failed. What is the reason? These emaciated people cannot digest starchy foods. The fat of the body is produced with bread, potatoes, and other starchy food. If they will eat food that is artificially digested, they will grow fat, strong, plump and robust. They will commence gaining flesh at once. This Flesh Forming Food is called Paskola. You can buy it at any drug store. Send your name to The Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade St., New York, and get their interesting pamphlet.

ITS WONDERFUL EFFICACY.

Newspapers Admit Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy Is All It Is Claimed.

The intense interest taken in the almost miraculous cures made by Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, at Athens, N. Y., and other places, resulted in the Albany, N. Y., Journal sending a special representative to Athens to investigate the cases, and it was found that many of the cures made by this medicine were simply wonderful.

In the cases of Mr. Lewis Clow, who had chronic kidney disease, Mrs. Casper Brooks, suffering from female troubles and kidney disease, and Mrs. William Tiffany, who suffered from general prostration, all of these cases were abandoned by their attending physicians. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was then used by them and in every case an absolute cure was effected.

Mr. C. E Bartholomew, Kalkaska, Mich., writes: "Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy saved my life when I was a victim of Bright's disease."

"I had been troubled since 1869," writes S. N. Arnold, of Rochester, N. Y., "with gravel and catarrh of the bladder. Tried several doctors, but got no relief. Finally I used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The result was marvelous; after using a few bottles I was entirely cured."

A Thanksgiving Lesson.

One rainy, dark Thanksgiving Day,
Not many years ago,
I sat with folded hands and watched
The parlor fire burn low.

My thoughts were on the mold'ring past;
The nearly vanished year
Had mostly been composed of days
Unhappy, sad and drear.

My heart was full of bitter pain;
I brushed some tears away;
"I've few things to be thankful for This dark Thanksgiving Day!"

But scarcely had I breathed the words,
When passing by my door
I saw a little cripple boy,
With garments patched and poor.

A tattered cap adorned his head;
Some old, worn shoes his fee';
And yet, to my surprise, his voice
Was ringing clear and sweet.

"What shall I render to my God,
For all his gifts to me?"
I turned away; the tears of shame
Fell so I could not see.

"Dear little child," I thought, "you've taught
A lesson by your song;
Its influence within my heart,
Shall live and flourish long.

"If you, afflicted and forlorn,
Can yet so grateful feel,
Reflecting not upon life's woe,
Remembering all its weal,

"What earnest thanks my heart should fill
For all that I enjoy!
My faith in Him the darkest clouds
Shall not henceforth destroy."

I knelt and asked forgiveness for
Each hasty, thankless word
That I had uttered, and I'm sure
The loving Father heard.

That song returns, when not content
I'm tempted e'er to be:
"What shall I render to my God,
For all His gifts to me?"

THANKSGIVING SURPRISE.

"Yes," spoke up old Mrs. Brown, drawing her thread through the quilt which was stretched full size in the Widow Cobb's "square room;" "yes, I think that would be a good scheme."

"What would be a good scheme?" inquired the Widow Cobb, coming in from the kitchen, where she had been to put the kettle on for tea. "Mis' Follansbee here says, 'Le's give the minister a Thanksgivin' donation party.' An' Mis' Andrus she says, 'An' le's make it a surprise.' That's what I think is a good scheme."

"So do I," said the widow, sitting down to the quilt again. "It ain't quite supper-time. I thought 't was. 'An' so I'll finish makin' this bunch o' leaves. Got your star done, Mis' Brown? My land, ef you ain't the greatest!"

"But Mis' Goodnow told me only las' summer," put in Nancy Lee, as Mrs. Cobb stopped to catch her breath, "that the elder don't approve of donation parties."

"Don't approve of 'em!" exclaimed a dozen indignant voices at once. "Why not?"

"She said as he said," Nancy went on to explain, "that he wanted his salary in money, an' don't want ter hev ter take it in truck an' dicker. She said when he first begun ter preach he had ter take his pay in butter an' oats an' maple sugar an' potatoes, till he never got no money at all. An' finally, after livin' all winter on pertaters without meat, an' Indian meal an' buckwheat, not bein' able to buy a barrel o' flour an' nobody givin' of 'em any, he put his foot down an' kep' it there, an' he ain't 'lowed no donation since. I've got ter go now, Mis' Cobb. I promised Lyddy I would be back afore supper. Her baby's sick."

"That's a shame," said a couple of women who sat on the further side of the quilt. "To go to a quiltin' and not stay to supper!"

Poor Nancy knew only too well the display of toothsome viands that would be set forth by the Widow Cobb; and she hated to go back to Lyddy's fried-pork-and-potato supper. But duty was duty; and Nancy Lee had devoted herself to other people's comfort too many years to stop now and think only of her own.

"It is a shame," said Mrs. Brown after they were all seated in Mrs. Cobb's pleasant kitchen around her groaning board. "I say it's downright unchristian, the way them sisters treats Nancy Lee. They make a perfect slave of her."

"That's so," responded the Widow Cobb, handing about the most fragrant cups of tea; "an' I wouldn't stand it ef I was her."

"La! she's used to it," said Jemima Bushnell. Poor critter, she wouldn't know what to make of any other treatment.

"I wonder Nancy ain't never married," said Mrs. Atwell.

"'Tain't for want o' chances," put in Mrs. Brown.

"O no, it never is, with old maids," tittered Jemima.

"Nancy's had chances enough," Mrs. Brown went on, ignoring the last speaker. "She might uv married years ago, afore she was out uv her twenties. The' was enough that wanted her. Squire Adams, he was dead set after her, and he was forehanded enough to give her as fine a home as any in Pottsville. An' I dunno how many more of 'em' th' was. John Teale, I know, and Jim Atwill." (Mrs. Atwill squirmed in her chair, but said nothing.) "Ef I remember right, too, the' was a man by the name o' Bushnell used to kind o' hanker art r Nancy."

Jemima's face turned red at this direct reference to her liege lord, but she deemed it prudent to make a remark to her next neighbor on the excellence of the quince preserves which she was sampling.

"Yes," went on Mrs. Brown, "she had plenty o' chances, but with seven younger children in the family an' her mother dead to say nothin' of her father's bein' shif'less, Nancy didn't see how she could be spared. An' I dunno's they'd ever hev come up an' done so well as they hev, ef she hadn't staid right with 'em. But now 't they're all growed up an' married an' gone to homes of their own, it does seem kind o' hard on Nancy."

"Wal, they ain't obleeged to make a pack-horse of her," remarked the widow as she passed the sponge cake. "Fust it's one thing an' then another, but they keep Nancy trottin' amongst 'em the whole 'durin' time. If there's a new baby on hand, Nancy has to go; if any of the young ones gits measles or chicken-pox, or swallors a bone crossways, nothin' to do but Nancy must go and take the blunt o' things till everybody's well agin. It's Nancy here and Nancy there. Ef Lyddy ain't got nothin' for her to do, Kate has; an' ef Kate ever gits through with her, they're a dyin' for her down to Mary Ann's. An' before she gits through to Mary Ann's, Lizy Jane's sick an' nobody 'll do but Nancy. An' that's the way it goes."

"As for her marryin", put in the Widow Perkins, "they're awful 'fraid she will marry, that's all. They would do anything to prevent that. They all inherit their father's shif'lessness, 'ceptin' Nancy; an they want her to work for 'em. But I don't suppose she ever has chances now."

"O the's always plenty o' chances for chipper old maids like her," said Mrs. Brown. "Widowers always like 'em. Who knows? She may be fillin' some o' our places yit as second wife."

"Mis' Follansbee," broke in Jemima Bushnell at this juncture. "I've got a new idee. Ef donations ain't wanted up to the elder's, I know where one wouldn't come amiss."

"Where?" asked several interested voices.

"Wal, mebbe you'll laugh," pursued Mrs. Bushnell, "but Josiah an' I dropped round one night last week to see Hi Skeels. You know he has to be his own housekeeper since Philura got married in August. An' lonesome enough it is for him, too. Cook? Why, his cookin' must be somethin' turrible. You can't call it cookin' really. It's jest gettin' somethin' to fill him up."

"Well, what's your idee?" asked the Widow Cobb, impatiently.

"I say, why not cook up all we can—jest as good and jest as much of it as ef it was goin' to the minister, an' all hands turn out an' surprise Hi Skeels with it? He needs it ef anybody does."

"Wal, now," murmured Mrs. Perkins in her motherly voice; "that's good of you, Jemima, to think of that. It's befriendin' the widow and fatherless, so 't is."

"I don't exactly see the p'int there," laughed Jemima. "Hi Skeels ain't no widow, an' altho' he's fatherless, he's been so ever sence he was five years old, and he's thirty-eight now, if he's a day."

"Hi's fore-handed, too," put in Mrs. Brown. "He'd orter git married an' not try to 'batch it.' But it'll be a mighty surprise to Hi, our givin' him a donation party. Hi's a good man an' a good neighbor, but natur' never meant him to 'batch it.'"

* * * * * *

"Oh, Lordy! Jerusalem, how that cracked my skull!" growled Hi Skeels the night before Thanksgiving. "That's the third time I've bumped my head on that shelf, fumblin' round in the dark after a match. I'll saw that shelf off to-morror, I snum. An' of course the lamp's got to be filled afore I can light it. Lord! Jes' my luck. The ile can is empty. Now, Hi Skeels, I ain't goin' to stand this sort o' thing much longer. I'll git a housekeeper, or else I'll give up the farm work an' do the cookin' an' learn how to do it weil. I vow, I ain't agoin' to live on cold beans and brown bread much longer, I can't stand it, an' I won't, neither."

After some more poking about in the dark, another lamp was found and lighted; but the chimney had not been washed since August, when his sister had left him, and the light was anything but dazzling. Hi built a fire in the kitchen stove and put on the kettle to make his solitary cup of tea, soliloquizing meanwhile—

"I'd git married to-morror, if I could find the right sort of a wife. But the girls nowadays don't think of nothin' but gim-cracks and poppy-cock an' gaddin' round to quiltin's an' parties an' sleigh-rides. But I've got to be lookin' round; for housekeepers are as skerce as hen's teeth, and durned high. Ef I could find a nice quiet woman that loves to stay to hum, one that could make good biscut and clear coffee and mince pies sech as mother used to make;" (Hi Skeels's standard, you see, was as old-fashioned as his ideas) "one that knows how to keep house well an' not throw out'n the window with a shovel faster 'n I could bring in with a go-cart, I'd—wal, dunno but I'd quit batchin' it. Land, ain't that water never goin' to bile? I'm cantankerous hungry. Hello, what's that?"

The door opened, and Hi slunk back into the safe shelter of the dark pantry, as a laughing, noisy pack of women poured in, bringing baskets, pails and bundles innumerable.

"I know he's to hum, for I see his shadow on the winder curtain," said Elmira Perkins.

"Here he is," cried Susan Dabney, pulling the reluctant Mr. Skeels forth from his lair. "Now come out here, an' be surprised."

"Lord! I'm that a' ready," replied the dazed Hiram.

"Thot we'd come down an' take supper with you," said Uncle Joshua Brown.

"I've got a quart of cold beans," said Hi, grinning, "You're welcome to 'em."

"Oh, ho!" said Uncle Joshua. "We didn't trust to your hevin' anything. We brought our own truck; an' we're bound to eat one good square meal with ye."

The astonished bachelor looked on, expecting to wake and find it all a dream. His mouth fairly watered as he gazed upon the pies and cakes, the roast chickens, the whole turkey, the jellies and honey, the cider "applesass," the puddings and other goodies which were produced from from those quasi-mysterious baskets and bundles.

The merry group flitted from pantry to kitchen, seized on his stores of crockery, and made themselves at home in the most hilarious fashion possible. In fact, their liveliness nearly took away the bachelor's breath.

The Widow Cobb and Mrs. Brown, with Jeremiah Bushnell to help, seized hold of the long extension table in the dining-room and whisked it out to its full length. Then they spread it with the whitest of homespun linen and began to load it with good things.

Flavilla Perkins in a high-colored delaine dress was cutting pound cake on his kitchen table. Patty Grimes was emptying a jar of the most tempting pickles into one of his mother's china bowls. Mrs. Dobbs was slicing a big roast fowl on the top of the flour barrel, pausing now and then to give instructions to Minerva Hatch, who was creaming a pan of potatoes on the stove. Hi Skeels found it hard to realize that he was in his own kitchen.

"Good land!" cried the Widow Cobb, bustling out from the dining room. "The coffee ain't made yet, and the teakettle 's bilin' like sixty. Where's Nancy Lee? She can make the best coffee of anybody 'n this town. An' she promised, comin' over, to make it."

Hi Skeels pricked up his ears. "Good coffee, eh?"

"Here I am, Mis' Cobb," answered a soft voice, as Nancy came into the kitchen. "Sister Kate's baby was so fretty I couldn't get away before. But I've got him to sleep an' laid him on the bed upstairs. An' now, where is the coffee pot?"

"We hadn't ort to ask you to do a single thing I know," pursued Mrs. Cobb, "but you do make such good coffee."

Hi Skeels watched Nancy move about the room in plain gray dress. No gim-cracks or fol-de-rols about her, he thought.

"Have a chair, Nancy," he said after a while, "you look kind o' tired."

"I am tired, Hi," she responded frankly. "I've been on my feet all day, cookin' up to Sister Lyddy's for Thanksgivin'. She's all beat out, you know, and they wouldn't a' had any Thanksgivin' if I hadn't be'n there."

"It's too bad—workin' so hard for folks," began Hi.

"Oh, I'm real glad to do it," urged Nancy. "Jes' think what would them babies done for a Thanksgivin', ef I hadn't be'n let go there jes' now."

They two were alone in the yellow painted kitchen. The Widow Cobb had fled to remote parts of the house. Minervy Hatch had gone into the dining room, Flavilla Perkins and Mrs. Dobbs had gone down cellar after cream for the coffee and the luscious canned strawberries. The rest of the women were busy working or talking in the front room of the farmhouse. While gath'ered about the big fireplace in the "settin' room," were the members of the sterner sex, listenin' to Elder Goodnow, who, though unwilling to be the recipient of a donation party, was quite willing to help give one, when it did not have to effect his salary.

The coast was clear, and now was Hi Skeels's opportunity. He improved it.

Leaning over in his chair, which was pretty near Nancy's, he whispered:

"Nan, ten years ago I asked you to marry me. You said no."

"Yes." Nancy's word was faint.

"'Sposin' I should ask you again to-night? What'd you say?"

"I should say yes, Hi," was the frank answer.

Nancy never looked prettier, or younger, than at that moment.

"All right," said Hi, "to-night it is, then. Jes' let me speak to Elder Goodnow——"

"Oh, Hi," protested Nancy, "Not so soon, I didn't mean——"

"But you promised," urged the impatient Hiram, who considered a bird in the hand worth a whole flock in the bush. "An' you can't back out. It 's now or never, which, Nancy?"

"It's to-night, then," faltered Nancy. "If you won't listen to reason."

* * * * * * *

The donation party was made ready at last. Platters of roast turkey were flanked by plates of fried chicken and sliced ham surrounded on every hand with dishes of pickles, sauces, custards and preserves, while doughnuts, cookies, jelly cake, pound cake, fruit cake and all conceivable varieties of cake were scattered from one end of the long table to the other, and mince pies, apple pies, custard pies and pumpkin pies fairly cried to be eaten. Never in the history of Pottsville had there been known such a donation supper as they had surprised Hi Skeels with.

Elder Goodnow stepped into the middle of the floor.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began, "before we partake of this sumptuous repast, our friend and neighbor here wishes to speak to you."

Hi Skeels, standing near Nancy Lee, took up the thread of the parson's discourse here.

"Yes," he said, "I do want to say something. I want to thank ye one and all: first, for this donation party and the genooine surprise you've given me to-night. As for this Thanksgivin' supper here, I'll prove by-'m-by how thankful a man can be to set down to a square meal after livin' on cold beans and pertaters for two months, as I hev. No words of mine can express my gratitude. Thank ye, friends, for rememberin' a poor, lonely, old bachelor. But turn about is fair play. I was never more surprised in my life than I was when you all come pourin' in here to-night; since then, I've been prepar-in' a little surprise for you; I'v turned the tables and turned over a new leaf, too. And I assure you that no one can be more agreeably surprised than I am to-night. Come, Nancy."

Hi took his blushing bride by the hand and stood by the elder, and in a few moments was placed beyond the necessity of "batching it" any farther.

A more complete surprise never was executed. During the ceremony a pin could have been heard to drop; that is, if everything femenine had not been too highly electrified to drop. But when Elder Goodnow pronounced them man and wife, good Mrs. Brown got her breath and rushed forward to kiss the bride. And then followed a perfect hubbub of congratulations, and a storm of kisses. And poor Hi nearly fainted away when some of the younger and giddier girls declared they should kiss the bridegroom, too; and immediately the whole bevy put into effect the declaration.

But at last the Thanksgiving donation and wedding feast was remembered, and Mrs. Hi Skeels hurried away into the kitchen for the coffee, which she declared must be "spil't" with too much boiling.

Never was a feast disposed of with so much relish before. Never did viands disappear so rapidly. But Hi Skeels did not worry about the coming fare of after days, as he must have done otherwise. For he had married the best cook as well as the most self-sacrificing and kind hearted woman in Pottsville.

"They lived happy ever after," as in all good fairy tales. But it was long a matter of conjecture in Pottsville, as to whether Hi Skeels was the most surprised on that Thanksgiving eve, or whether he "outwitted his surprisers."—Helen M. Winslow in Boston Transcript.

A THANKSGIVING INVITATION.

MY DEAR MR. TURKEY.—May we count on your presence at dinner on Thursday, the 29th? No great preparation is needed, as we feel sure you will be well dressed. You will be the cynosure of all eyes and the object of open mouthed admiration.

You will meet with a hearty reception from some men, who will come to dinner after the exercises of the morning, which may be violent, and you need not fear but that several pretty girls, who are to be present, will like you very much. Your old friend, Cranberry Sauce, will be placed near you—and you two always got along beautifully together, you know. The pater familias will pay you marked attention and see that you are not monopolized by any one person.

Poor old grandma, whose teeth are not what they used to be, is especially counting on your tenderness. It may amuse you, but nevertheless it is a fact that even the cook anticipates your coming, and is making great preparations in consequence.

You will be surrounded by pretty girls, and be in the midst of those who will be sure to appreciate you. We look to you to appeal to the inner consciousness of our guests. Until Thursday, then, yours, EVERYBODY.

P. S.—It may fall to your lot to touch the lips of some of the girls. Take warning—you won't be permitted to linger long in that enviable proximity.—Adapted from Life.

NOT POLITE TO HIS SISTER.

He was proceeding leisurely up the avenue yesterday morning, and was evidently at peace with his fashionably attired self. He had bowed very politely to several of his acquaintances of the other sex, and was "nice" all over until he spied a young lady in front of him, the color of whose dress, whose form, and whose carriage assured him that it was his sister. He hurried a bit and put his hand on the girl's shoulder with a loud and familiar salutation that caused the passers-by to look around in surprise.

"Hello, Bess," he said.

Next moment he was abjectly stammering a humble apology, for the girl had turned on him a strange face and a pair of eyes fairly blazing with righteous anger.

"Beg pardon. I mistook you for my sister," he explained.

She looked him over from the top of his curling locks to the tips of his patent-leather shoes with a glance that spoke a volume of contempt too deep for words.

"You did?" she said, freezingly. "Well, if I had a brother that would greet me in such an insulting manner, I'd—I'd box his ears."

She walked away indignantly, leaving him the dumbfounded butt of the derisive laughing of the unsympathetic onlookers.—Washington Star.

"Ef I give you your dinner," asked Mr. Hoiseid, "will you turn the grindstone a while?" "Naw," said Dismal Dawson. "I ain't no crank agitator."—Cincinnati Tribune.

Thanksgiving Hymn.

We come, O Lord, these autumn days,
With hymns of gratitude and praise.
Harvests of gold the plains adorn,
Rich fruits roll forth from Plenty's horn;
Thou givest treasure from the rocks;
The little hills are clothed with flocks;
The seas are with their burden white,
And new thy mercies day and night.

For changing seasons as they go,
For autumn leaf, for winter's snow,
For the green verdure of the spring,
For life in plant, and life on wing,
For summer with its ripening heat,
For hopes the rounded years complete,
For morn and noon, for night and day,
For light that marks our heavenward way;

For all the blessings of Thy hand,
For freedom in fair freedom's land,
Pursuits of thrift that bring us wealth,
For schools and churches, peace and health,
For commerce, yielding up her stores,
Brought for man's use from distant shores,
For countless gifts, O Lord, we raise
Our hymns of gratitude and praise.

Thou settest man in families,
And all his wants the earth supplies,
Of children, be they far or near,
Of children's children gathered here,
We thank Thee for thy gracious care,
And lift for them the secret prayer;
As clustered round each social board,
We eat and drink and praise the Lord.

MONSON ACADEMY.

Monson townspeople are rightly proud of their Academy. Besides the help it has given to students from abroad, it has been for ninety years an active force in the upbuilding of this town as an intelligent, wide-awake, progressive community.

The growth of the school from time to time, and its increased effectiveness, are causes for general rejoicing. The burning of the old building seemed a great misfortune, but from that loss has come the gain of more commodious quarters, so that now hardly a school in the state can show better equipment.

Within the last few years more teachers have been called into service. Those in closest contact with the school most fully realize the advantages of this added efficiency. The work as now divided among the teachers is largely departmental, and it is generally conceded that thus only can the best training be given. Schools in cities and larger towns find it worth while to employ teachers who are specialists, even though their work may occupy only three or four hours a day. Less than a half dozen years ago one teacher in our Academy during one term had classes in science, history, literature, Latin, German and psychology, with essay work additional. Under such conditions a teacher cannot bring to the class-room the greatest possible freshness and force of thought.

With the increase in the number of scholars, classes have grown larger, and some must almost necessarily recite in divisions. The daily drill that pupils of academy age require cannot be given where there are from twenty-five to forty in a group. For this reason the classes beginning Latin, algebra, and physics are divided, and a recitation hour given to each section. With the broadening of courses new classes have been introduced, especially in the middle and senior years. It is the desire of trustees, teachers, alumni and interested friends, that our graduates shall be assured of easy entrance to colleges and technical schools, whatever examinations may be required for admission.

For the good of all concerned it is desirable that no recitations be conducted in the study rooms. So far this ideal has not been realized, but a step in the direction has been gained; in the present arrangement, one study room is free for application to tasks during two periods on certain days.

Greater use can now be made of the excellent Flynt and Packard library connected with the Academy. Four years ago this could be open only after school hours. The common experience was that pupils were then too much wearied by the day's work, too eager to enjoy recreation, to give many minutes to the consultation of reference books, or to supplementary reading. Now the room is open during both sessions, and is freely used; more library work is required than was possible before a librarian was secured. After school hours there is opportunity to read the magazines furnished for the school.

There has been special development of the essay work in a practically helpful way, as the appreciation of the scholars themselves testifies. Formerly compositions were required at stated times, but whatever was done was an extra tax on both pupil and teacher. Now each class in the course is met once a week, to receive suggestions about writing, with criticism and commendation of work done. Essays are prepared monthly in the lower grades. In the upper classes special attention is given to critical study of the works of masters of the English language, and essays are based on this study. This is in addition to the two years given to literature in the English and Latin-Scientific courses.

Such are some of the benefits recently furnished for the Academy scholars. The teachers are glad at any time to show interested friends the actual work done in the schools.

A WINNING CONUNDRUM.

A well-known Detroiter stood at the corner of Woodward and Jefferson avenues yesterday waiting for a car, and a seedy-looking individual approached him.

"Excuse me," said Seedy, "but will you be kind enough to tell me what time it is?"

The gentleman consulted his watch.

"It's a quarter after one," he replied rather curiously.

The seedy one coughed.

"Do you know, sir, the difference between the time and me?"

"Give it up," replied the gentleman, still more interested.

"Would you like to know, sir?"

"Yes."

"Well, sir, the time is a quarter after one, and I am one after a quarter."

"Thanks," responded the gentleman, handing it to him with a bow.—Detroit Free Press.

PALMER NEWS.

The High School's Proposed Entertainment Course.

As was stated a few weeks ago, the scholars of the high school have in contemplation a course of entertainments for this season, their aim being to raise money for the nucleus of a school library. The course has been practically decided upon, and is as follows:

Dec. 7th or 14th, 1894.—C. T. Grilley, humorist; Heinrich Schuecher, harpist; flutist from Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Jan. 25th or 28th, 1895.—Thomas Dixon, Jr., or John DeWitt Miller, popular lecture.
Feb. 20th.—Amherst Glee, Mandolin and Banjo Clubs, (35 men.)
March 12th.—Columbian Concert Co.—Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, soprano; Wulf Fries, violoncellist; C. L. Soats, clarinet virtuoso; Miss Jessie M. Downer, solo pianist.
April 3d.—Harvard Quartet, with a reader.
April 19th or 26th.—School entertainment.

As will be seen, it is a most excellent one, embracing some of the best artists before the public to-day, and in addition it is possible that Col. Russell H. Conwell, who has been in Palmer several times but who always draws a large audience, may come in March as an extra. The talent which it is proposed to have makes the course an expensive one, and as the scholars have no money to sink in a venture of this kind they naturally wish to be pretty sure of paying expenses before they engage the attractions, and have started in to see what encouragement they can get from the public. The tickets for the course will probably be $2, with the best of the single entertainments 50 cents each. At the low price of the course tickets there should be no difficulty in disposing of a sufficient number to insure the success of the venture. To advertise the course the scholars propose to issue a souvenir programme of a dozen or sixteen pages, printed on fine plated paper, and are asking the merchants of the town to place their advertisements in it, hoping to get enough in this way to pay for the advertising of the entertainments, and every merchant in the place should help along the project. It has been some time since Palmer has had a course of entertainments, there is much work in arranging for and managing one, and those who are now endeavoring to give the people a series of high class amusements should be well patronized. Besides this, the object for which the work is undertaken—the establishing of a school library—is a most worthy one.

Boston and Albany Time Table Changes.

The new time table which went into effect on the Boston and Albany road last Monday makes the following changes at Palmer: The early morning Worcester accommodation, connecting for Boston, now leaves 12 minutes later, at 6.22. A few of the through trains have had their numbers changed to correspond with the western roads to allow the same number between Boston and Chicago, etc. Going east the Boston express, formerly number 10, becomes number 36 and leaves four minutes later, at 8.25; the "Governor's" train leaves two minutes earlier, at 9.40; the midday Boston accommodation leaves one minute earlier, at 11.42; the Boston express formerly leaving at 1.50 now leaves at 1.40; the Boston accommodation now leaves Springfield at 4.10 and Palmer at 4.42; Conductor Camp's Palmer accomodation now leaves Springfield at 6 o'clock and arrives here at 6.32 p. m.; the train going east at 9.03, formerly known as number 6, now becomes number 14. The first western accommodation in the morning leaves three minutes earlier, at 8.02; the Springfield accommodation also leaves three minutes earlier, at 10.19; the Albany express, formerly number 3, becomes number 7 and leaves six minutes earlier, at 10.53; the first afternoon Springfield accommodation leaves three minutes earlier, at 1.49; the Albany express formerly known as number 5 has becomes 23 and leaves eight minutes earlier, at 5.20; the Springfield accommodation has ceased to side track at this station to allow the fast New York express to pass, but now runs into Springfield ahead and leaves at 5.49 instead of 6.10 o'clock; the last Springfield accommodation leaves two minutes later, at 8.47. Sunday trains leave going east at 8.25 a. m., 6.49 and 7.55 p. m., and going west at 1.46 a. m. and 6.06 p. m. The changes on the Ware River branch make the afternoon train for Winchendon leave two minutes earlier, at 3.18, and the afternoon train from Winchendon now arrives at 5.13 instead of 5.20. The evening train for Barre Plains leaves at 6.55, thirteen minutes earlier than formerly.

Burleigh—Warren.

The marriage of Mrs. L. M. Burleigh of this place to Moses H. Warren of Hampden took place yesterday afternoon at the residence of J. M. Converse, where Mrs. Burleigh has lived for a number of years. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. E. Jenkins of the Congregational church, only relatives of Mrs. Burleigh and one or two intimate friends being present. A wedding supper was served, Barr of Springfield catering, after which Mr. and Mrs. Warren left on the 5.49 train for the west, and will take a short wedding trip, though their destination is unknown. On their return they will live in Hampden, where Mr. Warren has a pretty residence. Mrs. Burleigh has been a resident of Palmer for many years, and an active worker in the Congregational church, the Ladies' Society of which presented her with a handsome onyx clock as a wedding present. She was also the recipient of numerous other tokens of esteem from friends in Palmer and other places, including a handsome banquet lamp and many pieces of silver.

T. J. Conroy and C. D. Fuller have been drawn as jurors to attend a special civil term of the superior court in Springfield.

Rev. Mr. Francis, who has been the pastor of the People's church on Park street, has resigned that position and is now in New Jersey.

Francis, the eldest son of F. D. Barton, is quite ill with typhoid fever. Mabel, daughter of John Lyman, is also sick with the disease.

This evening the Order of the Eastern Star will give a social to resident Masons and their families, all of whom are cordially invited.

Freight traffic is unusually heavy on the New London Nothern road for this season of the year, and extra trains are being run day and night.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins and Dea. J. B. Shaw were delegates to the installation of Rev. G. L. Goodspeed as pastor of the First church in Springfield Wednesday.

J. J. Conway has established an "all hot" stand on Main street, and will hereafter be ready to furnish that article on Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights.

Surveyors have been through the town during the week making the survey which the county commissioners recommended for the state road asked for by the town.

All the schools of the town except the high school closed this afternoon for a vacation of a week. The high school will close next Wednesday night for a vacation of two days.

Yardmaster Burns of the New London Nothern road has been running the work train on the south end this week, and Thomas Murphy has been officiating as yardmaster.

A union Thanksgiving service will be held in the Congregational church next Wednesday evening at 7.30, Rev. H. F. Moulton of the Universalist church preaching the sermon.

A. E. Fitch attended the dedication of the Fitchburg Mutual Fire Insurance Company's new building at Fitchburg Tuesday, when the company treated its agents to a fine turkey dinner.

The children of the Baptist Sunday school have this week been making collections of food, money, clothing, etc., for a Thanksgiving offering to the Home for Little Wanderers in Boston.

The service at the Congregational church next Sunday evening, in charge of the Men's Sunday Evening Club, will contain a specially prepared musical programme, and a short address by the pastor.

Next Thursday—Thanksgiving Day—will be observed at St. Thomas's Catholic church with a special service at 8 a. m., when a requiem mass will celebrated for the deceased members of the parish.

District Deputy Gaylord of Holyoke paid an official visit to Hampden R. A. chapter Monday evening. The Royal Arch degree was worked, after which there was a collation, with speeches, and a social time.

Next Monday evening Washington Council, R. and S. M., will hold its first meeting of the new business year, and will work the three degrees. Delegations from Warren, Ware and Hardwick are expected to be present.

All persons to whom premiums are due from the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society must call for the same at the store of the secretary, O. P. Allen, on or before December 1st, or the premiums will revert to the society.

G. W. Moore and wife of Hartford have come to Palmer to reside, and are stopping with Mrs. Moore's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Paine. Mr. Moore expects to open his jewelry store in Holden's block about the first of December.

It is expected that there will be about fifteen special passenger trains between Boston and Springfield to-morrow on account of the Yale-Harvard football game. Besides the regular service leaving Palmer at 8.02, 10.19, 10.50 a. m. and 1.17 and 1.49 p. m., there will be a special at 10.45 a. m.

The superior court has approved the finding of the special commission relating to the change in the grade crossing on the road to Three Rivers. Land belonging to Henry R. Ferrell, Robert E. Ferrell and Helen A. Jones on the east side of the railroad is taken for highway purposes, and on the west side land of Henry R. Ferrell.

As Dr. R. V. Sawin was returning to his home in Brinfield Monday evening his horse became frightened at a locomotive near the junction of Park street and the carpet mill road, and ran, smashing the carriage but fortunately hurting no one. Dr. and Mrs. Sawin remained in Palmer over night, returning to their home Tuesday.

The Junior Christian Endeavor society of the Congregational church will give an entertainment in the vestry of the church next Monday afternoon at 4. It will be of the Thanksgiving order, and the admission fee will be a pound package of something,—food, clothing, fuel,—anything useful. At Thanksgiving time these packages will be distributed by the members of the society among the poor of the place.

The Mt. Bunyan Granite Co. has commenced the survey for the railroad which it may possibly build from its quarries on the mountain above the state primary school to the Boston and Albany tracks. The proposed route is along the side hill above the "quarry" road to Monson, reaching the Boston and Albany tracks west of the bridge over the Quaboag river, thus doing away with the necessity of bridging the river.

There is some talk that the will of the late Michael Dwyer of Palmer will be contested by his sister in Hartford. Mr. Dwyer was an uncle of Mrs. M. J. Dillon of this place, with whom he had lived for many years before his death. He was well-to-do, and after providing for his burial expenses and the erection of a monument in the cemetery, the bulk of the property remaining, supposed to be about $8000 in cash, was left by will to Mrs. Dillon.

In the suit brought by George N. Stone to recover damages from the town for land taken at Tenneyville in the building of the bridge over the Boston and Albany tracks for the highway, the jury awarded him $225, with interest, amounting to $255.37. Similar cases of Mrs. Elvira M. Stone and T. J. Chalk were settled for $75 each, and one of W. A. Breckenridge for $250. In these cases the town only pays 10 per cent, the railroad paying 65 per cent and the state 25 per cent.

The New London Northern road offers a special rate for travelers during Thanksgiving time, the special tickets being good to go on November 28th or 29th, and good returning from November 30th until December 3d, inclusive. For 33 miles and distances under, the rate will be two cents a mile each way, with a maximum rate of $1 and a minimum of 15 cents; for distances over 33 miles the price of a round-trip ticket will be only fare one way. No other road in the country gives such low rates as these at such times.

The Woman's Relief Corps celebrated its eighth anniversary Monday afternoon and evening. In the afternoon about 50 guests from the corps in the surrounding towns gathered, and after the work of the order had been gone through with the visitors were treated to an entertainment, consisting of literary and musical selections and a farce. Supper was then served, and in the evening a number of the post members dropped in, and there were remarks by Mrs. Clare H. Burleigh of Athol, who is the department president, and others.

There was a lrrge attendance at the meeting of the Quaboag Literary Circle last Friday evening. H. C. Strong read a paper entitled "The Influence of the West upon the National Life," and Miss Phœbe Hastings read selections from Will Carleton's poems. After the reading of the Round Table the annual election of officers resulted in the choice of these: President, Rev. H. F. Moulton; vice president, O. P. Allen; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. H. C. Strong; directors, Rev. F. E. Jenkins, H. C. Strong, O. P. Allen, Rev. H. F. Moulton and Mrs. W. A. Lawson.

The second of the series of excursion trains to the neighboring villages, run under the auspices of the merchants of this place, was run last Saturday night to Three Rivers and Monson, and was well patronized, about 65 persons going on it to Monson, and many others to Three Rivers. The next train will be to-morrow evening to Thorndike, stopping at the Town House crossing to accommodate Three Rivers people. Like the previous trains, it will be free to all who wish to ride; all that is required is that intending passengers get on the train; no tickets needed.

Winter seemed to have come in good earnest Monday afternoon. About 4 in the afternoon the wind began to blow hard from the west, and was decidedly raw, almost blizzardy. The signal service announced a drop of 20° in the temperature before Tuesday morning, and the mud in the streets froze rapidly. It was a disagreeable night to be out of doors, and those who had no business away from home were glad to keep near the fire. Tuesday morning was decidedly cold, the mercury having got down to 10°, but toward the latter part of the day the temperature moderated, and rain fell all day Wednesday.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock of the fire department had occasion to open one of the hydrants last Friday afternoon, and found the water so muddy that he was led to examine others, which gave the same result, the mixture which came from one being nothing but thin mud. This of course is collected at the bottom of the pipes and is not disturbed by the ordinary flowage through them for domestic purposes, but when a hydrant is open for fire or any other purpose the heavy drain on the pipe stirs up the sediment at the bottom. If the steamer were to be connected with such a hydrant before it had been allowed to run clear the mud would soon cause serious trouble in the boiler, and grind out the valves in the pumps. To be sure, the water could be let run until the pipes cleared out, but moments are valuable in time of fire, and the pipes should be kept clean. This is the duty of the Palmer Water Company, which owns the pipes, and should have been attended to long ago. The manager has been seen in regard to the matter, and promises that the pipes shall be flushed out soon, the work being commenced to-day. Next week the water company will commence the making of some long-needed repairs at the lower reservoir, from which the water is taken directly into the pipes. Two years ago the water got so low that the ice froze about the strainer at the entrance to the pipe, and broke it off. In the spring the work of repairing was put off until the water got so low that it was considered unsafe to run the risk of drawing off the reservoir and trusting to the one above for fear of a water famine. The work was delayed on one pretext and another and has never been done. Now the company proposes to draw off the water and clean out the reservoir thoroughly, put in a new strainer and make other improvements.

State Primary School Notes.

M. J. Dillon of Palmer has completed plastering the new cow stable.

McReary of Springfield has finished slating the new barn, 130 squares being required.

S. C. Wrightington, superintendent of indoor poor, paid a visit to the school yesterday.

Rev. H. F. Moulton of Palmer gave an object lesson on "How Habits are Formed," to the children last Sunday.

The number of boys at the school now is 98, the smallest since it opened. The system of boarding the children out in families is fast taking the place of the need of an institution of this kind. Families who take a child under 10 years old to board are paid by the state for the child's board, but children over ten are placed out on farms where they are to work for their board and clothes, and at the age of eighteen are to receive $50 and a suit of clothes. When a boy is sent out he is supplied with two suits of clothes.

Next Sunday at the Churches.

District Court.

Michael J. Rock of North Wilbraham, who has been before the court several times, was sent to the house of correction Monday for three months for having been drunk. He appealed, and in default of bonds was committed. He has since signified a desire to withdraw the appeal and serve out the sentence imposed.

There were five victims Monday morning. Maxim Poro of Palmer and Joseph Hall of Monson, whose cases were continued until the 15th of December; Thomas J. Mills of Monson, who was fined $5 but appealed; Thomas Conley of Wilbraham, who paid $10; Martin D. Hess of Palmer, who will report to the court next Monday; all for drunkenness.

Tuesday morning William Fenton of Ellington, Ct., paid $5 for having been intoxicated—very much so—the night before. When found about 7 o'clock he was so drunk he did not know which way the state of Connecticut was after being loaded into his buckboard on Main street, and started for Springfield to find it. When finally headed right by the bystanders he was unable to sit up on the seat, and while the horse was being led toward the lockup Fenton fell out on the newly-frozen ground, cutting his face badly and requiring the services of a physician to make him presentable in court the next morning. And still he claimed he wasn't inebriated. He was cold when he came to Palmer and took a glass of gin to thaw out his blood; that tasted so good that he took another,—but he wasn't drunk, not at all.

This morning Patrick C. Mahoney, from the interior of New York state, yielded up $5 for having been drunk. Homer Rochey of Montreal, for vagrancy was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for one year, with a view towards curing him of his migratory habits and indiligent disposition.

RESOLUTIONS upon the death of Harlow Chapin, Past Commander of Marcus Keep Post, No. 155, G. A. R.

The Supreme Commander has called our comrade to join the great multitude across the river. It is not for mortals to fully comprehend the plans of the Creator. In submission we bow and say "He doeth all things well." At this time, realizing our loss, it is well to bear testimony to the many virtues of our brother; it is therefore

Resolved: That by the death of our comrade Marcus Keep Post No. 155 has lost one of its most valued members. As commander he was fair and impartial, and had the respect and confidence of his associates; as a comrade of the Grand Army he was enthusiastic and entered heartily into all its work, believing fully in its three fundamental principles of Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty; because of ability and willingness he was often detailed for special service, and those duties were always performed with credit to himself and honor to the post of which he was a member. In our future work we will honor his memory by emulating his virtues, thus preparing ourselves to obey the summons which is for all, "be ye also ready."

Resolved: That the sympathy of this post be extended to the family of our brother, and a copy of these resolutions be sent to them, and that this testimonial be placed upon the records of our post.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. November 17, A. D. 1894. By virtue of an execution, which issued on a judgment recorded in the District Court of Eastern Hampden at Palmer, in said county, on the twentieth day of October A. D. 1894, in favor of George A. Bills of Palmer, in said county of Hampden, and against George M. Shaw of Brimfield, in the county aforesaid, I have this day taken all the right, title and interest which the said George M. Shaw had on the twenty-sixth day of January A. D. 1892, the day when the same was attached on mesne process in this action in and to the following described real estate, situate in Brimfield aforesaid, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

A lot of land and buildings thereon, beginning at an ash tree and running south twenty-five degrees west six rods and twenty-one links, thence south thirty-four degrees west six rods, thence east nine degrees south ten rods and twelve links, thence north twelve rods and ten links to the road, thence to the place of beginning, containing ninety-two rods of land, being the same premises described in a deed thereof recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, book 136, page 198.

The interest of the within named defendant in and to the above described real estate was acquired by inheritance from Abner Shaw of Brimfield, in said county.

And on Saturday, the twenty-second day of December A. D. 1894, in front of the Court House in Palmer, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, I shall offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, said right, title and interest in and to the above described real estate, to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

ORRILUS W. STUDLEY, 3-348 Deputy Sheriff.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Michael Dwyer, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased,

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, has been presented to said court, for probate, by William W. Leach of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named.

You are hereby cited to appear at a probate court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the fifth day of December, A. D. 1894, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be granted.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once in each week, for three successive weeks, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published in said Palmer, the last publication to be one day at least before said court, and by mailing postpaid or delivering a copy of this citation to all known persons interested in said estate, seven days, at least, before said court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fifteenth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four.

The Center schools flung to the breeze last Friday afternoon at 3.30 their new flag. It was through the earnest work of Masters Charlie Pierce and Frank Converse that the flag was purchased. Exercises were held in front of the school house consisting of speaking, and that old familiar but never-worn-out song, "America", was sung by the children. James Noyes presented the schools with the pole.

The first meeting of this season of the West Brookfield Farmer's Club was held at the home of Edward Brown Wednesday. Owing to the rain not many were present. The subject for discussion was, "What are the lessons which the farmer should learn from the experiences of the last season, and could the failure in crops be avoided by more intelligent cultivation?" the question to be opened by O. S. Parker of this town; essayist, Miss Lucy Brown. This is considered the largest club in the state, having a male membership of 160.

The committee of seven, Newton S. Hubbard, William S. Janes, Thomas Morgan, Charles S. Tarbell, Porter A. Parker, Frank Newton and Orus S. Parker, met Monday morning in the Converse block to discuss the subject of bringing water to the center of the village, for the purpose of watering animals and to add beauty to the town. A purse of $2800 is to be given for a fountain. When a town is given such a purse as that, each individual ought to turn out to town meeting and vote to have it erected. It not only adds beauty to a town, but helps each individual as well.

WARE.

W. F. Godfrey, the marble cutter, was quite badly injured last Sunday. While getting into a buggy the horse started, and he fell on the wheel.

Charles Louis Safford, organist, is the same who was here last winter. Those who wish to hear him again, and we believe there are many, will be pleased to know he will preside at the organ recital in the Congregational church next Tuesday evening.

There is to be a grand organ recital at the Congregational church next Tuesday evening by Charles Louis Safford, organist, assisted by William A. Anderson, baritone, and Wulf Fries, violoncellist. The proceedings will be for the benefit of the Sunday school.

Harry Pierce was given a surprise party last Tuesday evening, it being his 21st birthday. There were about 40 present, who left him an elegant easy chair, the presentation being made by J. E. McManus. Singing, dancing and games made the evening an enjoyable one.

The stock of liquor seized as the property of Frank Chabot of Morse avenue, was two half barrels of ale, one keg of lager, 60 bottles of lager, 5 gallons of whisky, 3 quarts of gin, and some whisky in a bottle. It was declared in the district court last Friday as forfeited to the state.

Mr. and Mrs. James M. Maloney, on their return from their wedding trip Saturday night, were given a grand reception by the firemen, Mr. Maloney being clerk of the department. They were given a handsome oak chamber set valued at $40, and a social dance was held at Firemen's hall.

There will be a union Thanksgiving service in the town hall on Thanksgiving morning at 10.30. The pastors of the several churches will take part in the service, and the singing will be under the direction of Mr. H. B. Anderson and will be by the combined choirs of the churches taking part in the service. Everyone is welcome to be present.

The fire department was called out just before one o'clock this morning by the burning of two car loads of cotton in the freight yard of the Central road. The fire was discovered by the night operator at the station, who says both cars were on fire at once, thus leading to the supposition that they were both set on fire. The loss falls on the railroad company, and will be about $2500.

Arrangements have been made for a series of addresses to the members of the high school. Henry K. Hyde gave an entertaining address on the "Sandwich Islands" Friday afternoon. Rev. V. E. Southworth will speak December 7 on "Culture," and later F. D. Gilmore will give an address on "Banking." F. M. Sibley, the newly-elected representative, will speak on the "General Court;" Rev. E. J. V. Huiginn, "The people and the government;" George D. Storrs will have for his subject, "Athletics." Rev. A. M. Osgood, H. M. Coney and others are also expected to give addresses.

A beautiful little booklet of poems entitled "Golden Heads," by Hetty Hearthstone, will be issued from the office of C. W. Eddy in a few days. The dedication is to "To my much loved grandchild, whose childhood days lent often the buttercup's hue to an otherwise somber life." The poems are tender, loving tributes to child life, and are sure to please the old or the young. Grandparents whose "Golden Heads" have gone out from the home nest will have pleasant memories awakened by reading these poems. It is handsomely gotten up for the holidays with hand-painted covers of little Golden Heads among the daisies and clover.

Earl B. Francis of Monson is canvassing the town for a heat deflector. The most positive testimonials are shown to prove that it is all that is claimed for it, saving fuel in a wonderful manner. The W. N. Flynt Granite Company of Monson claims that it saves a ton of coal per week on each of their five hoisting engines; Rev. F. S. Hatch, who is well known here, says: "It is a remarkable invention. I note it saves fuel, radiates evener heat and secures a nearly perfect combustion of the coal used. I am fully satisfied that it accomplishes for me all you claim for it." It can be put on any stove, furnace or boiler.

Rev. James Boyle, rector of All Saints' church, preached in the new church for the first time Sunday morning to a large congregation. He announced that the church in future would be open each day till 8 p. m. for devotional services, that all marriages in the church must be before or after the 8 a. m. daily mass, that no one will be allowed a sitting in the pews on the right and left of the middle aisle at first mass Sunday mornings except Sunday school children and members of the temperance society, and the members must wear a badge. In future visitors from out of town or those who are not members of that church will have free sittings at any of the services.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

It Hits the People and is Free.

Every ailing and suffering person who is wise will instantly accept this generous offer. Coming from the very highest authority, as it does, gives it the greatest weight, and people know when they see a good thing like this. Everybody knows of Dr. Greene, the most succe sful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. His successful system of treating patients through letter correspondence is attracting great attention. All you have got to do is this: Write him a letter about your complaint, telling him how you feel, and he will answer it, giving a thorough explanation of your case and telling the surest way to get well.

He gives most careful and explicit attention to every letter, and explains your case so comprehensively, that you understand immediately exactly what ails you, and just what to do for yourself. And for all this he makes no charge. He is also the discoverer of that remarkable medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. This splendid offer is being taken advantage of by thousands, and they are getting well. The very best thing you can do, reader, is to write the doctor immediately, it will cost you nothing, and it will probably be the means of making you well and strong. CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

The Art Amateur

probably has never given two more attractive color plates than "The Boot-black," by J. G. Brown, and "The Old Home by the Roadside," by D. F. Hasbrouck, which appear in the November issue. Looking at these highly artistic facsimiles of oil paintings, it is easy to understand why a medal was awarded at the World's Fair to The Art Amateur, and why the Chicago Board of Education lately introduced into the High schools of that city The Art Amateur's color studies as painting models—they have long been so used in the best art schools and academies. But these charming pictures are equally valuable for framing, and, indeed, they are so used in thousands of American homes. This very practical art magazine, however, by no means depends on its color plates alone for its popularity. What most conduces to its extraordinary success is that by giving a profusion of working designs, with easily understood directions for carrying them out, it enables so many young people, of both sexes, to earn a living by painting, carving, designing and illustrating. No person of artistic tastes, who wishes to turn them to profit, can afford to be without this sumptuous periodical. Price, 35 cents. Montague Marks, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

"LOW PRICES FOR HIGH QUALITIES"

IS OUR MOTTO.

What we try to do in getting up our Clothing, is to pick out what intelligent people would want if they knew cloth as we know it.

There are different wants and different tastes. We mean to provide for them.

There are also a worldful of cheaper-looking Clothing that is made to waste money on.

We don't sell that sort. Everything is dependable here.

MEN'S SUITS.

At $8, we have a good assortment of Cassimeres and Fancy Cheviots in D. B and S. B. suits. All sizes, 34 to 44.

At $10 we show an immense line in both Sacks and Cutaways, including a famous Black Cheviot, the name of which we're not allowed to tell. Sizes 34 to 44.

At $12, $13.50 and $15, the lines are larger yet, and include our famous Clay Worsted Dress Suit at $15. We have sold hundreds of them. They lead easily. Sizes 34 to 44.

At $16.50, we've got the best that 's made anywhere. The assortment that we show at these prices is far larger than you'd spend time to look through. Sizes 34 to 44

MEN'S OVERCOATS.

At $7.50 there's stock enough for a fair selection: The best in the lot is a clean, Black Cheviot with silk velvet collar.

These coats would easily sell at $10.

At $10 our great "Home Ruler" comes to the front as being the best in the business. Made from all wool beaver in three colors, Blue, Black and Brown. They are the equal of any $12 coat in this city.

At $12, $13.50 and $15 an assortment of Beavers' Kerseys and few Chinchillas, made and trimmed in the best possible manner. At these prices we show over four hundred Overcoats.

At $18, $20, $25 and $30, the cream of the Overcoat world.

All the leading shapes and cloth and all the newest kinks of the tailor's art.

We want to punctuate right here our Great lines of Men's Winter Ulsters.

We're going to make a reputation for ourselves this winter on Ulsters. It's a bit early to talk them, we know: but when you want one you'll do best with your dollars by consulting our stock.

We start them at $6.50 to $25, with whole counterful at $8, $10, $12, $13.50, $15, $18, $20 and $22.

By all means consult us on Ulsters!

When a Woman Proposes to wash clothes without Pearline, her husband or her employer ought to interfere. She is not only wearing out her own health and strength with useless rubbing and scrubbing, but she is wearing out the clothes with it, too. This rub, rub, rub isn't needed. Put Pearline into the water, and you'll find half the work done by the time you are ready to begin. It's Pearline that loosens the dirt and does the work—not you with your washboard. Just a little rinsing, and it's all over.

First Modern Statesman — "Notice anything crooked at the polls?" Second Ditto —"Not a thing. Every man has voted just as he was paid to do."—Buffalo Courier.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton, Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhœa of long standing in six hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results, and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine, and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles.

For a pain in the side or chest there is nothing so good as a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It affords prompt and permanent relief, and if used in time will often prevent a cold from resulting in pneumonia. This same treatment is a sure cure for lame back.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

The Old Piano in the Front Parlor.

(After Longfellow.)

Somewhat back from the village street
Stands the old-fashioned country seat.
Across its antique portico
Tall poplar trees their shadows throw.
And there, throughout the livelong day
Jemima plays the pi-a-na:
Do, re mi,
Mi, re, do.

In the front parlor, there it stands,
And there Jemima plays her hands
While her papa, beneath his cloak
Mutters and groans. "This is no joke!"
And swears to himself and sighs, alas!
With sorrowful voice to all who pass,
"Do, re, mi,
Mi, re do!"

Through days of death and days of birth
She plays as if she owns the earth.
Through every swift vicissitude
She drums as if it did her good.
And still she sits from morn till night
And plunks away with main and might.
Do, re, mi,
Mi, re, do.

In that mansion used to be
Free-hearted hospitality;
But that was many years before
Jemima monkeyed with the score.
When she began her daily plunk,
Into their graves the neighbors sunk.
Do, re, mi,
Mi, re, do.

To other worlds they've long since fled,
All thankful that they're safely dead.
They stood the racket while alive
Until Jemima rose at five,
And then they laid their burdens down
And one and all they skipped the town.
Do, re, mi,
Mi, re, do.

A ROMANCE OF PRONOUNS.

It was evening, it was moonlight, it was late and it was fair.
I was courting, I was happy, I was brave, for she was there.
She was pretty, she was blushing, she was willing to be wed—
He arrived and he objected. He was papa, so I fled.
I returned. He was repentant. She was coaxing her mamma.
He relented, and I thanked him and forgave him, dear papa!
Then he blessed us. I was happy, while she blushed a rosy red.
He was willing. She was willing. I was willing, We were wed.

CARYL'S BLOCK, ON THE CORNER.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

THE FANCY WORK OF THE SEASON.

Embroidery upon White Linen.— The polished furniture now in use must be protected but not covered, hence the great variety of delicate mats, doilies and covers now for sale. For the polished dining room table there must be a centerpiece, and a doily for each plate, tumbler or dish. The sideboard must have a center doily and side doilies. The polished parlor furniture must also have its dainty covers under vases and other ornaments that might otherwise scratch its mirror-like surface, and the polished chamber set must also be protected. To meet this demand all manner of open embroideries are put upon white linen.

Venetian or Roman Embroidery.— This work is done upon firm white linen. A pattern of suitable design is first stamped upon the linen. The pattern is then run with thread and then it is buttonhole stitched over the thread with linen floss or filo floss, the latter being most favored just at present. After the buttonholing is done such of the linen as does not form a part of the design is carefully cut away, so that the design of flower and leaf appears joined to the center of linen only by embroidered bars. When the needlewoman has attained skill in this kind of embroidery any set pattern may be adapted for this work. This work will be more skillfully manipulated if done in a frame or in hoops.

Ideal or Needle Honiton is another beautiful form of simple needlework. This is called Needle Honiton, to distinguish it from the real Honiton, which is made with bobbins upon pillows. It is made by applying lace braid to linen by buttonhole stitch and then cutting away the linen under the lace braid. This may be made very elaborate as a broad lace border to large and small squares of linen, or it may be done as a simple border about a center otherwise embroidered within. When an elaborate lace pattern is followed, lace stitches are used to connect the lace braids; this implies instruction in needle lace-work, but any one with a fair amount of skill may apply the simpler patterns, and there are sold everywhere stamped doilies with the Honiton braids basted around the edge of the linen; buttonhole the outer and the inner edge, then cut around the scallop and cut the linen from under each medallion of the lace. You see many doilies with the Honiton edge and with the centers embroidered with floral designs done in outline, long and short stitch, and solid work. A delicate and beautiful doily may be bordered with Honiton braid, and have several designs in Honiton scattered over it.

It seems to follow naturally, that circular doilies and cloths be buttonholed and cut or have a Honiton border, and square doilies be hemstitched or fringed or have borders of Venetian embroidery or of Mexican work.

Mexican or drawn work is most exquisite. It is made by drawing out threads and then working lace stitches into the open thus formed. Its simplest form is what is called "hemstitch;" it is developed into the most elaborate designs. It is usually wrought upon fine hand-made linen. It may be used as a border with a hem outside, or with a fringe; it may cover the entire square or appear in set figures. Its successful execution requires careful treatment, great skill and previous instruction. Its delicacy and beauty is unrivaled, and the woman who has had the patience to learn to do this work skillfully has at her command a fine art of great value, and, in my opinion, must have attained a saintlike spirit. Do not be discouraged, however, surely the saints are not all dead, if we may judge by the amount of this beautiful work for sale at the stores. It brings very high prices.

By far the greatest number of doilies are done in embroidery upon linen in outline or semi-solid or solid work with colored silks. The designs for this work may be stamped upon the linen or may be hand etched. Many ladies prefer the hand etching as more graceful than stamping, and ladies who can draw often design and etch their own linen.

I have put off till the last this subject because one is almost confused by the great variety of this work in detail, yet there is a general plan of design and execution which is new this year and which every style of this work follows. You see a few pieces of linen done in the Dresden pattern; I mean with tiny sprays of flowers scattered over the linen having no apparent design in arrangement, but this style no longer obtains to any extent. The general plan of design is a loose flower cluster tied with a bow of ribbon; then the ribbon trails along over the linen and sprays of flowers are dropped at intervals over its length. In some designs a vine trails from the bouquet in and out with the ribbon. On the smaller doilies, like the tumbler and individual butter doilies, the ribbon often does not appear, but instead there is a wreath of flowers and flower buds with a trailing stem connecting them. In all the latest and new patterns this idea prevails; something, vine, ribbon or stem, trails. Plastic effects are affected, and much of the more elaborate embroidery is as highly shaded as the same printed design would be. To produce these effects the designs are drawn in perspective, silks in different shades are used, many different stitches also appear on the same piece of work, and different kinds of silk, as filo and etching silk, or etching and rope silk; as, for instance, on linen lawn filo will be used for flowers and leaves and etching silk for stems and for the ribbon. The ribbon is embroidered in outline, in solid work, or a very pretty and simple device is to outline in etching or backstitch one or both edges of the ribbon and fill between with cat-stitch or herringbone or feather stitch. Herringbone and feather stitch also border the hems of squares or the centers of lace-edged linens, and occasionally the "trail," as I have designated the connecting line in this year's designs; occasionally the "trail" is a vine of herringbone or feather stitch of white or pale green or yellow.

Marvellous Result's.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. Dr. King's New Discovery, for consumption, coughs and colds, each bottle guaranteed—Electric Bitters, the great remedy for liver, stomach and kidneys. Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world, and Dr. King's New Life Pills, which are a perfect pill. All these remedies are guaranteed to do just what is claimed for them, and the dealer whose name is attached herewith will be glad to tell you more of them. Sold at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

WALT WHITMAN'S THANKS.

Thanks in old age—thanks, ere I go,
For health, the midday sun, the impalpable air—for life, mere life;
For precious ever lingering memories (of you, my mother dear—you, father—you, brothers, sisters, friends);
For all my days—not those of peace alone—the days of war the same;
For gentle words, caresses, gifts from foreign lands;
For shelter, wine and meat; for sweet appreciation,
(You distant, dim, unknown—or young or old—countless, unspecified, readers belov'd,
We never met, and ne'er shall meet, and yet our souls embrace, long, close and long);
For beings, groups, love, deeds, words, books; for colors, forms;
For all the brave, strong men—devoted, hardy men—who've forward sprung in freedom's help, all years, all lands;
For braver, stronger, more devoted men—(a special laurel, ere I go, to life's war's chosen ones,
The cannoneers of song and thought—the great artillerists—the foremost leaders, captains of the soul);
As soldiers from an ended war return'd—as traveler out of myriads, to the long procession retrospective,
Thanks—joyful thanks! A soldier's traveler's thanks.

A THANKSGIVING COMPROMISE.

BY LAURA OLIVIA BOOTHE.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

Comparatively speaking, Mr. and Mrs. Bright were a happy couple. They didn't have any too much money, but otherwise there was no reason why they shouldn't be happy. He was an expert accountant, but there were times when he had very little to do. That was why Mrs. Bright moved into a larger house where she could take boarders. At first he objected, but her argument was that Mildred must be educated. She never reproached him for not being able to give them the comforts they needed, but seemed happy that he needed her to help him along.

This state of things had been going on for several years when the serpent in the shape of a theatrical manager entered the

HER HUSBAND TUCKED HER ARM IN HIS.

Brights' paradise. Mr. Bright frequently straightened out the accounts of theatrical companies. He was upon the books of the Gaiety Opera company when the manager suggested that he go with them for a short trip to Chicago. In a week he returned. The manager of the Gaiety company had offered him $200 a month and his expenses to act as its treasurer.

"Do you mean travel around the country with a theatrical company just like any actor?" demanded Mrs. Bright.

"I suppose so," trying to avoid the surprised blue eyes.

"And leave me here alone?"

"But, Gertrude, think of all the money I can send you. Mildred can go away to school, and you needn't work yourself to death keeping boarders."

"You know I am perfectly contented to work. I would rather go down on my knees and scrub all day and keep boarders all my life than have you go away with a theatrical company."

"But, Gertrude, a man doesn't like to have a woman support him. I've never had half a chance before, and I think you unreasonable to expect me to miss this one."

Mrs. Bright didn't believe her husband would go and said little more about it just then. He didn't tell her that he had signed with the company and was to join them when he was sent for. It was on Thanksgiving eve when the telegram came. Then she tried to persuade him that going away meant striking the deathblow to their domestic happiness. What was the fact that she took boarders to losing his companionship, she argued. Finally she broke down and cried. Although he turned a deaf ear to his wife's pleadings, he pitied her. Indeed he was far from cheerful himself.

"Let's send Mildred away to school, and you rent this house furnished. Just as soon as you do you can travel with me," Mr. Bright suggested.

This proposition only slightly appeased her. In the night he wakened to find her sobbing. Taking her in his arms he consoled her by saying: "Don't cry, Gertrude, my darling. I won't go if you feel so cut up about it." But alas for the promises made by men to women in distress—he had quite forgotten it in the morning, and amid the tolling of Thanksgiving bells he went.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Bright had been gone six weeks. Mildred had been sent away to school. The boarders, with little sympathy for Mrs. Bright's apathy, were grumbling and threatening to leave.

At first her husband's letters came regularly and were full of his loneliness, his love and impatience to see her. Then she may have imagined it, but they seemed less solicitous. They certainly were less regular and shorter.

What if her husband were being weaned away from her and their domestic life? She had told him that would be the case, never believing it could be. The thought was agony. It was 8 o'clock. He was at the theater. She had a vague idea that as treasurer he went behind the scenes. Then she remembered having heard that managers and she supposed treasurers invaded the actresses' dressing rooms. There was a tightening at her heart while she wrote him that it was time she saw him. He replied that she should meet him in Chicago in two weeks and remain with him a month.

What a relief she felt! He did want to see her. All regrets were forgotten. Inclosed in his letter was a check for $100 which he told her to spend on herself.

At last the day arrived for her to start. They came from different directions, both arriving in Chicago on the same day. As was prearranged, she went to the station to meet him.

Finally she saw the train, and before she realized it the passengers were pouring out. She strained her eyes for that beloved face. Suppose he wasn't there? Just as she felt a sickening sense of disappointment she saw him.

Even in her gladness she noticed something strange about him, and the people with him were stranger still. Men and women alike wore checked ulsters, with collars turned up to their ears, and satchels thrown over their shoulders. The men were beardless, the women blonded, painted and penciled. She had come prepared for much, but she felt ashamed to be seen with them. After kissing her, her husband tucked her arm in his, and they walked out of the station.

Once alone in their room in the hotel he held out his arms, and, like a tired bird, she flew into them. He kissed her eyes, her hair and her mouth. She laughed and cried alternately. If any thoughts of the company occurred to her, she banished them. Finally she pushed him away from her, explaining, "I want to see if you have changed, George."

"How can a man change in two months?"

"You have—on the outside," speculatively.

He looked conscious. "Oh, you mean my clothes! I suppose they look rather theatrical to you, don't they?"

"Rather." She sighed, but said nothing more, although it was a shock to see him garbed in the flashy attire of the successful comedian.

"After all, what are these things—mere outward trifles," Mrs. Bright said to herself, but there were misgivings.

At 5:30 Mr. Bright suggested they go down to dinner.

"So early?" inquired his wife.

"I must be at the theater by 7," he explained.

She walked to the mirror and began brushing her hair.

"I'll go down to the dining room ahead of you, Gertie, and order," remarked Mr. Bright.

"But, George, I can't go into a strange dining room alone."

"Oh, pshaw, that's nothing, lots of women do it! I have something to attend to at the office. Just ask the elevator boy to show you to the dining room," and before she could protest he was gone.

It was only a small matter, but three months before he had been one of the most conventional of men. In fact, he had taught her to expect those attentions which women love but rarely get from their husbands, and now it all seemed changed.

He was almost through his dinner and conversing with a man across the room when she entered the dining room.

The waiter had but served her when her husband, hastily excusing himself, left her alone. She felt slighted. He seemed to have forgotten how to be courteous. At one corner at the same table were the long legged comedian and the yellow haired soprano. She recognized the soprano as the original of a picture she had found among her husband's things. On it was written, "To George Bright, with thanks for his courtesy, from Adele Rathborne." She wondered what the courtesy could be.

She tried to be interested in her dinner, but somehow she wasn't hungry. As she walked out of the dining room she felt conscious of several pairs of curious eyes, and with a breath of relief she stepped into the elevator. She met her husband coming out of their room. He had gone up stairs to change his clothes, he said.

"Won't you come over to the theater?" he asked.

"I am too tired. I will unpack my trunk, take a bath and read until you come back. Will it be long?" wistfully.

"Not very. Still I don't know; hardly before 11. Order a hot bird and a cold bottle for 11 sharp."

"A cold bottle and a hot bird! What for?"

"Why, to eat, you goose!"

Her husband would not be back for three hours at least, and she would be thoroughly comfortable, she thought. After slipping on a fluffy white bath gown she began taking down her hair. It was beautiful hair, as black as a raven's wing and as soft and fine as satin. As she laid the pins on the dressing table her face was a study. How strange her husband should go away and leave her! She tried to reason out what was different about him besides his clothes. All she could decide then was that she was disappointed.

Exactly at 11 she rang for a bellboy. "Bring up a hot bottle and a cold bird," she ordered.

"Mam?" exclaimed the boy.

"Oh, I mean a cold bottle and a hot bird," she corrected wearily.

When he returned with the supper, she sat down to wait. "He will be here any minute; he never kept me waiting before," she thought. A half hour passed. Twelve o'clock struck, and he hadn't come. The bird was cold and the bottle warm. Stepping out into the hall, she looked over the balustrade. A man was putting out the lights. "What could it mean?" she demanded of herself. A boy went toward her door with a note. Hastily tearing it open, she read:

MY DEAR GIRL—Am detained at the theater on important business. Go to bed. I will not be in before 2. GEORGE.

"There is no answer"—to the boy. "How dare he?"—aloud as the door closed. "It is brutal, insulting, cruel! The first time he has seen me in two months! Oh, it is too much!" And with a gesture of supreme misery she flung herself on the bed. Two hours later, when her husband came in, she had not changed her position.

SHE THREW HERSELF, HAT, JACKET AND ALL ON THE BED.

"Poor little girl! Still waiting!" he said, with concern. "Why didn't you eat the supper? You haven't touched a thing."

She made no answer, and he began to explain. With a gesture of contempt she interrupted him, "I do not wish to hear any of your excuses."

He was genuinely sorry, but he felt offended that his attempts at explanation should be treated as excuses. Thinking silence the best way to bring her to good humor, he ignored her and went to bed.

There were great, wide window seats in the room. After putting out the lights she crawled up in one of these. The fire went out, and she was conscious of being cold. The lights twinkled in the street below. A snore from the bed told her that her husband was asleep. She began to cry, at first silently, but as she thought of her husband's indifference she sobbed louder. She was really deriving a miserable sort of pleasure out of her discomfort when an especially loud sob wakened the sleeper. Jumping from the bed, he called out, "Gertrude, my poor darling, where are you?"

Another sob from the window, and she was in his arms. It was 4 o'clock, and she was utterly miserable and tired of being uncomfortable. She let him lead her to bed and in a few moments was asleep, and all her troubles forgotten.

The next morning Mrs. Bright wakened with a start. The sun was shining in the room. Slipping her hand under her pillow, she drew out her watch. It was 10 o'clock. Springing from the bed, she began to dress, when her husband asked lazily, "What on earth are you getting up for already, Gertrude?"

She ignored the previous night and replied calmly: "Already! It is 10 o'clock!"

"Oh, people connected with the profession never get up before 11 at least," turning over for another nap.

Finally, when he did not get up, she remarked, "George, I want my breakfast."

This appeal to his consideration brought out the man in him. "Of course you do, dear," he answered. "Ring the bell for the boy."

"Bring up breakfast for two and all the morning papers," Mr. Bright ordered when the boy arrived.

"What do you want with all the morning papers?" demanded his wife. "Isn't one enough?"

"Ordinarily it is, my dear, but I read them all so I won't miss any notices about the company."

"Oh!" observed Mrs. Bright tersely.

The tolling of church bells reminded her it was Sunday. "I don't suppose you ever go to church now?" she observed.

"Not very often."

After breakfast she gathered up the papers.

"Gertrude, would you like to do something for me while I am out?" Mr. Bright asked. Mrs. Bright expected to be told of missing buttons or torn buttonholes. "Hunt through those papers," he continued, "and cut out everything you find about the Gaiety company. You will find a scrapbook in my trunk to paste them in."

"Very well," she replied quietly.

When he had gone, she sat down on the floor. She scanned column after column. Then she cut and pasted.

"Nice, elevating way to spend Sunday morning," she thought.

In the afternoon they went to drive. They returned early because of the theater. During dinner he asked her if she would come to the performance.

"It is Sunday," she merely observed. "What time do you want that bottle and bird tonight?" Her face was suspiciously amiable.

He kissed her contritely as he answered. "Eleven on the minute, and it shan't wait!"

After he had gone she put on her things and went to church.

The next day and every day was much like the first. In the morning Mrs. Bright cut and pasted, in the afternoon she idled, and at night she went to the performance. The trivial things she did to kill time would be difficult to tell. She never wrote so many letters before. Then she would telegraph to Mildred and her sister, who had charge of the boarding house. She developed a fondness for Turkish baths, manicured her nails every day and curled her hair for the first time. She had tried to mend her husband's clothes, but it was not the atmosphere for practical employment. She tried to read, but gave it up. When she had nothing else to do, she bought things she didn't want.

Finally the month drew to a close. Mr. Bright was to leave Chicago the next Sunday morning, and Mrs. Bright was to start east the same afternoon. When Mrs. Bright saw the last of the train that bore away her husband and his ulstered companions, she was sick at heart. She stared after the train five minutes after it was out of sight. Then she walked back to the hotel. There was a sense of great loneliness as, with a sob, she threw herself, hat, jacket and all, on the bed.

* * * * * * *

The day after her arrival home Mrs Bright put this advertisement in The Herald:

"Wanted—To sell out immediately for cash a first class boarding house, fully furnished, on Thirty-eighth street, near Fifth avenue; full of boarders. Apply to G. B., Herald office."

Within a week she notified the boarders she had sold out. She confided her plans to no one when she moved away with enough furniture to furnish an apartment.

Mrs. Bright now took up an unusual mode of life. People passing her doors heard her declaiming. She went every day to a school of dramatic instruction. It soon became known that the pretty young woman with big blue eyes and black hair in the top apartment was studying for the stage.

A new play was to be put on at one of the theaters when an actress who was to play an important part was taken ill. The manager was distracted. In his perplexity he applied to a dramatic school for a substitute. There was a matinee by the pupils that afternoon, and he went in. A young woman on the stage attracted his attention. Turning to the instructor, he asked if she were a professional or a pupil.

"I AM GOING TO THE THEATER NOW."

"A pupil and one of the best in the school," the instructor replied.

The manager adjusted his glasses, looking at the young woman more critically. "By Jove, what a voice she's got! She can act, too the first amateur I ever saw who could."

* * * * * * *

The morning after the matinee Mrs. Bright was sitting in her drawing room staring out over the house tops. She looked displeased. A letter lay open on her lap. "He is getting on very well without me," she thought sadly as she read it again.

There was a ring, and the servant announced a gentleman whom Mrs. Bright recognized as a theatrical manager. Wondering the object of his visit, she offered him a chair. Speedily he told her of his presence at the matinee the day before. "I have come to offer you a position in my company if we can come to satisfactory terms and if you care to accept," he said.

She was bewildered. "It is so sudden," she stammered.

"Take until tomorrow to think it over," he suggested.

"That is not necessary. I accept now."

* * * * * * *

Mrs. Bright had become an actress. Her success from the first night was assured, and the manager congratulated himself upon this latest acquisition to his company. She felt that now the time had come to tell her husband what she had done.

"You did not want me to keep boarders, so I have sold out the boarding house," she wrote. "I did this some time ago and took a small apartment. I would have been very unhappy and lonely without you, only I have been studying very hard. You will no doubt be amazed to learn that I have been studying for the stage, but more amazed to learn that for the past month I have been a member of ——'s company.

"I am sure you will be delighted to have us members of the same profession. After all, husband and wife must have the same interests to be happy. I don't wonder you like it. I am quite infatuated with it myself. Always your devoted Gertrude.

"P. S.—I am off to the theater now, so pardon brevity. G."

Mr. Bright received this letter one morning on his arrival at the theater.

That afternoon found him in a sleeper bound east; the next afternoon in his wife's apartment. She was glad to see him, but deaf to his entreaties to give up what he termed her disgraceful project.

"Think of your child, madam!" he finally roared.

"She is your child as well as mine, sir. Certainly if the theatrical profession is good enough for her father it is quite good enough for her mother."

They ate their dinner in silence. She was absorbed in reading an evening paper and he in watching her. She was dressed in a "chic" and becoming style, and he thought he had never seen her so charming before. "At least she was his wife," with a glad feeling of possession. A spasm contracted his heart. "On the stage what temptations would beset her!" With a fierce resolve he thought, "I must get her off at any price."

"I am going to the theater now," she remarked.

"It is rather early for you to go."

"I suppose you want to see the performance, to say nothing of seeing me act." There was a twinkle in her eye and a touch of compassion, for she divined what he felt.

"I will go with you," he answered grumpily.

He was obliged to leave her at the stage door. It was three-quarters of an hour before the performance began, and he started for a walk.

In no pleasant frame of mind he entered the theater and glared at the programme as he read his wife's name.

The orchestra stopped, and the curtain went up. It was a charming play, beautifully mounted and well acted. The opening act took place in a garden scene. Mrs. Bright entered dressed in a costume of white and a large white hat. She said little, but was perfectly at ease on the stage. The more Mr. Bright realized this the more apprehensive he became.

The play progressed. The next scene was a ballroom. In it Mrs. Bright was simply radiant. She had been almost prudish in the old days, but now her beautiful shoulders were exposed to an extent which her husband denounced as vulgarly indecent. A betrothal between the handsome leading man and Mrs. Bright was sealed with a kiss.

This was too much. Heartsick, he looked at his wife in the arms of the leading man, shamelessly nestling her head on his shoulder with a movement he had seen her make a thousand times.

He rushed out of the theater and back to the stage door, where he awaited the appearance of Mrs. Bright.

Several days passed, and Mr. Bright made no move to return to the Gaiety company. At the end of a week he received a telegram from the manager of the company stating that unless he returned at once they must get some one else.

That decided him, and with the telegram in his hand he confronted his wife. "Gertrude, do you intend to keep this up?" he demanded roughly.

"Keep what up?"

"Keep on acting?"

"Why shouldn't I?"

"Because I don't want you to—because it is driving me mad to think of my wife on the stage. Where is your sweet domestic character? You used to love your home. Oh, Gertrude, it is impossible for me to consent! I cannot, and I will not!"

"Theatrical seasons end about the same time. I shall always try to be home when you are."

"It isn't that. It is death to our domestic happiness. I know it, and"—

"That is what I always told you. What sort of domestic happiness did we have before I went on the stage? Ah, no, George, there is but one thing for us to do—either we must both have nothing to do with the stage, or else we both must belong to it."

"Read that," thrusting the telegram in her hands.

"How funny!" she muttered dreamily.

"What's funny?"

"Why, tonight is Thanksgiving eve, and it is just a year since you received that first telegram. I suppose you will go tomorrow, too!" looking at him earnestly.

"If I send them word to get some one else, will you give it up?" eagerly.

"Well, I rather like the life now, there is so much excitement."

"Oh, Gertrude, don't torture me!"

"When will you give it up?" she persisted.

"At once."

With the identical gesture she had made with the leading man, she buried her face on his shoulder.

"Then is it a bargain, sweetheart?" he asked anxiously.

"No, George, not a bargain, but a Thanksgiving compromise. I agree to give up acting just as long as you give up managing, but"—

There was no but, for he closed her mouth with a kiss.

THANKSGIVING REVERIES.

Here we are again at the old farm homestead in the Wabash valley and a few—alas, how few!—representatives of the now widely scattered family are seated at the long table in the old "living room," which is the dining room on the western farm. But the dinner is a composite affair. It shows that the old neighborhood is in a transition state between the conventional Thanksgiving dinner of the east and the "farmer's Sunday dinner" of the olden time.

Turkey? Well, that's as it happens. It is not indispensable. Chicken pie? Most assuredly. The grandchildren would consider themselves swindled if they dined at the old farmhouse and did not get chicken pie. And the "wishbones" must be kept whole at any cost. Boiled ham sliced cold is a sort of standby. Celery? Well, that's an eastern innovation, so to speak, and outside of the towns and cities it is not common; but, of course, "our folks have it." Pumpkin pie? Generally. Mince pie? Most assuredly. There wouldn't be real Thanksgiving without it. Then fruit and cheese. Homemade cider to start on, and at the close coffee, "made very strong and weakened down with cream and sugar." After that unrestrained fun for the children, cob pipes for the older men, cigars for the younger and smiles for everybody. Such is our Thanksgiving in these days in western Indiana.

The nights are deliciously crisp and cool and just long enough for a fellow to get all the sleep he wants. There are no gnats or mosquitoes or buzzing flies. In the deepest woods there is no danger of treading unawares upon a snake, the blue lizards have gone into winter quarters, the hornets no longer buzz from the big gray ball in the old apple tree, and the pesky yellow jackets are not in it.

As Good as New.

"Where's the head of this establishment?" demanded a wrathy woman as she walked into the office of a down town trunk store.

"Here," piped a feeble voice, and a little man retreated behind a desk and looked meekly over the top.

"I sent you a trunk, sir, to be repaired."

"What name, please?" inquired the trunk man.

"Smith, sir, plain Smith, and I don't want it spelled with an 'e' or a 'y,' thank you."

"Yes'm, and the item is here on the ledger: 'Trunk relined, outside varnished and repaired,' sent home good as new."

"That's it, and I've a great mind to sue you for damages."

"To the trunk?"

"No, sir, to my feelings. Here I've traveled over the whole globe and had labels in 17 different languages, and as many more colors, all over that trunk, and you soaked them all off and replaced them with a coat of your miserable varnish. Oh, if I could just get my hands on you, I'd varnish"—

But the trunk man shrieked, "Fire, murder, thieves!" and in the melee the wrathful woman decamped, but never again will a trunk be made over to look "as good as new" in that establishment. —Detroit Free Press.

Shocking.

It is truly amazing thing, this European indifference to corn. The people eat some such queer things over there that one would think that corn would seem a mighty blessing. In the course of two long journeys over various parts of Europe we have never but once found the cereal, and that was at a hotel almost entirely patronized by Americans and kept by a man who had lived in America in Paris. We were talking of corn to an Englishman this summer. Said he, "And do you really eat it in the States?" "Why, yes." "We only feed it to animals." "Well, then, you treat your animals better than yourselves." He paused for a minute. Then, "Tell me," said he, "in what way do you eat it?" "On the ear." "The ear! Oh, fancy! How strange!" And he looked quite shocked.—Rochester Post-Express.

A MACHINE NO USE.

Better to Keep a Rifle Handy While Jim Bolton Lives.

One day, stopping at a house for dinner in the Kentucky mountains, I listened to an agent trying to sell the head of the establishment a sewing machine.

"Now, look here," said the agent, "you ought to do something to help your wife, oughtn't you?"

"She ain't objectin to my style, I reckon," said the mountaineer.

"That's because she's a good, kind, uncomplaining sort of a woman, and it is the very reason why you should do these little things for her."

"But I can't afford it," protested the mountaineer.

"Afford it nothing!" exclaimed the agent. "You could afford to buy that winchester sitting by the door, couldn't you?"

"Yes," he said, laying it across his lap, "but I needed it."

"Not so much as your wife needs a sewing machine."

"More, I reckon."

"Of course that isn't so. How could you? Now, I tell you what I'll do. If you will buy a machine for your wife, I'll take the gun as part pay."

"I reckon not."

"Call your wife out here and ask her what she thinks about it. I'll bet a hat she'll jump at the chance for such an exchange."

The mountaineer smiled and called the "old woman" out. He stated the propositon to her, and the agent began to feel sure of victory.

"If Jim Bolton wasn't livin, we might," she said after a moment's thought.

"What's he got to do with it?" asked the agent in a provoked tone.

"A heap sight. You see," she went on, "my old man an Jim ain't on good terms. That's why he got the winchester. Now, of Jim knowed we only had a sewin machine, it wouldn't be no time till I wuz a widder, an I reckon I'll do my sewin by hand. S'pose you come round after Jim's fixed," and the agent gave it up and agreed to come round after James had been disposed of.—Atlanta Constitution.

Etiquette of Introduction.

In point of precedence in presenting there is none, only the younger woman to the older, and a man to a woman, a professional man always by his title. The woman in her own home should always shake hands when a guest is presented; men should shake each other's hands. The southern fashion of a woman extending her right hand to a man is charming. It is now carried out to some extent in New York.

At a ball the introductions should be distinctly formal. Handshaking is not correct, and here again common sense comes in, for it is most awkward for a woman to place flowers and fan while shaking hands.

No man, when presented to a woman at a dance, should fail in asking for her card. His introduction means a dance.

What is the best form of presenting people?

None is so good as the simplest. "Miss Brown, may I present my dear friend, Mr. Jones?" is all that is most elegant.

At any function less important than a large ball it is always pleasant to add a little note of interest to the presentation, which breaks the ice and leads the way for conversation.

These matters may seem a bit trivial at first, but the omission of them does not lead to pleasurable results.—New York Advertiser.

A Polyglot Beggar.

If when walking on any of the cross streets in the vicinity of Grace church you hear a mumble of jargon at your shoulder, and turning find that it comes from a stout, sodden faced young fellow, you may know that you are in the hands of the polygot beggar. As soon as he finds that he has attracted your attention he ranges alongside and fires a German broadside at you. You shake your head, and he brings a French volley into play. Another shake of the head, and he rakes you with Italian. All these failing, he hauls down his foreign flags and boards you with the question in broken English.

"Are you acquainted well with here?" The pirate is so "mild mannered," and the implied compliment of your speaking strange tongues is so pleasant, that you answer him smoothly, and then, holding you with his eye, of the ancient mariner pattern, he sheers off to the edge of the sidewalk, with you in tow, or else warps you into the snug haven of a doorway and starts to spin his yarn of the storms and shoals of the great city.

The plunder is generally a nickel or a dime, but it is a question if the entertainment in the fine art of mendicancy is not worth the money.—New York Sun.

An Economical Steam Engine.

A few years ago an old beam engine, built by James Watt, which had been doing regular daily work for 102 years, was taken down and replaced by a modern engine. The engine was originally a 35 horsepower engine and was erected in 1785. In 1795 some alterations were made to enable it to work to 70 horsepower. It had a 24 inch cylinder, a 6 foot stroke and sun and planet motion. It worked at 22½ revolutions, or 270 feet of piston speed, per minute. In 1875 it was tested by Mr. M. Longbridge, when, with a steam pressure of five pounds per square inch, it indicated 48.72 horsepower, with an expenditure of coal of 4.59 pounds per indicated horsepower per hour. Only the best modern engines with the same condition of loading would work with two pounds of coal per indicated horsepower per hour. One is in doubt whether to be surprised that, after a century of endeavor to improve the economy of steam engine working, the progress is so small, or to be proud that so much has been achieved.—Professor W. C. Unwin in Cassier's Magazine.

—Truth.

Quite Singular.

They were standing on a street corner waiting for a car. She was American; he was English. She delighted in proclaiming the glories of this new world, but he only elevated his beastly nose and answered every remark with that irritating phrase, "In the old country," etc.

While they were waiting a pair of bicyclers a man and a woman, wheeled by. The woman was dressed decidedly "up to date."

"Aw," the Englishman remarked. "Knickerbockers!"

The girl looked up in surprise. "Do you mean the woman in bloomers?"

"Yes, but in the old country, yo know, we call 'em knickerbockers."

Miss America hardly knew how to answer his know it all manner. She felt it would be rude to change the conversation too abruptly, so she simply said, "By the way, do you call 'a pair of knickerbockers' singular or plural?"

The Englishman glanced after the retreating bicyclers. "Plural," he said, "as applied to men, but in the case of women singular."—Boston Budget.

Two Rats.

A London journal relates a rat story that is worth repeating. It says a gentleman, on coming home from India on a sailing ship, while in the tropics was one day bathing his hands and arms in a basin full of cool water placed on top of a sea chest. Suddenly a large rat jumped on the chest beside him and looked up in his face; then, placing its fore feet on the edge of the basin, drank long and deep. Although usually "rough on rats," the writer says "he had not the heart to hurt that one, for—to make use of a nautical term—'his coppers were hot." An acquaintance of mine, a truthful man, told me in Melbourne some years ago that one evening, while sitting on his veranda, with his old tom cat (nearly blind) ch beside him, a large rat came from under the veranda, and going straight up to the cat, first with one paw and then the other, soundly smacked his face, then slowly retired once more beneath the veranda."—Boston Herald.

Something She Could Paint.

Mme. d'Albertin, one of the lesser painters of France, was as conceited about her artistic ability as she was notorious for her excessive use of cosmetics. On one occasion a certain count who held her in much disesteem lost a bet to her. "And what will madame choose?" he asked, with mock courtesy.

"Something in my art," she simpered, "something I can paint."

"Very well, madame," he replied, bowing himself out. A day later madame received a package from the count, which upon being opened revealed a life size drawing of her own face in outline.—Argonaut.

Other United States Than Ours.

There is of course but one United States in our estimation, but as a matter of fact the designating title which we are in the habit of assigning to our own country alone is borne by four other nationalities.

They are the United States of Mexico, which came into official being in 1824; the United States of Colombia, which succeeded New Granada in 1861; the United States of Venezuela, which superseded plain Venezuela in 1864, and the United States of Brazil, which were established in 1889.—New York Herald.

A Chance Lost.

Flo—Mrs. Parkslope is the maddest woman in Brooklyn.

Mabel—What's the trouble?

Flo—Her husband won $800 on the races the other day and gave her her choice of a diamond pin or a sealskin sack. She took a week to decide which she wanted most, and while she was thinking he went to the track again and lost every cent he had.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Chaperon Photograph.

Niece—Auntie, dear, Mr. Maler, the artist, has asked me for my photo. He wants to make use of it for his last picture. Ought I to send it him?

Aunt—Yes, you can do so, but be sure to inclose with it a photo of your mother or some elderly lady. It would be highly improper to send your photo by itself!—Deutsche Warte.

He Helped Some.

"Yes, we preserved a lot of fruit this summer," said Mr. Wickwire to the visitor.

"We?" said Mrs. Wickwire in surprise. "I did every bit of the work myself."

"Yes, you cooked and canned the fruit, my dear, but you must not forget that I had to put up the sugar."—Indianapolis Journal.

The Danger.

"Why is it," queried the cholera microbe, "that I am being bothered by bacteriologists while you escape them entirely?"

"If they monkey with me," rejoined the bronchitis bacillus significantly, "they are likely to get it in the neck."—Atlanta Constitution.

SAVED BY A GALE.

A THANKSGIVING STORY BY M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

On the night of Nov. 22, 1878, the bank of Davids & Davids at Cartersville was robbed of bonds, cash and notes of the face value of $200,000. It was a private bank in a town of 4,000 people, but the town was the center of a rich agricultural community. Nearly every farmer had money in bank or invested in bonds, and the bankers were trustees or administrators for several estates. They were brothers and both well off, and so it came about that their vaults held rich pickings for robbers.

On the morning of Nov. 23 a horse which had been rendered helpless by hard riding was found in the streets of Charlotte, a village 28 miles west of Cartersville. About midafternoon an officer who had been tracing the bank robber appeared in Charlotte and identified the horse. It was plain that the man had come that way, but it was not so plain which direction he had taken from Charlotte. A score of people turned out and scoured the country, but no trace of him could be found. At midnight, with most of the searchers camped on the highways and in the fields, still believing that the robber was hidden in the woods, snow began to fall and the wind to rise, and at daylight a gale was sweeping over the country.

Uncle Jim, as everybody called the old man whose real name was James White, had lived for many years in the outskirts of the village of Charlotte. He was what people call a "fated man." He married in 1860 and had just got settled in a home when the house took fire and burned down, and he lost everything. The next year his wife was killed by accident. Six months later he was badly hurt while at work. When he recovered, he enlisted as a soldier, but had only reached the front when the accidental discharge of a cannon deprived him of his right arm and most of his left hand. He had not been home two months when he was run over by a vehicle and so injured that his left leg had to come off at the knee. With his pension money he bought an acre of ground, with a poor old house and a tumble down barn on it, hoping to make his living by growing fruits and vegetables, and for a time he got along reasonably well.

Then his health gave out, his pension was stopped on the grounds that he had given a wrong date in his application, and on Thanksgiving morning, which dawned bleak and drear enough for the happiest in the village, Uncle Jim had two callers.

One was from a villager who held a mortgage on his real estate and had called to tell him that it must be foreclosed, and the other was a county official who tried to tell him in a kindly way that the matter had been talked over and it had been decided to send him to the poorhouse for the winter.

When the callers had gone their ways, Uncle Jim sat down and ate his meager breakfast and looked out of a back window upon the dreary landscape and reflected and wept. Fate had followed him for years and downed him at last. The climax had now come, and as the old man sat down to face it alone he could find but one way out of it. He would never go to the poorhouse, and he would never hobble around the country as a professional mendicant. The alternative was suicide and he would accept it. While other villagers prepared their Thanksgiving dinner or sat in the churches and listened to the sermons prepared for the day his dead body would be swinging at the end of a rope in the old barn on the back end of his lot. Yes, he would hang himself. He had not entered the barn for a month, but he knew there was a stout rope coiled on a peg out there, and the beams and braces offered better chances to secure the free end than a hook in his humble cabin. After an hour's thought Uncle Jim got up, put on his hat, looked around to bid his home farewell and started for the barn. He knew that a gale was sweeping over the country, but he did not realize its strength until clear of the house. Half way between the kitchen door and the barn a sudden gust caught him up and flung him down, and at the same instant the old barn tumbled in with a crash.

The old man got up dazed and bewildered. The fall of the barn frightened him and temporarily drove away all thoughts of suicide. He had turned to re-enter the house, when he heard faint cries for help from the debris of the barn, and in a state of great amazement he hobbled out of the wreckage to investigate. He soon discovered a man held down by beams and planks, and as he worked to release him he came across a satchel. The man had a broken leg and soon after being found became unconscious. Uncle Jim, almost helpless and very badly frightened, shouted for help, and it was an hour after the victim of the accident had been released that his identity was known, and people told the old ex-soldier that fortune had smiled on him at last.

The bank robber had not hidden in the woods. Instead of going beyond Charlotte he had secreted himself in Uncle Jim's old barn to wait for pursuit to cool and a favorable moment to steal another horse. Davids & Davids had offered a reward of $5,000 for the man and his plunder, and at noon of Thanksgiving day both were in the kitchen of the old cripple's shanty home and being well guarded by officers of the law. The burglar, who turned out to be a professional of no mean reputation, was very badly injured, and it was months before he could be tried and given his just deserts, but Thanksgiving's sun had not yet gone down when Uncle Jim had been provided with all the comforts of life and had thanked his God a score of times that out of the bitterness of poverty and the climax of misfortune had arisen a gale to prevent self murder and bring happiness and plenty in the same breath.

A cripple hobbled along Broad street near Green street the other night with the aid of a pair of crutches and accosted several people who passed.

"Say, my friend," he called to the first man who approached, "could you"—

"I haven't got a cent," replied the other as he quickened his pace.

The cripple staggered back against the railing surrounding the boys' high school like a man who had been struck with a sandbag. After a time he recovered himself. Another pedestrian came along.

"My friend," he cried, "I'm a stranger here and"—

"Sorry I've got nothing to give," and the pedestrian hurried on.

A third man passed by, and the cripple tackled him.

"No, I haven't got anything," he said.

"Why, d—n it," yelled the man with crutches, "I'm not a beggar. I don't want any money."

The other stopped and waited for the cripple to hobble up.

"Everybody takes me for a beggar," he said. "Why, I've plenty of money," and he displayed a big roll of bills. "I'm a stranger in the town, and I want to know how to get to the best restaurant in the place."

He received the necessary direction and hurried off.—Philadelphia Record.

A letter thrown overboard from a Danish vessel was found six days later in the stomach of a cod caught 1,251 miles from the spot where the missal was dropped into the sea.

HER FORTE.

She is fond of all athletics—they are her soul's delight—
And at tennis, ball and rowing she is simply out of sight,
But at present she has banished all these pleasures from her mind,
For she loves a game of football more than all the rest combined.

She wishes that she was a man some twenty times a day.
It makes her mad to tell her that she isn't built to play.
I always see her on the grounds whenever there's a game,
But she says the looking at it is monotonous and tame.

Of course, you say, she'd be no use upon a football team,
But appearances they tell me are not always what they seem.
'Tis true that in the rush line she'd be nothing but a stick,
But she'd make a dandy fall back. You ought to see her kick.

SALT WATER IN CEMENT.

The Sulphates of the Sea Are Very Destructive, Says Dr. Michaelis.

In the opinion of Dr. Michaelis of Berlin the greatest enemies to the permanency of the portland cement used in marine structures are the sulphates contained in sea water. If there is any great quantity of alumina and ferric oxide in the cement, the structure breaks up sooner than otherwise. This is accounted for by the fact that the sulphate forms, with the aluminate and ferrate of lime, a number of crystalline compounds, such as basic sulphate of lime, alumino sulphate and ferro sulphate of lime. These compounds take up a large quantity of water of crystallization, so that the total volume is much increased; hence the weakness and disintegration of the cement structure.

Dr. Michaelis considers that the separation of hydrate of magnesia is quite innocuous, for it is only displaced from its solution in the form of a flocculent, slimy hydrate, which, if anything, is useful in stopping up the pores. His general recommendation to users of concrete for marine work is to choose a cement rich in silica and as poor as possible in alumina and ferric oxide, and to envelop the structure with an impermeable mixture composed of one part of cement with 2 to 2½ parts of sand of mixed grain, of which at least one-third should be very fine sand, and to this the requisite amount of ballast should Wanted Dimensions.

This is the story told of the stranger in one of the big railway stations. He was afraid to go into the lunchroom. The surroundings were so magnificent he felt sure the prices would be correspondingly magnificent. Finally he approached the man at the lunch counter and without seating himself on a stool he asked:

"Do you have coffee here?"

"Yes, sir."

"How much is it a cup?"

"Ten cents."

Somewhat reassured, the stranger started to mount a stool, and then he paused.

"If it ain't too much trouble," he said, "will you show me the size of the cup?" —Chicago Record.

Why Not Be Strong?

Do You Know What That Weakness Means?

There is a Limit to Your Endurance. Have You Reached It?

Beware of the Last Straw! It Will Come Like a Shock.

Shakespeare says: "When sorrows come, they come not single spies but in batallions." How true this is of disease. How surely will over-work lead to nervousness, headache, nervous exhaustion, prostration, paralysis and the most terrible nervous diseases.

Bad blood causes humors, stomach, liver and kidney complaints, rheumatism, bad complexion, tumors and all kinds of blood diseases. That tired feeling means exhaustion of the nerves and vital forces—it kills. If the liver is torpid, constipation follows. This clogs the circulation and causes congestion of all the organs.

You must stop these complaints right where they are, if you value your life. The way to do it is to take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It cures diseases and makes you well.

MISS ROSE MCCARTHY.

The popular Miss Rose McCarthy, of 347 East 37th street, New York city, writes:

"For a long time I was troubled with nervousness and violent headaches. I would lie awake nearly all night and was in constant misery. Previous to this my complexion was a very healthy color, but it now became very bad.

"I took three bottles of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and was entirely cured. My nervousness and headaches left me, my good complexion returned and I slept perfectly. I can safely say to everybody who is suffering, just give it a trial and you will be cured. I hope my statement will find relief for many people who do not know the benefit of such a wonderful medicine."

Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy strikes disease like the lightning's flash, which nothing can resist, and where it strikes it cures. Put it to the test in your own case and see how quickly health and strength will be yours.

Physicians recommend it because it is the discovery of the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. You can consult him free, personally or by letter.

CARPETS.

While the country has been suffering from general business depression, we have enjoyed a Carpet business far in advance of any previous season, and there is every indication that the present will without doubt be the largest ever known.

We probably handle more of the Lowell Ingrains and Brussels than all the other carpet houses of this city combined, and consequently are in a position to quote the lowest prices on those makes at all times. How are these? Lowell, Hartford and other best ingrains, the best all-wool that usually brings 82½ cents. Our price

Recent additions to the stock of short lengths in our basement salesroom make this a remarkable place for saving money on Carpets for a small room, hall or bath. Here we sell $1.75 Axministers at $1; $1.25 Moquettes and best Brussels at 62½ cents; 85 cent Tapestries at 50 cents; 75 cents All-Wool Carpets at 40 cents.

Linoleums in short lengths, in many cases enough for a room, these in patterns not to be made again, consequently the price, 65 cents a yard, usually 90 cents.

ITS WONDERFUL EFFICACY.

Newspapers Admit Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy Is All It Is Claimed.

The intense interest taken in the almost miraculous cures made by Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, at Athens, N. Y., and other places, resulted in the Albany, N. Y., Journal sending a special representative to Athens to investigate the cases, and it was found that many of the cures made by this medicine were simply wonderful.

In the cases of Mr. Lewis Clow, who had chronic kidney disease, Mrs. Casper Brooks, suffering from female troubles and kidney disease, and Mrs. William Tiffany, who suffered from general prostration, all of these cases were abandoned by their attending physicians. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was then used by them and in every case an absolute cure was effected.

Mr. C. E. Bartholomew, Kalkaska, Mich., writes: "Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy saved my life when I was a victim of Bright's disease."

"I had been troubled since 1869," writes S. N. Arnold, of Rochester, N. Y., "with gravel and catarrh of the bladder. Tried several doctors, but got no relief. Finally I used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The result was marvelous; after using a few bottles I was entirely cured." 34

The Story of the Deserter.

You know the story of the pass?
Twenty men held it, till the grass
Ran down with blood, and one
By one they dropped down in the place,
And the night covered each still face
Where was none living, none.

A score of heroes! and one more,
Who was no hero, but before
The fight forsook his post,
Struck with unutterable dread,
And from that pass of death he fled,
And from the conquering host.

All night they lay there, sleeping on
In the dark ravine; but when alone
The dawn broke in the sky
O'er then great quietness, who kept
So strange a guard, a shadow crept
Out of the wood hard by.

As moving in a dream he drew
Nearer and nearer yet, till through
The silent camp he passed.
Each man had many wounds. He gazed
On eyes unseeing now and glazed,
And knew them to the last.

Then once more sought the wood, and hewed
From a tree fallen there, a rude
High wooden cross, with his
Bright sword, and through the blood-stained moss
Drove it, and cut upon the cross:
"God's soldiers." Only this.

And then another cross he wrought,
Shaped yet more roughly, that he brought
Some distance from the slain,
And thrust into the soil, and cut
There, "God's deserter." Then he put
A bullet through his brain.

—From "Songs from Dreamland," by May Kendall.

THE TUCKERS' DUMB WEEK.

The Tucker family had a fault. They were conscious of it, and therefore, like a sensible family, set about correcting it. This fault was—they all liked to talk. Consequently often talked all at once, very loud and very fast.

Maria Jane inaugurated the reform. "Boys, this must stop," she said. We are getting to be a noisy, disorderly family, and I for one am ashamed of it. "This breakfast table, until the griddle-cakes came on, has been a veritable bedlam."

"What are you going to do about it?" asked Stephen and Frank together, while Charlie, a high school middler, who had just passed his Harvard "prelims," whistled,

"Hark, I hear a voice,
Way up on the mountain top."

It should be remarked here that Maria's height was at once a source of tribulation to herself and of infinite amusement to the three boys. Seven-years-old Blanche said simply, "More griddles," and "Little Mother" Tucker smiled approvingly on her eldest daughter, and said demurely that she'd "welcome any change for the better;" while the Rev. Mr. Tucker remarked with severe dignity, "I am glad you have at last come into a realization of the true condition of affairs, and I hope it will lead to a speedy amendment." "Hear, hear!" shouted Charley. "The motion before the house is"—

"That the conversational proclivities of the Tucker family be suppressed," supplied Stephen.

"I second the motion," said Little Mother.

"Mr. Speaker," said Maria, bowing low to Charley, who was reaching toward the last griddlecake, "my plan for improvement is simply this: that we all agree for one whole week not to speak"—

"Fred Struthers comes Saturday nights," interrupted Frank.

"To each other here at home," continued Maria with color, "but to communicate with each other by writing, sign language, pantomime, or any other means that we can devise."

"Good work!" "Whose idea is the brightest?" and "Three cheers for Maria! Rah! rah! rah!" came simultaneously from the three boys, while Blanche inquired anxiously: "Can't I talk to my dolls and kitty?"

"As much as they do to you," said her mother, kissing her.

"Father'll never consent to anything like that," declared Stephen in a stage whisper.

"No, indeed," chorused the other two boys.

"And yet it wouldn't be any fun without him," said Little Mother.

The minister retreated behind his paper. Maria began to urge him. "Oh, you must join it, Father, dear," she said, coaxingly. "We don't think you especially need it (groans from the boys); but we want the influence of your name and example upon the younger members of the society." (Sniffs from the other end of the table.)

"Father, what objection have you?

"Won't you, Papa?"

"Well, if he doesn't we shan't have to."

"No sound from behind the paper."

"Some papas speak when they're spoken to," remarked Blanche, sententiously.

"Or promise not to," said Stephen.

"Father!" "What?" "Why!" "Oh, my!" ejaculated the astounded family the next moment.

For the Rev. Mr. Tucker had slowly risen, placed his paper against the wall, and was writing in blue pencil the words:

"I hereby promise to abstain from speech with my family for the space of one week.

"Signed, EBENEZER TUCKER."

"Brav"—began Frank, but Charley's hand was clapped over his mouth.

Then followed a grand stampede in the direction of pencils and paper, in the course of which Stephen looked into the nursery and saw Blanche laboriously printing with chalk on her blackboard:

"I AM NOT TO SPEEK 2 ANNY 1 FOR 1 WEEK. BLA."

whereat he took her upon his shoulder and carried her to the door of the sitting room.

She found Charley and Frank with Webster's Unabridged Dictionary opened at the deaf and dumb alphabet. The book was old, and that leaf was soon discovered to be loose. It also became inconvenient for two heads to bend over the page, inasmuch as two pairs of hands must be repeatedly brought into juxtaposition with the printed models. So boyish ingenuity evolved a compromise, effected by tearing the page in two. This gave Frank the one-hand alphabet. As a result each mastered his own in a comparatively short time, but neither would change his system. Blanche could not learn either method without verbal explanation; but peace was finally secured by her pointing at the hall clock—an act which sent both the boys in the direction of books, hats and the school house. Blanche watched them out of sight, laughing at the vigorous nods and shakes by means of which they discussed the probability of a tardy mark, and then ran into the kitchen in search of diversion.

Meanwhile Little Mother and Maria had been making plans for the day. These were on a sheet of paper, and read:

"You and I can take turns answering the door-bell.

"Better get all the old school slates down to use at the dinner table.

"We must contrive to make it easy for Blanche. She isn't so much addicted to turbulence as the rest of us.

"May Stephen buy half a dozen cheap paper pads in the city?

"Yes, and pencils.

"Let me take your public library card, please. I'd rather read 'Last Days of Pompeii' than talk (?) this evening."

Maria blue-penciled a portion of this paper and showed it to Stephen, who departed with sudden alacrity. The minister had already gone to his study, after giving Blanche this little note:

"Kitty is just as hungry as ever."

And the parsonage settled down into a quiet which it had not known since the Tuckers moved into it.

With great forethought Maria wrote out the grocer's list, an order for the fishman and a small sign saying, "No agents' wares wanted here." She had privately registered a vow to make her silent week as perfect as possible. I believe she would have even written a note to Fred, asking him not to call, had she not anticipated some amusement from watching his surprise.

This was Thursday morning. No other functionaries called, and Maria and her mother exchanged congratulatory smiles as she went into the hall to ring the dinner bell.

Incidentally this reform was destined to bring others in its train. Promptitude at meals had never been a Tucker virtue, but now the entire family, with the exception of Stephen, who worked in an art store in the city, and the Rev. Mr. Tucker, who considered that it did not consort with his ministerial dignity to leave his sermon save at the end of a paragraph, had gathered at the table before the bell ceased to ring.

Each person's plate was provided with a slate and pencil, and there were sundry little slips of paper in a dish labeled "Etiquet."

Blanche pulled out one of these and handed it to Frank. It read, "Will you have some butter?" Frank took up his emptied butter plate and looked at it critically. "No!" he wrote on Blanche's slate. Then seizing the lead pencil which he wore ostentatiously tied to a string around his neck, he careted in the word more, so that the slip read, "Will you have some more butter?" To this question he answered "Yes." Blanch looked puzzled. But Maria, who was presiding genius of the butter dish, severely ignored his waiting plate, and reached for her tortured etiquet slip. She crossed out the "more," and wrote an "over" underneath the line. On the other side of the slip she wrote, "Never, by look, word, or deed, remind another of how much he has eaten." This was too much for Frank, who shook his sides in mock laughter. He wrote something at the bottom of his slate, but did not pass it to Maria

Mr. Tucker created a diversion by saying: "I wish, Ellen—" as he came into the dining-room. His look of discomfiture as he saw five fingers placed upon five pairs of lips was truly comical.

During dinner Charley dropped a glass tumbler, breaking it into a thousand pieces. "I'm so glad I did it this week," he wrote to Blanche, "'cause now Papa can't say anything to me."

Maria, who was clearing away the debris, read this over his shoulder and took his pencil to draw a line through the objectionable sentiment.

As they left the dining-room Frank showed his slate to Maria, pointing to the question: "Won't you come into the dining-room and have some dinner?" Maria smiled. "Tomorrow," she wrote.

At the tea table they had small paper pads, instead of slates, and an extra spoonholder containing a supply of little fancy pencils occupied the position of honor. Very little was written, however, except by Stephen and his father, who carried on an abbreviated conversation in this way:

"U saw D Jones?"
(Nod.) "He'll plumb Tues."
"? S"
"2 Bill later."
"Fowl slain?"
(Shake.) "Before 9 p. m."
"Trade good?"
"Av."

(To the uninitiated be it explained that the waterpipes had burst the evening before, that Deacon Jones was a plumber by trade, that ∞ is a higher mathematical sign designating an indefinite quantity, and that the Tucker family kept hens.)

Friday was a rainy day, and Saturday was even worse. People rather wondered why the minister's daughter didn't stop at all after the Friday evening meeting; but they consoled themselves by talking all the more to the minister and his wife, who, truth to tell, were not ill-pleased to loosen their tongues from their bondage of silence. Maria alone had determined to make the pledge affect outsiders, and she walked home with a heroic, do-or-die expression of countenance.

On Saturday evening Fred Struthers arrived earlier than usual, directly after tea, indeed. He did not notice Maria's silence at first, for he was intent upon telling her what had happened to him that morning.

"Mr. W. called me into his private office and asked me how soon I could take charge of a branch office. I said that it would depend upon where it was. He said that he wanted it done immediately, that the arrangements were all made, and that if I could sail for Honolulu next Thursday morning, he would pay me a salary of two thousand dollars a year."

Maria gasped.

'Now," went on Fred., "I know it seems sudden; but you know, Maria, that though we haven't announced our engagement, you told me last Christmas that the only Christmas present I wanted from you had been given to me before you knew it. And even if you haven't been getting ready to be married, the way some girls do, we shan't need the same sort of things that we should in this country. That is three times the salary I am getting now, and it might never be raised to that sum if I let this chance go by. Mr. W. said there was a furnished house that I could have, for it belonged to the man he has just bought out. Nevertheless, Maria," his voice grew tender, "if you would rather wait until I can come back for you—I don't know how soon I can get leave of absence. Mr. W's business requires pretty close attention, and he trusts a good deal to me, but"—seeming for the first time to be aware of her silence—"I don't want to urge you against your will."

"Oh, Fred, I am dumb," wrote Maria on her tablet.

Fred's look of consternation was succeeded, on seeing Maria's roguish smile, by one of amusement. 'What amazement? I should think you would be," he laughed. "But it's true, every word of it. Too good to be true, if prospects mean anything; for it looks as if I might rise until I'm a partner."

"No; let me explain"—wrote Maria. Then, as a thought struck her, she hastily left the room, leaving her ardent wooer even more dumfounded than he had been before. When she returned she held up before him Papa Tucker's pledge, written in blue pencil on the margin of last Thursday's paper.

Fred's eyes twinkled. "What a chance to plead my cause!" he said. "Our cause, rather, for it is for your sake rather than my own that I urge this speedy marriage. Can you not see how unusual the opening is?"

Maria nodded candidly.

"What would you advise Stephen to say to Alice, if he were in my shoes?"

"Ditto," wrote Maria, sententiously.

"Can you blame me for wanting you now? It isn't as if I had known you only a year or two. Don't you remember promising to marry me when you were five and I was nine? And how many ways we played 'wedding journey'?"

"But we never had a dumb week," wrote Maria, laughing hysterically. "Nor a four days' engagement," she added.

"But you surely won't keep this farce up till I—we sail?" he asked. "The boat goes at ten '

"Pledge signed at seven," wrote Maria.

"O me miserum! Better ten thousand times a shrew than to be obstinately dumb," cried he in mock despair. "Why, you can't even say 'I will' until Thursday morning. But that's enough, though, for we can be married at eight and sail at ten," he went on, confidently.

Maria held up her hands and pretended to look aghast.

"May I speak to your father?" Fred asked, after a pause, during which the eloquence of his eyes did him better service than had that of his tongue.

Maria silently opened the study door, and then went to find her mother.

"Good-by," she wrote.

"Whither?" wrote Little Mother.

"Honolulu."

"When?"

"Thursday, 10 a. m."

"Why?"

"Fred!"

"What will you need?"

"My $250 out of the bank and you to go shopping with me."

And they did; and those plucky Tuckers never spoke to each other through it all, but are noted to this day as a family of few words. And I think that Maria Struthers, nee Tucker, will bear off the palm for having had "a very quiet wedding."—Independent.

A TRIBUTE TO SOUTHERN GIRLS.

There is one point, at least, where the southern girl is the superior of her visitors, and that is in her relation to her own sex, says a writer in the Boston Sunday Herald. Let a strange girl come into a Southern ballroom, or reception, or afternoon tea, and she will find herself surrounded with a spirit of friendliness and welcome. Even the ordeal of the dressing room is turned from a trial to a privilege. She will find kind faces to look pleasantly at her, and kind hands ready to render her any little service, quite independent of the question as to whether they know who she is or not. She will find that she is not stared at, either with approval or severity. If her gown is beautiful, there will be no vulgar curiosity about it; and if it is dowdy or ugly, there will be no supercilious criticism of glance. Contrast all this with the manner that obtains in a dressing room in the North, and the advantage will undoubtedly be on the other side.

In her manner of treating the opposite sex the Southern girl has also her own way. She is more free and easy, undoubtedly, but a close study of her will reveal the fact that she is more apt to put a man on his honor than her sisters of other sections are. She is so unsuspicious of the possibility of danger that that very fact greatly decreases the danger. The best type of Southern girls may do, in public, what a northern girl would consider fast; but the chances are that her private actions would contradict such an impression. She has the Southern attribute of spontaneous feeling and warmth of heart, and this will always be found stronger in her than conventionality.

THE "RUNAWAY STAR."

The greatest velocity that has been recognized among the stars is found in the motion of a star known as 1830 Groombridge, or the "runaway star," as it is sometimes called, which is belived to be rushing through space at the rate of 200 miles per second. This star seems to be moving in a perfectly straight line through the sky, and it may be visiting our star system for the first time, but whence it came or whither it is going no one can tell, and it is a great enigma to astronomers.

Its wonderful velocity cannot be explained, as it is far greater than could be produced by the influence of all known orbs in the universe, and, on the other hand, the combined attraction of all the stars cannot stop this wanderer in its solitary flight through space, until it has rushed on to the remoter distance, beyond which the largest telescopes have never penetrated.

It has been mathematically demonstrated that a body approaching the center of our system from an infinite distance cannot move with a greater velocity than 25 miles a second, if influenced by the attraction of the masses in our universe alone, but here we have been considering a star moving with eight times that velocity, and still, notwithstanding the fact that it has the greatest motion known among the stars, it would require 185,000 years for this remarkable star to complete an entire circuit around the heavens.—All the Year Round.

DEARER THAN EVER.

The young wife was feeling pretty blue, and though she had been married only three years, she couldn't quite understand the situation. Her husband noticed something was wrong when he came home, and he spoke about it.

"What's the matter, my dear?" he asked.

"Oh, nothing," she sighed wearily.

"That doesn't sound much like it. Something must be wrong. What is it?"

"I was thinking."

"Thinking what?"

"Lots of things."

"For instance?"

"Well, you for one."

"What's the matter with me?"

"I don't know."

"Neither do I. I'm just as I always was."

"Oh, no, you're not," and her eyes filled up almost to the overflow point. "It used to be," she went on before he had a chance to say anything, "that you brought me flowers and books and candy and——"

"But my dear, that was before we were married," he interrupted.

"Well, that doesn't make any difference, does it? I'm as much to you now as I was then, ain't I?"

"More," he said earnestly, "much more; for in those days your father supported you."—Detroit Free Press.

HOW TO COVER A BOOK.

How many boys and girls know how to cover a book properly—that is, so as to get the corners square and even? It is not hard after you have been shown, though it is not easy to guess. Put the book in the center of a sheet of paper large enough to allow two inches to be turned in at the top, bottom and sides. Fold the cover over the sides and crease it so that it will not slip. Then cut diagonally from the top and bottom of the paper to points just a little beyond where the book will open. In many books this may be determined easily by the binding. Cut straight slits from the top and bottom of the paper to the four corners of the edges. Then fold the paper forming the extension of the sides down between the book and the part of the paper cover which folds over the top. This will make each corner perfectly square. When using cloth, it is better to fold the corners rather than to slit them, as the cloth is apt to fray, but they should always be turned and folded so as to come outside the book itself, between it and the cover.

A French lady, staying in America for some time, was wrestling with the English language. She had made very good progress, she thought, and one day accepted an invitation to dine.

As the dinner went on she was offered a dish that was new to her. Not fancying its appearance, she declined it, saying—

"Ah! Thanks! No, monsieur. I eat only acquaintances."—Youth's Companion.

A Man's Sentiments.

Girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf tips.
The girls that are wanted are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand;
That fathers and brothers can trust to,
And the little ones understand.

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to her own folks,
Ready and anxious to please.
The girls that are wanted are wise girls,
That know what to do and say;
That drive with a smile and soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are girls of sense,
Whom fashion can never deceive;
Who can follow whatever is pretty,
And dare what is silly to leave.
The girls that are wanted are careful girls,
Who count what a thing will cost;
Who use with a prudent, generous hand,
But see that nothing is lost.

The girls that are wanted are girls with hearts;
They are wanted for mothers and wives;
Wanted to cradle in loving arms
The strongest and frailest lives.
The clever, the witty, the brilliant girl,
There's a constant, steady demand.
But, oh! for the wise, loving home girls,
There are few who can understand.

LOBO, KING OF WOLVES, AND HIS FAMOUS BAND.

Old Lobo, or the king, as the Mexicans called him, was the gigantic leader of a remarkable pack of gray wolves, that had ravaged the Currumpaw Valley for a number of years. All the shepherds and ranchmen knew him well, and wherever he appeared with his trusty band terror reigned supreme among the cattle, and wrath and despair among their owners. Old Lobo was a giant among wolves, and was cunning and strong in proportion to his size. His voice at night was well known and easily distinguished from that of any of his fellows. An ordinary wolf might howl half the night about the herdsman's bivouac without attracting more than a passing notice, but when the deep roar of the old king came booming down the canon the watcher bestirred himself and prepared to learn in the morning that fresh and serious inroads had been made among the herds.

Old Lobo's band was but a small one. This I never quite understood, for usually, when a wolf rises to the position and power that he had, he attracts a numerous following. It may be that he had as many as he desired, or perhaps his ferocious temper prevented the increase of his pack. Certain it is that Lobo had only five followers during the latter part of his reign. Each of these, however, was a wolf of renown. Most of them were above the ordinary size; one in particular, the second in command, was a veritable giant, but even he was far below the leader in size and prowess. Several of the band besides the two leaders were especially noted. One of these was a beautiful white wolf, that the Mexicans called Blanco, or Blanca; this was supposed to be a female, possibly Lobo's mate. Another was a yellow wolf of remarkable swiftness, and which, according to current stories, had on several occasions captured an antelope for the pack.

There came under my observation an incident that will illustrate Lobo as an aggresor of diabolical cunning. These wolves had at least one pursuit which was merely an amusement, and apparently not at all connected with their appetite for food; it was, as has already been intimated, stampeding and killing sheep. The sheep are usually kept in flocks of from one thousand to three thousand under one or more shepherds. At night they are gathered in the most sheltered place available, and a herdsman sleeps on each side of the flock to give additional protection. Sheep are such senseless creatures that they are liable to be stampeded at night by the veriest trifle, but they have engrained in their nature one, and perhaps only one, strong weakness, viz., to follow their leader. And this the shepherds turn to good account by putting half a dozen goats in the flock of sheep. The latter recognize the superior intelligence of their bearded cousins, and when a night alarm occurs they crowd around them, and are usually saved from a stampede. But it was not always so. One night, late in last November two Perico shepherds were aroused by an onset of wolves. Their flocks huddled around the goats, which, being neither fools nor coward, stood their ground and were bravely defiant; but alas for them, no common wolf was heading this invasion. Old Lobo, their weir-wolf, knew as well as the shepherds that the goats were the moral force of the flock, so, hastily running over the backs of the densely packed sheep, he fell on these leaders, slew them all in a few minutes, and soon had the luckless sheep stampeding in a thousand different directions.—Scribner's Magazine.

THE WINDOW GARDEN.

To have success with flowers, it is most important that the plants enter the house entirely free from insects. Green fly, thrip, red spider and mealy bug are their chief enemies. Examine them well from now on, syringing them well at times with force enough to dislodge any insect that may be on them, which can be done except in the case of the mealy bug. These get in the axil of the leaves and are destroyed by gardeners by using a tooth brush to dislodge them.

Provision should be made now for suitable stands for the plants. A writer in the Lewiston Journal says the windowsill is not the place for them. With saucers under the pots tables can be used. Zinc lined boxes are now much used. They are made long and narrow, to suit the ledge of the window, whatever the length may be. They can be made of a size to be set on a table and of any size desired. These boxes are not intended for plants to be planted in them, but only to hold the pots, so as to catch what water runs from the plants.

PALMER NEWS.

Changes in the B. and A. Yard.

A semaphor signal post has been put in place beside the Ware River road tracks, near the water tank opposite the passenger station, and soon all trains on the tracks in the Ware River yard will be controlled by it, and all the connecting switches will be operated from the tower and made interlocking. Another signal arm has also been put up near the tenement house of Dr. Holbrook at the Point of Rocks, to control the trains coming into the yard from that direction. The reason for this change is the number of trains which now use the track between the freight house and the turn table or the coal heap. There are now about half a dozen trains daily from east and west on the main line which run to Palmer and return. The locomotives must be turned here, and the only place to do it is at the Ware River round house. Added to these are the milk train at night and the freight cars which are delivered during the night to the New London Northern road by the B. and A. from its through trains, the Ware River freights and the local switcher, and at times trains get pretty thick in the vicinity of the turn table When the new arrangement is completed a train at the station which wishes to go north on the Ware track must get the semaphor signal before starting, and the giving of it the signal will lock the signal near the Point of Rocks at "danger" and prevent incoming trains from approaching; and the reverse will be the case with trains coming into the yard from the north. At the round house there will be hand levers, so that if a locomotive is to be brought out upon the track the men can, provided both semaphors are at "danger," lock them there until the locomotive is out, thus preventing the possibility of the operator in the tower not seeing them and giving another train the right of way over the track.

The brickwork for the new Odd Fellows' building has been commenced.

O. M. Graves, on the quarry road to Monson, lost a valuable cow this week.

Miss May Wilder is visiting her cousin, Miss Maggie T. Rohan of Springfield.

Peter Watson has left the employ of W. H. Hitchcock, and has returned to Lowell.

Mrs. M. Nichols of State avenue spent Thanksgiving with her mother in Worcester.

The Baptist Sunday school will have a Christmas tree and a concert at Christmas time.

Mrs. Noah Pease of Somers, Ct., has been spending the week with Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Fitch.

The regular monthly meeting of the Palmer Bicycle Club will be held next Tuesday evening.

Ben Allen of Springfield spent yesterday with his sister, Mrs. D. Slattery, on State avenue.

Miss Delia Holbrook is visiting friends in Philadelphia, where she will remain a month or six weeks.

New and handsome awnings have this week been put in place for the stores in Holden's block.

S. F. Bailey, a returned missionary from the West Indies, will preach in the People's church next Sunday.

R. E. Paddock, who has lived on State avenue for several years, is moving his family to Springfield.

Rev. Robert Kellerman, pastor of the First Universalist church of Orange, will preach in St. Paul's church next Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Fish are to return to Palmer to live, and will occupy one of Mrs. Lawrence's tenements on Central street.

O. P. Allen has his stock of drugs and medicines moved into his new store and is ready for business at that place.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society will be held in the district court room next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The concert and ball which was to have been given by the firemen on the evening of Dec. 14th in the Nassowanno House hall, has been postponed until New Year's Eve.

Fred R. Sistare of Springfield, formerly of Palmer, has been appointed District Deputy Grand Master of Palmer lodge of Odd Fellows, and also of the lodge at West Springfield.

Mrs. Maria Lawrence is having a driven well sunk on land owned by her on the side hill at the head of Maple street, in the hope of finding water enough to supply her tenements.

A turkey raffle was held at the house of Maurice Lawlor on Hog Hill last Saturday evening. John Dawson, the barber, won the fattest turkey, weighing 26 pounds. Mince pie was served to all.

Cyrus F. Stimson, who is well known to Palmer people, preached in Bridgeport last Sunday, both morning and evening, and Bridgeport people are making very favorable mention of his sermons.

A teacher of French who is having excellent success with a class in Monson, will meet ny who wish to take lessons in Palmer at the home of Mrs. G. H. Wilkins next Monday evening at 7.30 for a free lesson.

At a meeting of the Pauline Brotherhood Monday evening it was unanimously voted to name the society the Murray Chapter, No. 2. H. M. Graves will give a talk next Monday evening on "A Founder of Universalism—John Murray, 1741-1815."

The Boston and Albany road sent eleven special trains of 110 cars from Boston to the football game at Springfield Saturday, and in addition every regular train had extra cars and was crowded. After the game 14 special trains were run east from Springfield.

Home from school for Thanksgiving: Miss Alice Brown from Mt. Holyoke; Harold Shaw and Calvin Hastings from Worcester Academy; J. E. Breckenridge from Yale; Miss Blanche Hastings from Vassar; Arthur Holbrook from Worcester Military Academy; Henry Holbrook from Tufts College.

A meeting of the Quaboag Literary Circle will be held in the Public Library rooms this evening at 7.30. The Round Table will be read by Mrs. Jenkins, Miss Ola Northrop will read a selection, and O. P. Allen will read a paper on "Evolution." The public is invited to be present.

A special attachment against J. K. Knox in favor of C. A. Brown & Co. has been made, the property attached being a piece of land on the north side of the road leading from Shearer's Corner to the Thorndike road, the deed of which is held by J. B. Shaw, the claim being that the said land was fraudulently conveyed.

Mr. Pinney of Brimfield is looking for a young fellow by the name of Butler who has been living on what was the Buxton farm, near the top of Brimfield Hill, who last Sunday went four miles to Pinney's to borrow a wagon with which to go to Warren, though he might have secured several much nearer home. Neither Butler nor the wagon has been seen or heard of since.

The Junior Endeavor society of the Congregational church gave a pleasing entertainment in the church vestry Monday afternoon, the admission to which was a pound of something. Seventy-four pound parcels were brought, besides which generous hearts contributed a large quantity of vegetables, etc., all of which was distributed among needy families of the place the next day, and helped matetially to make their Thanksgiving a more genuine one than it would otherwise have been.

Dr. C. W. Amerige, who has recently leased and refitted the Converse estate, on the corner of Thorndike and Pleasant streets, for the treatment of chronic cases, finds that the demands upon him to attend family practice have increased to such an extent that he is unable to reply to them all and also attend to his Worcester office, and so he has secured Dr. John A. Donner of New York city, who has had an experience of 15 years in both private and hospital practice, to attend to such cases. Dr. Donner makes a specialty of the diseases of women.

Persons who have an idea that the suspension of freight traffic for one day can make no serious difference to a large railroad should have taken notice of the Boston and Albany on Sunday and Monday. On account of the football game Saturday and the extra trains necessitated thereby that road ran no freights after three o'clock Saturday morning until 12 at night, and Sunday and Monday the freights were almost within sight of each other all day; in fact the usual schedule was not resumed until some time Tuesday.

C. B. Coomes, who started several weeks ago as treasurer for a theater troupe, is home again, the company having disbanded at Millers Falls last Saturday because of an accident which nearly killed four members of the company, two of the women being still in bed as the result of their injuries. The company was going from Millers Falls to Erving by team, and the night being dark and rainy, the driver could not see to keep the road and drove over a large rock, tipping the barge over. Fortunately Mr. Coomes was not in the vehicle, being at Erving making arrangements for the peformance.

The pupils of the high school have decided to go on with their proposed course of entertainments, and the first will be Tuesday evening, Dec. 11th, with Charles T. Grilley, humorist and dialect reader of Boston, Heinrich Schuecker, harp virtuoso, and Molé, flutist, the two latter being from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The artists are all of the highest order, and will be sure to furnish an entertainment well worth attending. The school has undertaken to give the village a course of entertainments which shall be instructive and elevating, and at the low price of $2 for the course of six there should be a generous patronage.

A session of the probate court was held in the district court room Wednesday morning, when the following business was transacted:

Administration granted in the estates of—Mary A. Mills, late of Hampden, A. Jackson Blanchard administrator; Maggie H. Lawrence, late of Holyoke, Timothy F. Ryan administrator; Susan E. Filley, late of Bordentown, N. Y., Eunice R. Sturtevant administratrix. Affidavits of notice of appointment received in the estate of Amanda Graves, late of Palmer. Inventory filed in the estate of Amanda Graves, late of Palmer. Henry W. Bosworth appointed agent in the estate of Susan E. Filley, late of Bordentown, N. J. Account allowed in the estate of Frank A. Warrants for sale of real estate issued in the estates of Carrie E. H. Hutchins, late of Springfield, and Harriet L. Shaw, late of Brimfield.

The new card catalogue of the Young Men's Library Association, which was completed recently, is to be put into use to-morrow, and books must be called for hereafter by the new call numbers, the old ones having been discarded. A finding-list of fiction in the library, which of course is read more than any other class, has been printed for the convenience of readers in the other villages, and for their further convenience, and to bring to the attention of the reading public the more solid class of literature in the library, the JOURNAL has arranged to publish in weekly instalments a list of the other books with the call numbers, which will be begun next week. The new fiction finding lists will be sold for ten cents a copy, and can be obtained at the library, and also at the offices of the Palmer Mill in Three Rivers, the Thorndike Co. at Thorndike and the Boston Duck Co. at Bondsville.

He, "Billy" Brooks, stood on the bridge, the Main street one over the Boston and Albany's tracks, as the clock was striking the hour of 10 last Saturday night. A stranger approached from the south'ard, and the electric light looked down from its silent watch on the tall pole by the railroad track and winked, both at "Billy" and the stranger, making one wink do for both, as it hadn't strength for one apiece. "What town," said the stranger, "is this?" "It," said "Billy," "is Palmer." "Well," said the stranger, "some——mean men live in Palmer," and Brooks got it straight from the stranger's shoulder as well as from his lips. "Billy" had been given a surprise party, and was at home when it came. He was too much overcome for words, but his thoughts were working——hard; this does not mean that it was hard for them to work. Another call, this time from the stranger's left, and "Billy" fully agreed with his, the stranger's first and only remark. Convinced now that it were better if he, "Billy," were far from that place at that time, he started on a run down South Main street. And the villian, the stranger, still pursued him, "Billy." Finally however, help was at hand, and the stranger disappeared, having converted "Billy" to his opinion, that there are some——mean men in Palmer.

George and Alice Young were before the district court Tuesday for too liberal libations from the flowing bowl, which in their case had flowed so generously that the effects had rather deluged the other occupants of the house, and they protested. George paid a fine of $5, while Alice will sojourn in the house of correction for three months. George said he was married to Alice six years ago in Dover, N. H., by a Catholic priest, while Alice claimed that the marriage took place five years ago in Lawrence, a Baptist clergyman officiating. When George's story was told her she said that the Dover marriage was to her first husband, which wasn't George, and she couldn't imagine why he should think he was there. As it has been supposed for some time that the couple were not married, and as Alice's influence over George is said not to be of the best, the court concluded to separate them for a time at least. Lillian Smith, who was 13 years old last month and who weighs about a couple of hundred pounds, was complained of some time ago as being a neglected child, but was allowed her liberty under bonds; her bondsman has surrendered her however, and Wednesday she was committed to the care of the state board of charities. This morning three vagrants were each given a year at the state farm at Bridgewater, while Edward Bateson, who was sent up from this court last January for the same offence, being released in August and at once going on the road again, was given two years.

An Opportunity for Charity.

The following communication speaks for itself. The editor has no knowledge of the writer, but has no reason to doubt the genuineness of the story; on the contrary, it is only too likely to be true. Will the people of Palmer and vicinity help?

SUTHERLAND, LINCOLN CO., NEB.,
Nov. 22, 1894.

Editor Palmer Journal, Palmer, Mass.

DEAR SIR:—Will you give me space in your valuable paper to present to your readers the condition of the people in this part of Nebraska? We have had very poor crops the past three years, and this year is an entire failure. The farmers have worked faithfully, but it was of no use. You in the East can have no idea of the amount of suffering in this county. By the estimate taken there are between 3000 and 4000 people who must be cared for the coming winter. Food and clothing must be had, and means to buy fuel. The justice of the peace is overseer of the poor, and as I have that office I know of what I write. Some to whom we appeal send us "sympathy." Now sympathy is very good in its place, but it will neither warm nor feed people. One cold day not long since a woman came to me; she had only a thin summer undergarment and a summer knit Jersey over her shoulders. I had nothing but the said "sympathy" to give her, and it did not seem to warm her much. I know her husband put in 120 acres of crops last spring, and did not get a thing in return, and that is but a fair sample of nearly all around here. Now can and will the people in your vicinity try to help us? Any clothing, from the size suitable for a child six months old up to large size men's and women's clothes will be gladly taken. We cannot pay freight; I know of but one dollar and ten cents in the precinct. Anything sent to me I will distribute to the best of my knowledge.

Respectfully Yours,
ORRIN S. BRADLEY.

State Primary School Notes.

Rev. F. S. Hatch of Monson spoke to the children last Sunday.

Dr. Sara J. Williams spent Thanksgiving with her parents in New York.

W. A. Murtfreedt of Boston has finished putting in the asphalt troughs in the new cow stable.

Miss L. E. Preston, who for the past ten years has had charge of the children's dining room, has resigned her position and left yesterday for her home in South Hadley.

The whole supply of water now used at the school is taken from the new reservoir built this summer, the water in this being of a better quality than that in the old.

Last Sunday night the scholars gave a very interesting Thanksgiving concert consisting of songs and pieces appropriate to the day, and on Tuesday evening Misses Dyer and Prentiss gave a Thanksgiving party, with games, music and candy.

The boys for the past week have been looking forward to Thanksgiving, and when yesterday morning dawned many of them wore a broad smile, thinking of the extra good dinner which was in store for them. Breakfast was served at 6.30, consisting of bread and milk and mince pie. At 11.30 a dinner of roast pork, squash, turnip, potatoes and oranges, was served, 100 pounds of pork, one bushel each of squash, turnip and potatoes, together with 30 mince pies and eight dozen oranges, being required to satisfy the wants of those who sat down to dinner. One boy, being asked if he had had a good dinner, replied: "You bet I did; and I had all I wanted, too." In the afternoon the boys indulged in a game of foot ball, and at 5 o'clock went to a supper of bread, cocoa and gunger, (gingerbread) as the boys call it. At 6.30 they all attended chapel, after which they went to bed, all having a pleasant day.

A new club has been formed by some of the young men, with rooms in Murdock's block, with these officers: President, John Molloy; vice president, William Andrews; treasurer, John Donavan; secretary, P. H. McKelligett.

Bessie, the 4-years-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Roche, had a narrow escape from serious accident one day during the week. The child had procured some matches, and while playing with them her clothing took fire; had it not been for the prompt assistance rendered by Mrs. Thomas Cavanaugh, a neighbor, the little one would have been burned seriously.

The third annual concert and ball by the Columbian Band on Wednesday evening was a grand success financially and otherwise. Every seat was sold for the concert, which was given by the Alpha Mandolin and Guitar Club of Springfield, assisted by Miss Anna T. Desmond, soprano soloist, of Gilbertville. The banjo club rendered their selections in a very creditable manner. The zylophone solo and ocarina trio were well executed and greatly pleased the audience; Mr. Patterson's singing seemed to catch the audience, and he was obliged to respond to three rousing encores. The other numbers were also well given. Miss Desmond rendered her songs in a very pleasing manner, and was well received. About 150 couples attended the dance, and everything passed off pleasantly. The band will net a neat sum for the treasury. The Columbian orchestra furnished good music for dancing, and Mr. Tobin made a good impression for his first appearance as prompter.

Killed by a Falling Wagon.

A sad accident occurred on Tuesday to Ectar, the 6-years-old grandson of Mr. and Mrs. St. John, who live on the farm. The young lad was playing underneath the body of a large wagon, which was supported at one end by a stick, the wheels having been taken off, and in some way, while coming from under it the body fell, catching the boy and pinning him to the ground, causing instant death. The wagon weighed in the neighborhood of 1000 pounds, and the lad's head and parts of the body were terribly crushed. The funeral took place on Thursday.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS—HAMPDEN, ss. November 17, A. D. 1894.

By virtue of an execution, which issued on a judgment recorded in the District Court of Eastern Hampden at Palmer, in said county, on the twentieth day of October A. D. 1894, in favor of George A. Bills of Palmer, in said county of Hampden, and against George M. Shaw of Brimfield, in the county aforesaid, I have this day taken all the right, title and interest which the said George M. Shaw had on the twenty-sixth day of January A. D. 1892, the day when the same was attached on mesne process in this action in and to the following described real estate, situate in Brimfield aforesaid, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

A lot of land and buildings thereon, beginning at an ash tree and running south twenty-five degrees west six rods and twenty-one links, thence south thirty-four degrees west six rods, thence east nine degrees south ten rods and twelve links, thence north twelve rods and ten links to the road, thence to the place of beginning, containing ninety-two rods of land, being the same premises described in a deed thereof recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, book 136, page 198.

The interest of the within named defendant in and to the above described real estate was acquired by inheritance from Abner Shaw of Brimfield, in said county.

And on Saturday, the twenty-second day of December A. D. 1894, in front of the Court House in Palmer, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, I shall offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, said right, title and interest in and to the above described real estate, to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

ORRILUS W. STUDLEY,
3-348 Deputy Sheriff.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.

To the heirs at law, next of kin and all other persons interested in the estate of Mary Finnerty, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Charles L. Gardner, of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named.

You are hereby cited to appear at a probate court to be held at Springfield, in said County of Hampden, on the second day of January A. D. 1895, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be granted.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once in each week, for three successive weeks in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published in said Palmer, the last publication to be one day at least before said court, and by mailing, post-paid, or delivering a copy of this citation to all known persons interested in the estate, seven days at least before said Court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said court, this twenty-seventh day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four.

Burglars Again.

The drug store of G. L. Keeney on Main street was broken into by burglars some time Tuesday night, entrance being made through the door in the rear of the building. A hole large enough for a man's arm was cut in the panel of the door just below the lock, evidently with the intention of unlocking it. Through this the bolt which helped bar the door was thrown, but as the key was not left in the lock they were foiled in this attempt. The lock was then broken and the door forced open, a large railroad spike being used for the purpose. The door was considerably damaged and the plates of glass broken. The electric lights for some reason were not burning Tuesday night, thus giving the burglars a good opportunity to work. A few boxes of cigars and a number of smaller articles were taken, and about $5 in change. The work was evidently that of amateurs, as the safe in the store was untouched. This is the second time Mr. Keeney has suffered at the hands of burglars in the last two years, and the second time this building has been entered during the last two months. There is no clew to the burglars.

THANKSGIVING LINENS.

We've provided here for the linen wants of a great many tables, and hundreds of them on Thanksgiving day will be aglow with cheeriness and hospitality because of it.

Luxurious, snowy white table spreads, inviting enough, almost, it would seem, to make the turkey itself join in the festivities. They are those of John S. Brown & Sons of Belfast. The patterns are elegant and elaborate enough for anybody.

Size 2x2 yards, $2.75 to $5.00.
Size 2x2½ yards, $3.25 to $6.25.
Size 2x3 yards, $4.00 to $7.50.
Size 2x3½ yards, $4.50 to $8.75.
Size 2x4 yards, $5.00 to $10.00.
Size 2½x2½ yards, $5.00 to $8.50.
Size 2½x3 yards, $6.00 to $11.00.
Size 2½x3½ yards, $7.00 to $13.00.
Size 2½x4 yards, $8.00 to $15.00.

Worthy and cheaper ones of course.

Table damask that you'll find it hard to match at the prices elsewhere: Cream, 72 inches wide, $1.25 a yard; bleached, 66 inches wide, very heavy, 75 cents a yard; bleached, 72 inches wide, $1 a yard. All in a big variety of noted patterns.

Main floor Pynchon street building.

COLORED DRESS GOODS.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Michael Dwyer, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased.

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, has been presented to said court, for probate, by William W. Leach of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named.

You are hereby cited to appear at a probate court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the fifth day of December, A. D. 1894, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be granted.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once in each week, for three successive weeks, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published in said Palmer, the last publication to be one day at least before said court, and by mailing postpaid or delivering a copy of this citation to all known persons interested in said estate, seven days, at least, before said court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fifteenth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four.

SPRINGFIELD'S NEW STORE.

MEIGS & COMPANY.

FORMERLY THE D. H. BRIGHAM CO.

Friday evening, October 19th, we opened our new store to the public for their inspection, no goods being sold. On Saturday, October 20th, the store opened for the sale of goods, and has been crowded with customers daily ever since.

"LOW PRICES FOR HIGH QUALITIES"
IS OUR MOTTO.

What we try to do in getting up our Clothing, is to pick out what intelligent people would want if they knew cloth as we know it.

There are different wants and different tastes. We mean to provide for them.

There are also a worldful of cheaper-looking Clothing that is made to waste money on.

We don't sell that sort. Everything is dependable here.

MEN'S SUITS.

At $8, we have a good assortment of Cassimeres and Fancy Cheviots in D. B. and S. B. suits. All sizes, 34 to 44.

At $10 we show an immense line in both Sacks and Cutaways, including a famous Black Cheviot, the name of which we're not allowed to tell. Sizes 34 to 44.

At $12, $13.50 and $15, the lines are larger yet, and include our famous Clay Worsted Dress Suit at $15. We have sold hundreds of them. They lead easily. Sizes 34 to 44.

At $16.50, we've got the best that's made anywhere. The assortment that we show at these prices is far larger than you'd spend time to look through. Sizes 34 to 44

MEN'S OVERCOATS.

At $7.50 there's stock enough for a fair selection: The best in the lot is a clean, Black Cheviot with silk velvet collar.
These coats would easily sell at $10.

At $10 our great "Home Ruler" comes to the front as being the best in the business. Made from all wool beaver in three colors, Blue, Black and Brown. They are the equal of any $12 coat in this city.

At $12, $13.50 and $15 an assortment of Beavers' Kerseys and few Chinchillas, made and trimmed in the best possible manner. At these prices we show over four hundred Overcoats.

At $18, $20, $25 and $30, the cream of the Overcoat world.

All the leading shapes and cloth and all the newest kinks of the tailor's art.

We want to punctuate right here our Great lines of Men's Winter Ulsters.

We're going to make a reputation for ourselves this winter on Ulsters. It's a bit early to talk them, we know: but when you want one you'll do best with your dollars by consulting our stock.

We start them at $6.50 to $25, with whole counterful at $8, $10, $12, $13.50, $15, $18, $20 and $22.

By all means consult us on Ulsters!

Are They Dangerous—the imitations of Pearline? How are you going to find out? A few washings with them won't show any damage. It's only after some months, when your clothes go to pieces suddenly, that the danger can be seen and proved.

Are you willing to risk your own clothes in the experiment? Use the original washing compound—Pearline. All the others are founded upon that. Will it pay to use these imitations? Figure up all that they may offer—prize packages, cheap prices, or whatever it may be—and put it against what you may lose.

Beware of imitations. 340 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

Full oft with starch and gloss serene,
The linen collar starts the morn;
Full oft at noontime it is seen
All wilted, wrinkled and forlorn.

That's what you must expect of such a collar; it's the linen of it. The stand-up collars won't stand up, and the turn-down collars will wilt down. The easy, cheap, and pleasant way out of this is to wear "CELLULOID" COLLARS AND CUFFS. These goods are made by covering linen collars or cuffs on both sides with "CELLULOID," thus making them strong and durable, and waterproof, not affected by heat or moisture. There are no other waterproof goods made this way, consequently none that can wear so well. When soiled simply wipe them off with a wet cloth. Every piece of the genuine is stamped like this:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Insist upon goods so marked if you expect full satisfaction, and if your dealer does not keep them, send direct to us enclosing amount and we will mail sample. State size, and whether a stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted. Collars 25c. each. Cuffs 50c. pair.

VACATION, BOX 58,
PALMER, MASS.

She was a fashionable woman at a fashionable resort, and she had a very common sort of a man for a husband, who stayed at home making the money necessary for her to splurge on. There was plenty of it, and she cut a swarth so wide that it provoked the envy and adverse criticism of her less fortunate sisters. The more so, as time went by and the husband never put in an appearance. One day one of these unpleasant flings came to her ears and she went after the flinger.

"What do you mean by talking about me?" she asked in a white heat.

"I never said anything that wasn't true," came back from the other woman.

"You did, too; you said I was living in very elegant style for a woman who had no visible means of support, when you know as well as I do that I have a husband."

The other woman smiled as only a woman can smile under similar circumstances.

"Huh," she sniffed; "he isn't visible, is he?" and she perked up her nose in the air and walked off.—Detroit Free Press.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton, Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhœa of long standing in six hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cases are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take.

W. A. McQuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles.

For a pain in the side or chest there is nothing so good as a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It affords prompt and permanent relief and if used in time will often prevent a cold from resulting in pneumonia. This same treatment is a sure cure for lame back.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

Man in the Moon.

Said the Raggedy Man, on a hot afternoon,
My
Sakes!
What a lot o' mistakes.
Some little folks makes on The Man in the Moon!
But people that's b'en up to see him, like me,
And calls on him frequent and intimutly,
Might drop a few facts that would interest you
Clean!
Through!—
If you wanted 'em to—
Some actual facts that might interest you!

O The Man in the Moon has a crick in his back;
Whee!
Whimm!
Ain't you sorry for him?
And a mole on his nose that is purple and black;
And his eyes are so weak that they water and run
If he dares to dream even he looks at the sun—
So he jes' dreams of stars, as the doctors advise—
My!
Eyes!
But isn't he wise—
To jes' dream of stars, as the doctors advise?

And The Man in the Moon has a boil on his ear—
Whee!
Whing!
What a singular thing!
I know! but these facts are authentic, me dear,—
There's a boil on his ear; and a corn on his chin—
He calls it a dimple—but dimples stick in—
Yet it might be a dimple turned over, you know!
Whang!
Ho!
Why, certainly so!—
It might be a dimple turned over, you know!

And The Man in the Moon has a rheumatic knee—
Gee!
Whizz!
What a pity that is!
And his toes have worked round where his heels ought to be—
So whenever he wants to go North he goes South,
And comes back with porridge-crumbs all round his mouth,
And he brushes them off with a Japanese fan,
Whing!
Whann!
What a marvelous man!
What a very remarkably marvelous man!

And The Man in the Moon, sighed the Raggedy Man!
Gits!
So!
Sullonesome, you know—
Up there by hisse'f sence creation began!—
That when I call on him and then come away,
He grabs me and holds me and begs me to stay,—
Till—Well! if it wasn't fer Jimmy-cum-jim,
Dadd!
Limb!
I'd go pardners with him—
Jes' jump my job here and be pardners with him!

A PASTURE WITH A ROCK IN IT.

"No, I don't go away summers," said good old Aunt Abby. "Oh, yes, I know! most folks do, the best of folks—ministers and all. And they tell me I'd ought to go; say it's refreshing and wakening and lifting and broadening. The church at the Hollow, and the one at the East road, and Mr. Edwards's all shut up for three weeks at a time in warm weather; and we don't have any Sunday school at all in July and August.

"Mr. Edwards says he gets more strength of body and mind, more help for his work and points for his sermons in his vacation at the seashore or the mountains than in all the year besides. I dare say. But I don't exactly see my way to going; there are things to see to here, and it costs something even at the cheapest places, and I've got a way of my own of having a vacation. I don't know but after all I'm lifted and broadened and strengthened as much, and get as many points out of it as the rest, with all their traveling. Maybe you'll smile when I tell you where I go, and what kind of a place it is. It's nothing in the world but a pasture with a rock in it.

"It isn't half a mile from my house, though I'm right in the busiest part of Factoryville, you know. You go down to the bobbin-mill, and then along north as far as Giles's store; then you turn to the left, and keep right straight ahead. And there 'tis—a good bit of pasture land and a big bowlder nigh about the middle of it.

"I came upon it two years ago. I hadn't lived here long, and wasn't used to a big bustling town like this; and when hot weather came I did just ache for fresh air and growing things and woodsy places.

"I went out one day, and walked, and walked, trying to find big trees and bushes and such things. By-and-by I saw something green ahead, and 'twas this. I stopped at the rail fence and looked over. Just at first it didn't seem very inviting when I thought of the woods at my old home, all dark and cool, with soft wet moss at your feet to step on, and brooks running along; and I says to myself, but out loud: 'It's nothing in the world but a pasture with a rock in it.'

"Well, do you know, I hadn't more than spoke those words than I seemed to see a wonderful meaning in them. I forgot all about the heat and the dusty road, and I crawled through the rails and went over to the bowlder, and sat down on the grass and I began to think.

"Why,' I said to myself, 'what's religion when you think of it, or, come to that, what's heaven itself, any more than that—a pasture with a rock in it?' I began to love the place right then and there. I can't tell you what it's been to me, and all the thinking and help and brand-new light I've found there. Points for sermons? Why, it's just bristly with them. I find a fresh one every time I go, and I haven't near come to the end yet.

"Some days I'll be so tired I can't do a mortal thing but just stretch myself full length out on the grass and keep still, and then'll come into my head that verse out of mother's favorite psalm, I guess 'twas your mother's too, it's most folk's mother's,—about 'He maketh me to lie down in green pastures.' Deary me! I don't want a better sermon; and again I'll get to looking at the grass. There's redtop, timothy, and a little herd's grass there, and it looks so pretty, shaking in the wind. And I recollect how our Lord took notice of all such little things. 'If God so clothe the grass of the field,' you know; and, before I know it, that's led me off into the most comforting, beautiful thinking.

"And then there's the rock; I can't hardly talk much about that, but you know what I mean. 'Green fields beyond the swelling flood,' as mother used to sing, is all sightly and beautful; but, after all, it's the Rock up there that's such a thing to lean on and look to. And down here in this world, too, lying down in green pastures, and watching the grass, is nice and comforting in fair days; but come to storms and rough weather, a rock is what we want after all.

"I believe I get more points out of that bowlder than I do out of the pasture. In a hot afternoon I get on the east side of it in the shade, and then I think of the 'man that shall be the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.' Sometimes there comes up a storm, with such pouring rain, and I creep under the lee of that bowlder, and keep safe and dry. And then I'm sure to get to thinking of the 'strong rock for the house of defence,' and of father's hymn,

'Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee.'

"Sometimes it's Moses hiding away in the rock to watch the Lord pass by, again it's the rod bringing water out of the rock; and lots of times it's about that tomb hewn out of a rock, that new sepulchre in a garden where-in was never man yet laid. Or, by spells I think of David keeping his father's sheep, and leading them out in the pastures; or Isaac going out into the fields at eventide, and that beautiful story of the shepherds abiding in the fields around Bethlehem.

"But after all, I come back most times to the thing itself, just as it struck me the first time I ever saw it—a pasture with a rock in it. So I don't go away in warm weather; I never expect to now. For I'm getting on in years, and there's plenty of things in my own little watering place here to last as long as I shall for poin's to think about, and for strengthening and lifting and widening. It won't be long at the most, before I go away for good, some summer. I shall be satisfied when I wake up there; I can't help hoping the place will be a little like a pasture, and I'm certain sure there'll be a Rock in it."—Sunday School Times.

"Speak, and you are a dead man!" The pistol barrel gleamed under the nose of the patient looking party, who was reclining on the combination sofa. "Do your worst!" he cried, leaping to his feet. "I will speak. I demand to know how in thunder it is you walk all through this house without falling over the rugs." But the burglar only laughed mockingly in his face and climbed out of the cellar window.—Detroit Tribune.

Marvellous Result's.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. Dr. King's New Discovery, for consumption, coughs and colds, each bottle guaranteed—Electric Bitters, the great remedy for liver, stomach and kidneys. Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world, and Dr. King's New Life Pills, which are a perfect pill. All these remedies are guaranteed to do just what is claimed for them, and the dealer whose name is attached herewith will be glad to tell you more of them. Sold at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

SHE DISCHARGED THE SERVANT.—The young husband was somewhat surprised when his wife came into the office. She opened the conversation at once.

"I want enough money to go out of town for a few days," she said, "and you will have to take your meals downtown for a few days."

"Why, what does this mean?"

"It means just this. I got a messenger boy to come to the house for Mary Ann, to tell her that she was wanted at her aunt's, and as soon as she got around the corner I shut up the house and locked it and ran away. When she comes back she won't find any one there. We don't owe her anything, so it is all right, and I wanted to discharge her, but you know I never would dare to tell her to go, and I knew you wouldn't dare, and don't you think your little wife knows pretty well how to manage? Say yes, now, or I'll break down and cry right here in the office."

Daughter—"What do you think, mamma! That strange gentleman who just got out when we were going through the tunnel kissed me!" Mother—"But, my child, why didn't you tell me at once, so that I could call him to account for it?" Daughter—"Why, you see, mamma, I thought—I thought—that we were coming to another tunnel!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

DOUBLE BREASTED SACK SUITS.

Our line of double breasted Sack Suits is the largest and most pretentious ever put on our tables—and that is saying a great deal, for the store has always shown a pretty excellent assortment. Here are Sack Suits at $8, $8.50, $10, and $12; made of Fine Black Cheviots and fancy Cassimeres, cut in the very latest style, and thoroughly well made. There is sterling value in every one of them.

FINE CUTAWAY SUITS.

Superb goods, these are—the finest productions of the best American makers. The materials are Clay Diagonals, Cheviots, Cassimeres, Scotch Woolen Mixtures and Undressed Worsteds. Nothing could be more perfect; style, fit, trimmings, workmanship—all are of the very best. If there is such a thing as rivaling custom work, it has been fully accomplished in these suits. The prices are $10, $12, $14, $16, $18 and $20.

OVERCOATS AND ULSTERS.

This is the place to learn what they are: Splendid garments—Blue and Black Beavers, Kerseys and Meltons—cut in the latest style, and made as a good overcoat should be—at $8.50 and $10 each. 'T isn't long since you were paying $10 and $12 for garments not nearly as fine as these.

There could be no greater value—no finer or more stylish Overcoats for young men and men—than our elegant line of Meltons and English Kerseys at $16, $18, $20, $22 and $25. These have extra wide velvet collars, and are first class in every way. The assortment here is practically unlimited. If you will look over the styles, and care anything about saving a handsome sum we can pretty nearly guess where your Overcoat or Ulster will be bought.

DOMESTIC LOVE.

O love of loves, to thy white hand is given
Of earthly happiness the golden key.
Thine are the joyous hours of winter's even,
When babies cling around their father's knee,
And thine the voice that, on the midnight sea,
Melts the rude mariner with thoughts of home,
Peopling the gloom with all he longs to see.
Spirit! I've built a shrine, and thou hast come,
And on its altar closed—forever closed thy plume. —Rev. George Croly.

MY MILKMAN.

It was a delicious morning, "such a one as dawns but once a season"—one of those days in early summer when one is glad only to be alive and breathing the fragrant air.

I was sitting on the side porch hulling strawberries and watching the big daisies nodding in the wind over by the fence when the milkman's bell rang. Mary was washing, and my mother called to me from the kitchen to get the milk. I took the milk pail and went slowly down the long path to the gate, more slowly because I hated the milkman, a dirty youth, most flirtatiously inclined.

It was an agreeable surprise to me when I reached the gate to find a new face behind the milk cans, a tired looking man, with a well cut profile and clean shaven face—clean shaven and clean.

I gave him the pail, saying, "Two quarts, please," quite sweetly, considering he was a milkman, but still in a tone which would show him, if he were observant, that I was unaccustomed to getting the milk and felt it rather beneath my dignity.

As he measured it out with the long dipper there was a funny little smile around his mouth and in his eyes which rather exasperated me, for I considered myself in no way an object of amusement for stray milkmen.

I was very dignified, therefore, in my manner and went back to the house with my head well in the air. When I found my small brother had decorated said head with a waving asparagus plume erect among my cherished curls, I wished I had tossed it less proudly, for I objected to being ridiculous even before a strange milkman.

That evening, when the bell rang, I offered to go for the milk. I had on a pretty white gown, and my hair was becomingly arranged. It was not that I cared about the milkman, even though he was "different" from others, but because no girl would like to be remembered looking like a plumed hearse. I had the pleasure, on reaching the wagon, of being complimented on my appearance by the flirtatious milkman whom I detested.

Young men were very few in the village that summer, and so my attention was attracted by this new variety of tradesman. I soon discovered that he came only on the morning round, and if I was at home I would wander around to the kitchen about time he was due and offer, in the most artistically unconscious manner in the world, to get the milk.

Our conversation for some weeks was limited to "How much?" and "Two quarts, please," or "Only one quart this morning," but one day, after a heavy thunderstorm, during which the lightning had struck a tree in our own yard, we broke through the trammels of trade and discussed electricity instead of milk.

I was charmed by his voice—low, cultured, pleasant. It was only an accident of birth which had given him such a voice, I told myself, but I confessed it a most charming accident.

After that we chatted a few moments every morning. I am even afraid the people on the next block had to wait very often for their milk.

I used to take myself to task vigorously for my growing interest in this gray eyed milkman, for I knew well enough that my position prevented my making a friend of him.

"Sylvia Russell," I said one morning, taking myself metaphorically by the shoulders, "how can you forget yourself so? Fancy asking him to dinner!"

I couldn't fancy it, but no more could I imagine him committing a solecism were he invited, so strongly did he impress one as a gentleman, in spite of the milk cans.

However, my self administered shaking led me to forego the pleasure of chatting with him that morning and to go for a walk to "the village" instead. As I strolled slowly along under the shadow of the thick maples I heard the milkman's bell, and straightway my traitor feet played me false and turned back in spite of me.

I heard a quick step behind me and then the voice of one of the "summer visitors," a young man I had met a few weeks before.

"What a busy person you are, Miss Russell! You seem in great haste."

"Oh, good morning, Mr. Merriman!" said I, slackening my pace. "I didn't know I was walking so rapidly. I am taking a walk for lack of other occupation."

"May I join you?" asked Mr. Merriman, timing his step to mine.

"Certainly," I returned, trying to look unconscious. The milk wagon was standing at the corner, and the milkman, a tall, well built fellow, stood looking up and down the street, evidently waiting for some one. My heart sank to my boots. Would he bow to me from that wretched wagon? I was ashamed of the thought, since the grocer and the butcher always bowed to me from their delivery wagons without disturbing me, but I hated to have him there. It seemed no place for him. I wondered if he, too, was conscious of that. Then I turned hot and cold. The milkman gave one quick glance at me and my companion and turned away without giving me an opportunity to bow. I was terribly hurt and saw how foolish my pride for him was when it appeared in his actions too. I did not hear what Mr. Merriman was saying. I only knew that the milkman had not spoken to me, and I, the judge's daughter, felt like crying because of it.

"Rather a good looking fellow, that milkman," remarked Mr. Merriman carelessly. "I don't think I ever saw him before. He can't amount to much, driving a milk cart at his age."

I realized the truth of this remark.

"Perhaps he can't get anything else to do."

"He can't be very brilliant, then, but of course one doesn't expect much from people of that class."

"What class?"

"Why, his, of course. I had no idea you took so much interest in him," laughed Mr Merriman, seeing my disapproving face. "I dare say he has a widowed mother with nine small children to support."

"Then you shouldn't make fun of him," I said tartly. "There is no disgrace in driving a milk wagon well."

At my last word Mr. Merriman shouted, and after a moment I laughed, too, but I think he found me in rather a bad temper, though of course he did not connect it with the milkman, for he left me at our gate and did not suggest going in.

I ran to my room and locked the door and cried a little, though I had no idea why, "for, of course, Sylvia," I said to myself, "you don't care what a milkman does."

"You need not be afraid, Miss Russell," said the milkman next morning, "of my speaking to you from the wagon when you are with friends. I have too much respect for myself."

"Oh, surely you don't think"— I stopped suddenly.

"I never think, Miss Russell. It takes all of my time to look after my widowed mother and the 12—or is it nine?—babies."

Then I knew he had heard Mr. Merriman. I blushed furiously and held up my hand for the pail. I think he saw I was hurt, for he touched my fingers gently as he gave it to me. His touch sent a thrill all through me, but I drew away my hand quickly. Just then Mrs. Sage and two young ladies drove by and stared rather inquisitively, I thought. I was tempted to run into the house when I saw them coming, but conquered the impulse.

When they had passed, he looked at me with the little quizzical look he wore so often.

"Why didn't you go?" he asked.

"Where?" blushing uncomfortably.

"Oh, anywhere! You looked like a sweet 'pea on tiptoe for a flight.'"

He drove on without waiting for my answer. Oh, Sylvia, Sylvia, a milkman quoting poetry to you, and you did not snub him!

How I struggled against the fascination the man had for me during those summer weeks, and how fast my heart learned to beat when I heard that dreadful bell which he rang, ringing as a child would, with the greatest amusement on his face at his own performance! I was sure he knew I would come when he rang, and I resented it, but I tried staying in the house for two or three days and missed seeing him so much that I went after that in spite of my resentment.

He was such a queer fellow. I never could understand how he could be what he was. We discussed a great variety of subjects while he measured the milk—poetry, religion, politics, novels, flowers, the weather, woman's rights, the milk—and on all subjects but the last I found him surprisingly well informed. On the subject of milk and cows I thought him amazingly ignorant.

We were speaking one day of the ferns in my fernery, and he told me where I could find a great deal of maidenhair.

"It is not a long drive," he said. "If you would allow me"— He stopped, flushed a little, then laughed. "Oh, I beg your pardon; I quite forgot." He gathered up the reins and drove on.

Was he going to ask me to drive with him—me, Sylvia Russell? Oh, if he only were not a milkman or I a judge's daughter! I did want to go with him to find the ferns dreadfully.

I tried to think of some gentle way of hinting to him that his occupation was not worthy of him, but I was a wee bit afraid of those keen gray eyes of his. At last one morning I blurted out without a particle of appositeness:

"Are you always going to drive a milk wagon?"

He looked down at me, with a little smile.

"I don't know," he said. "Don't you want me to?"

This was carrying war into the enemy's camp with a vengeance. It fairly took away my breath.

"I don't know why I should want you to do or not to do things," I said stiffly. "It was only on your own account."

"You should not, only—I thought, perhaps"— he hesitated, looking a little hurt.

"It don't seem a very lofty occupation," I said ungrammatically.

"But the widow and 11 babies, you know. They don't give a man a chance to rise." He said that with hardly becoming gravity, but I felt rebuked.

"Don't you think—if you were to try—you might"— I looked up, found his eyes on me and couldn't go on, though he did not seem angry or hurt.

"I have been thinking of going to college soon," he said after a moment's pause.

"Oh, how charming!" I cried. "I am so glad for you. When—but the widow and children—your mother, you know, how can you"— Then I saw he was laughing.

"There is no widowed mother," he said.

"And no children?"

"And no children."

"Then you can go, but I thought you said"—

"Mr. Merriman said it!" he interrupted.

"How did you know his name?" I inquired curiously.

"I asked, of course. My tongue was given me for that purpose."

"Are you prepared for the exams?" I asked.

"Not—not quite," with a queer look.

"If I could help you," I suggested. "I've been to college myself. I'm very good in mathematics."

"Oh, thank you!" he said, with what seemed overstrained enthusiasm. "I'll get through all right, but if I should get stuck in a 'sum' you'll help me out?"

"Yes, indeed! Do you study alone?"

"Quite alone."

"Isn't it awfully hard?"

"I'm afraid I couldn't study very well—together." He gave me a quick look to see if I understood him. I pretended not to notice.

"I'm sorry to hurry you," I said, "but don't you think Mrs. Morris is waiting for her milk?" He said something about Mrs. Morris under his breath, but prepared to drive on.

"I do so hope you will get on all right," I said. No one was in sight, and I held out my hand to him impulsively. He gave it the warmest little squeeze—not a bit like a milkman.

"Don't you think, Sylvia," said my mother, 'that you talk too much to that young man? I dare say he is very nice, but what would your father say?"

"I don't know what he could say, mother. I'm not going to elope with him, you know," I went on, laughing a little nervously, the memory of our last chat being still fresh "He is going to college, and I'm—encouraging him."

"I'm afraid you are, Sylvia," said my mother, with a shake of the head.

I did not go for the milk next morning. I think I felt rather guilty. I made gingerbread and packed a basket to take Bob and Bess to the sound for supper, a treat their youthful souls dearly loved.

After dinner we started in the phaeton—Bob, Bess, the basket and I.

"Now, infants," I said as we jogged along the road toward the sound, "you are both to watch for hoppy toads, and the first one we catch we will fry for lunch unless, perchance, we find a stray orthoceratite, under which circumstances we will have a stew."

"Do hoppy toads taste good?" asked Bob.

"Delicious," I responded. "They will appeal forcibly to your gastronomic taster, Bob."

"I think I like orstites better," said Bess.

These small relatives of mine were devoted to me and my conversation, principally, I think, because I used large words. They were very fond of those and understood them well enough. What they didn't understand they enjoyed more, on the same principle that their elders enjoy Wagner or Browning, I suppose.

When we reached the sound, I tied Prince to a fence in the shade and settled myself in the shadow of a clump of bay bushes, where I could see the children down on the beach.

The tide was out, and Bob and Bess scrambled down the cliff to the water's edge, where they amused themselves "scrunching" barnacles on the wet rocks and seeing how far they could walk without slipping in, which they did every three or four steps, with shrieks of laughter.

When lunchtime came, I whistled on my fingers for the children, a useful accomplishment taught me by Bob. They came climbing up, dirty, hungry, with handkerchiefs full of skates' eggs, periwinkle spawn, pebbles and sea moss.

I wiped their faces and set about laying the table. Bess decorated the cloth, and Bob turned handsprings in the grass. I had packed rather more lunch than usual, and the sight of two fried cake men elicited shrieks of delight from Bob. He insisted on saying grace, which he did with one hand on the bigger man, for fear Bess should snatch it while he was engaged in religious observances.

When we opened our eyes, there stood the milkman watching us. He had a book in his hand and looked even more surprised to see us than we were at his appearance.

"Won't you take supper with us?" I said, forgetting that he was a milkman. He hesitated a moment, then accepted. Bess looked askance at him for a moment, for she was rather shy with strangers, but was soon amicably offering him an arm of her fried man

While he was dismembering the victim I stole a glance at him.

He looked thoroughly high bred. His clothes were loose, but of fine material and unquestionably well cut. His shoes and the feet within them were faultless in size and shape, though the shoes were rather the worse for wear.

"Pretty old, aren't they?" said he. He had a way of divining my thoughts which was to me marvelous.

"Not very," I returned, smiling, and he again turned his attention to Bess.

When the children had finished lunch, nothing could keep them beside me, though I tried my best, for without the excuse of the milk I found conversation with the milkman embarrassing.

"Miss Russell," he said, looking away from me over the water, "I am going away tomorrow. Won't you try to forget I am the milkman and remember me only as a friend who—who—likes you very, very much?"

"Tomorrow?' I echoed. "Surely not tomorrow!"

"Yes, tomorrow!" He was looking at me keenly. "You will miss our little chats over the milk?'

"So much." I was beginning to realize how much, now I knew he was really going.

"And now you will talk to Smith?"

"You know I will not."

My eyes filled with tears. I looked away from him to conceal them.

"You will let me thank you for the happiness knowing you has been to me," he went on after a moment's pause. "I shall miss you so much."

"It has been a pleasure to me, too," I replied a little formally.

He leaned toward me entreatingly.

"You have been so good, so sweet, to me all summer, won't you forget I am a milkman just for this little half hour?"

"I always forget it," I said gently.

"You never do. You talk for a few moments, and then you remember, and you freeze at once. I don't blame you, but—tell me—is that the only reason? If I were not a milkman, would you despise me still?"

"I don't despise you now."

"But I mean, do you think—do you think you could like me a little, Miss Russell—Sylvia—I must tell you—I have no right—but I love you. Don't be angry with me. I am going tomorrow. I could not help speaking—but—you won't look at me! Are you so angry?" He put his hand pleadingly on my shoulder. I could not answer him. I was so surprised, so happy. I only turned my cheek against his hand. He seemed astonished for a moment, then caught me in his arms.

"Sylvia, Sylvia, darling!"

We didn't say much for awhile, but by and by he said:

"Sylvia, do you think you can bear a severe blow?"

I thought I could endure anything with his arms around me, but a vision of the widow and nine children suddenly loomed up in the distance, and I said faintly:

"I don't know."

"Try, dear. It's this: I don't think you quite understand about me. Sylvia, you see, I'm not a milkman."

"Not a milkman!" I echoed.

"You see, I offered to drive the milk wagon one day when Smith was ill. I board there, you know. It wasn't much fun until a little woman, with an asparagus plume in her hair, came prancing down the path for the milk."

"But, but—afterward?"

"Oh, afterward, I borrowed the milk wagon at the corner every morning and drove it a block. I wasted a great deal of Smith's time, Sylvia."

"Then what are you?" I gasped, holding his arm tightly.

"Only a professor," he said, with mock humility.

"Of what?"

"Mathematics."

"Where?"

"At X. college."

"Then you have cheated me. I'll never forgive you." I drew away from him and began to sob.

"Please forgive me"

"A professor!" I repeated amid my tears.

"Sylvia, don't cry! What is the trouble? I thought you would be pleased, Sylvia." He was plainly nonplused.

"A professor of mathematics, and I offered to help you with your 'sums!' How could you?" I wailed.

"And so you shall, Sylvia. You shall do them all if you like. Don't be angry any more, Sylvia. I'm going tomorrow."

"Must you go?" I cried, putting out my hand to him, and so I tacitly agreed to help him with all his sums.

When the children came from the shore, the ex-milkman packed a couple of very sleepy children, a very empty hamper and a very happy girl into the phaeton ready for the drive home.

"I'll see the judge in the morning, sweetheart," he said and gave my hand a tiny squeeze as he handed me the reins and bade me "Good night."—Kate Gray Richardson in Short Stories.

Edison's Fun.

Edison is a great lover of practical jokes. Once upon a time when the phonograph was more of a novelty than it is at the present time he hid one of these machines in a grandmother's clock which stood in a guest chamber. One night as a friend was preparing to get into bed he suddenly heard a voice exclaim, "Eleven o'clock; one hour more." He crept into bed and lay perfectly still, frightened out of his life and hardly daring to breathe. At midnight he heard the same voice again exclaim, "Twelve o'clock; prepare to die." This was more than mortal flesh could stand, and springing out of bed, with a shriek, he flew out of the room into the arms of Edison and another friend, who had been sitting up awaiting his appearance.—Northwest Magazine.

He Couldn't Help It.

"How do you feel?" asked a sympathetic bystander as a trolley victim opened his eyes.

"Quite run down," whispered the humorist, who even in his agony could not let a chance slip, and the crowd, seeing the humor of the joke, laughed merrily until the ambulance arrived.—Brooklyn Eagle.

HUNTING THE SEA LION.

Herds of Them Driven For Miles to the Slaughtering Ground.

At the close of the fur seal killing season the natives proceed to lay in their winter's supply of meat. A number of picked men go to Northeast point, steal down to the shore in the dead of night and crawl along at the water's edge until a line of men is disposed between the sleeping herd and the water. At a given signal the men all spring to their feet, yell, discharge pistols and terribly frighten the sleeping sea lions Those that lie with their heads toward the water plunge forward and quickly disappear, but those headed landward naturally enough start forward away from the uproar. Being continually urged on, they soon find themselves fairly inward, with all chance of escape cut off.

The groups of from 20 to 50 caught thus each night are driven up on to the level ground and held until from 300 to 500 are taken, when the grand drive begins. Then the whole herd is actually driven ten miles overland to the village. According to the condition of the weather the drive requires from six days to three weeks, but in the end every sea lion who does not die of heat and exhaustion on the road actually carries his own carcass to market.

This animal yields about the same class of products as the walrus, and its flesh forms the principal food of all the natives of the fur seal islands. The skin is thickly covered with coarse, stiff hair of a brownish yellow color, but it is destitute of "fur," and hence is of no value in our market.

Steller's sea lion is about twice the size of the fur seal, the old male being from 10 to 11 feet in total length, from 8 to 9 feet in girth, and it weighs on an average about 1,200 pounds. The females are not quite half as large in actual bulk as the males. Although cowardly in their disposition toward man, the males are among themselves the fiercest fighters in the world. It is hard to obtain an old specimen whose neck is not criscrossed all over by long deep gashes or old scars, made by the powerful teeth of jealous rivals.—St. Nicholas.

A STRATEGIC SON-IN-LAW.

How He Brought About an Exchange of Prisoners and Peace.

"One of the funniest experiences I remember of my boyhood times was that of a couple in our neighborhood who ran away and got married," said Newt Moore. "After the bridal tour was over the couple went to the young lady's home to make peace with the old folks. The young lady's father met them at the door, and taking his daughter by the arm thrust her into a room and locked her up, and gathering up the shotgun ordered his son-in-law off the place and threatened his life if he ever returned. The young man went home and sat down and did some hard thinking.

"Finally he sent word to the young lady's mother to come and get her daughter's clothes and and everything that belonged to her. She did so, and the young man held his mother-in-law as a prisoner and hostage for the return of his wife. He, too, took a shotgun and stood guard.

"The second day after the father of the young lady came over to negotiate a surrender of prisoners. As soon as he came in sight he waved his white handkerchief in token of a truce. The result was there was a mutual exchange of prisoners. The young man made such a good impression upon his mother-in-law during her captivity that all differences were patched up, and the hatchet was buried."—St. Joseph Herald.

A Great Well.

At Bourne, in Lincolnshire, at a depth of 66 feet, water impregnated with iron was encountered, but this chalybeate liquid was excluded as the tubes were carried deeper. Some 12 feet lower the main spring was tapped, and the water rose very slowly up the tube, and it was 24 hours before the water overflowed. As the depth increased so did the volume of the ascending current, and by the time the well had reached the depth of 100 feet the flow was 1,300 gallons per minute, or 1,872,000 gallons per day.

Although this was an enormous flow, yet the engineers thought that by going a little deeper a still larger supply would be available. Numerous cases are on record where, under similar circumstances, the deepening of the well has resulted in complete failure. It will be readily understood that in such instances increased boring has carried the well through the nonporous rock upon which the water bearing layer rested, thus allowing the water to escape. With the Bourne well, however, the deepening of the bore hole had the desired effect, for at a depth of 120 feet the outflow increased to 1,800 gallons per minute, or no less than 2,592,000 gallons per day.—Chambers' Journal.

First Use of Potatoes In Ireland.

In the garden adjoining his house at Youghal Raleigh planted the first potatoes ever grown in Ireland. The vegetable was brought to him from the little colony which he endeavored to establish in Virginia. The colonists started in April, 1585, and Thomas Harriot, one of their number, wrote a description of the country in 1587. He describes a root which must have been the potato:

"Openank are a kind of roots of round form, some of the bignesse of walnats, some farre greater, which are found in moist & marish grounds growing many together one by another in ropes, as though they were fastened with a string. Being boiled they are very good meat."

The Spaniards first brought potatoes to Europe, but Raleigh was undoubtedly the first to introduce the plant into Ireland.—St. Nicholas.

Wonders of the Eye.

In an article on the human eye written by Dr. Austin Flint the following passage occurs: "Viewed as an optical instrument, the human eye may well be called perfect, for it is an apparatus contained in a globe less than an inch in diameter, in which is produced an image, practically perfect in form and color, and which can be accurately adjusted almost instantly for every distance from five inches to infinity, which is movable in every direction, has an area small enough for the detection of the most minute details and at the same time large enough for the appreciation of large objects, and which enables us to see all shades of color and to estimate distance, solidity, and, to some extent, the consistency of objects." And yet this wonderful instrument, perhaps the most varied in its capabilities of any part of the body, is persistently misused and neglected. Is it any wonder that some day nature resents this treatment and leaves the offenders in total and perpetual darkness?—New York Ledger.

The Morphine Habit In France.

Dr. Jules Rochard, in The Union Medicale, draws a gloomy picture of the increase of the morphine habit in France and elsewhere. The habit, he finds, becomes incurable at the end of six months of indulgence. The fair sex and the doctors are, in his opinion, most deeply addicted to morphine. He draws an unpleasant comparison between the behavior of each kind of delinquent. Women, he says, delight in declaring how they indulge in this vice and show ornamental hypodermic syringes to their friends. Dr. Notet states that a lady, having broken the needle of her syringe in a remote country village, wounded her skin with scissors and thrust the stump of the needle into the wound, injecting in this manner till a new syringe arrived from Paris.—London Public Opinion

HOW THEY MET.

'Twas In a Crowd, and the Place Was the Keeley Institute.

There have been many strange experiences gone through by the worshipers of the Keeley institute in Dwight, Ills., more so perhaps three or four years ago than at present, when there are so many branches established in different states. One of these experiences happened some three years ago.

There was a brainy, brilliant crowd of literary, fashionable, thespian and legal lights there who had all gathered to secure a respite from the cravings for liquor, opium, morphine and other habits. Among them was an old codger dressed in heavy, dust covered cowhide boots, with hickory shirt and butternut overalls, who kept apart from the rest of the throng and seemed to feel somewhat out of place in the gay and better dressed crowd.

One evening a delegation of about 700 all told, including perhaps 250 ladies, went down to the depot to see the "jag train" come in with the new arrivals on board. One of the first to leave the cars was a handsome fellow of perhaps 35, who was carrying all he could navigate under, and who was feeling decidedly happy. Catching sight of the sedate old unknown, who had accompanied the crowd to the depot, he said to his companion, who was trying to keep him within bounds:

"Lemme go, lemme go, I tell you! There's a man I want to see."

Then he ambled toward the hickory shirt and extended his hand with mock dignity, saying:

"How'sh yer honor? I'm glad to see yer."

By this time the bystanders had caught on that something was going on and began crowding around the maudlin newcomer and the sedate old gentleman. Turning round to the crowd, who were eagerly looking on, the tipsy candidate said:

"P'raps you folks don't know it, but thish the chief justice of the state of ——, and, by Jove, I'm the attorney general."

After that the chief justice resume his ordinary garb and proved to be one of the most companionable of the brilliant coterie gathered at Dwight.—Minneapolis Journal.

THE COW QUESTION.

It Is Discussed From Both Sides of the Garden Fence.

We have received a communication on the subject of the town cow, and though it is well written and properly signed we do not like to give it space, and for several reasons. The cow question has done more to embitter life, separate families and destroy the peace and quietness of entire communities than all others. Like other questions, there are two sides to the cow argument—the cow's side and the other side. Those who own cows are on the cow's side; those who don't own cows and do own gardens and shrubbery are on the other side and there to stay.

Still we never could see why the cow so craved a diet of choice roses and valuable shrubbery. Her butter or milk always goes at the same price. Columbia river water is better than all the roses to enhance the value of her yield. Why shouldn't she run at large if she wants to? Some people neglect their plants and bushes, and the cow trims them up. She also reminds the man of the house that he has left the front gate open and does it delicately, because she always wakes the man's wife up first, or the hired girl, and she tells him, and he gets up and exhibits his pajamas to the neighbors by the light of the silver moon; also his temper, and the latter can best be seen on a dark night.—Dallas Chronicle.

Some Puritanism Left.

Culture and skepticism and the growth of luxury and refinement are no doubt affecting English character, but to an extent which only seems considerable because the cultivated and skeptical, the refined and luxurious minority exaggerate it. The exaggeration is apt to deceive, because the classes which have outgrown the influence of Puritanism are disproportionately vocal, as they are relatively small, while the classes among whom that influence is still dominant are a virtually voiceless multitude.

But the impartial student of the national character is constantly being confronted with evidence to the fact that the process of so called 'emancipation" has reached but the merest fringe of the community, and that the great bulk of middle class Englishmen are still, to all intents and purposes, the true spiritual descendants of a Puritan stock.—"Social England," H. D. Traill

Raleigh's Personal Courage.

One instance of Raleigh's personal courage may be mentioned—a courage that was afterward so conspicuous in many a sea fight. At one time, when he had only five or six men with him, he was surprised by the seneschal of Imokilly at the head of 14 horses and threescore kerns (light armed men) at a ford between Youghal and Cork. Raleigh himself forced his way across the ford. His Irish guide "shifted for himself." The horse of one of his followers fell midstream, and his rider would assuredly have been killed had not Raleigh returned, and in the face of great odds rescued him and waited, pistol in hand, until the rest of his little band were safely over.—St. Nicholas.

One Sure Method.

There is a story of a medical student before a board of examiners to whom the question was put again and again of how he would produce perspiration in a patient. He proposed all sorts of things, to which one importunate examiner always replied:

"Well, and if that would not do?"

At last the poor young man, driven to his wits' end, exclaimed, "I would send him before this board to be examined, and I warrant that would make him perspire."—Liverpool Mercury.

RENTING TYPEWRITERS.

The Business Is Profitable, Although Many of the Machines Are Stolen.

There are probably a dozen places in this city where the business of renting new and secondhand typewriters is carried on. Most of these concerns do an excellent business, and many of their lists of machines out on rental average from 150 to 200 names. Nearly all the machines rented are those of a high grade which have been tested by experience in business offices and in shorthand schools.

A strictly new typewriter seldom rents for less than $5 a month, while one that is only slightly damaged brings $4 a month. A machine that can be hired for $3 is considered fit for only a "plug" operator, and such typewriters are rented rarely.

There are upward of 70 shorthand and typewriting schools regularly conducted in this city, with classes of from 10 to 200 students. This does not include the public day and evening schools, numerous public libraries and general educational institutions where such things are taught and scores of private instructors all over the city. Typewriter manufacturers in many instances supply schools with complete outfits of their own machines free of charge as a means of increasing the number of operators thereon, for as soon as a graduate obtains employment he naturally prefers the same kind of typewriter he has used at school. Some operators have to provide machines for themselves. A large number begin by renting a machine, proposing to buy later. Frequently they fail to do so, and the books of a Barclay street house which derives a handsome monthly income from rents of machines show that it is a common occurrence for twice the value of a typewriter to be paid in monthly rentals.

It is not customary for these dealers to require security for the return of a type writer other than a written agreement stipulating that it shall be delivered to the owners at the expiration of the period of rental in as good condition as when first received, barring the effect of ordinary usage. Hence it is not surprising that typewriter thieves are very common.

"Stealing a typewriter," said the man who looks after the rental department of a large typewriter house in Broadway, "is grand larceny and a state prison offense, yet this and the further fact that an immense number of these culprits have already been sent to penitentiaries in different states do not deter dozens of others every month from making like thefts. We have a standing list of from 100 to 200 typewriters that have been stolen from our branch offices and agents in various sections of the country. Every typewriter has its own number, which cannot be effaced, and whenever we hear that a machine is missing we immediately communicate its number to our representatives in this country and abroad, with instructions to seize the machine when found and to prosecute the person holding it. It is only a matter of time when any typewriter will need adjusting and repairing and will be taken to a repairer, and then the thief is easily apprehended. Thus we actually lose few or no machines."—New York Sun.

Exploit of a Soldier Who Gained Information at Gettysburg.

Dr. H. N. Howard, who was assistant surgeon of the Tenth Maine infantry, related the following incident:

"On the second day of the battle of Gettysburg the Twelfth corps was on the right of the Union line. The First division (General Williams') occupied the extreme right at the foot of Culp's hill, where slight earthworks had been thrown up. In the afternoon the enemy appeared to be massing on our left. General Meade ordered the First division of the Twelfth corps over to the support of the left. This left the Tenth Maine occupying the extreme right of the Union lines alone.

"The enemy doubtless discovered the movement, as after dark it was found that they were moving by the left flank down the ravine back of Culp's hill. This was reported to General Slocum. He lost no time in informing General Meade, who ordered a trusty scout to be sent out at once to ascertain the facts. Captain Beardsley called for a volunteer for the desperate service, the night being black as ink. Henry Kallock threw off his chevrons, and in the blouse of a private soldier announced himself ready. Kallock was first sergeant of Company D, as brave as he was daring and efficient. With dread as to the result, Captain Beardsley sent him out into the darkness. At midnight the brave sergeant returned and reported that he had penetrated the lines of the enemy, who were then occupying the works but a few hours before vacated by General Williams' division.

"This was at once reported to General Meade, who ordered General Williams to return. Under cover of the darkness the movement was noiselessly accomplished. They approached so near as to hear the whispered voices of the enemy within the intrenchments and there remained until the first light of dawn discovered to the enemy the immediate vicinity of the Union forces. Then was initiated the bloody assault upon Culp's hill, where, in indiscriminate heaps, lay the foes of either army. When the sun went down, Old Glory waved in triumph over the little earthworks on the extreme right of our lines, announcing the first victory gained in the battle of Gettysburg.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Why He Knew.

Mr. Timothy Cole, the engraver, gives an account in a private letter of an amusing experience in the Louvre: "While I was working on 'The Fish Market,' by Van Ostade, an elderly lady and a young gentleman stopped in front of the picture. They were much attracted by what I was doing, and the lady asked her companion if he knew what I was about. He very readily answered that I was etching. 'But,' she responded, more attentively regarding me as I engraved, 'he appears to be cutting on wood.' 'Etching on wood,' was the offhand return. I could not repress a smile as I worked on, and they watched me in silence. 'I should think,' resumed the old lady, 'that if he made a false cut or mistake it would be the ruin of all he had done?' 'Oh, no,' was the nonchalant reply, 'all he would have to do is to scratch it out and do it over again.' Here my involuntary glance of surprise, as I looked up from my block, met the inquiring eyes of the questioner. It was time for me to explain, which I did, correcting the gentleman's erroneous idea—evidently derived from seeing the process of etching—of a wood engraver's being able to remedy anything he had once cut by scratching it out. We then fell into conversation, and I learned that the young man was an art critic, which accounted for the confidence with which he uttered his opinions."—San Francisco Argonaut.

WHAT SHE KNEW.

An Arkansas Woman Who Didn't Tell Too Much at a Time.

"Madam, I am looking for a stray horse," said a man, stopping at an Arkansas house and leaning his chin on the top rail of the fence. "Have you seen anything of him?"

"How long has he been gone?" asked the woman, leaning against the door facing and regarding the man with that inquiring look of curiosity which in the country so plainly speaks of the scarcity of strangers.

"Been gone about two days."

"What sort of a horse was he?"

"Roan, with white fetlocks."

"How old was he?"

"About 10 years."

"Good work nag, I reckon?"

"First rate."

"Are you certain that he has white fetlocks?"

"Certainly. Have you seen anything of him?"

"No, I ain't seen him."

"Have you heard any one speak of seeing him?"

"Yes, since you mention it, I think I have. I heard a man talk about seeing a roan horse with white fetlocks."

"That's my horse. Do you know the man's name?"

"No."

"Where do you suppose I can find him?"

"You can find him out here at the stable."

The stranger went to the stable, looked around, hallooed and returned to the fence.

"He's not there."

"Not now."

"Didn't you know he wasn't there before I went?"

"Yes, I knew he wasn't there before you went."

"Then what did you send me there for?"

"To see him. I knowed he'd be there agin you arrive."

"I'll be blamed if I understand you."

"Now, look here, stranger, you can't make me tell a lie. You axed me if I seed the horse, and I said no. You axed me if I heerd anybody speak of the horse, and I said yes. You axed me whar you would find the man, and I told you. You went thar and"—

"But who was the man?"

"Yourself, stranger."

And she turned away to rock a "dugout" cradle, while the stranger, shoving down a panel of fence in his anger, turned away and sauntered down the road.—Detroit Sun.

An Extra Heavy Fish.

Frank Buckland, who was my cousin, told me this story. He belonged to a fishing club on the Thames, which held its meetings once a week, and the chairman for the evening was the one who had caught the heaviest fish. On one occasion a Mr. Jones was the fortunate individual. It was the first time that he had earned the honor, and he was very proud of it, though his prize fish had only been a barbel. One of the members of the club was unable to stay for dinner and asked Jones for the fish to take home with him, as it was not to form part of the menu. He consented, though rather unwillingly, and nothing was heard of the matter till the next meeting, when Buckland chanced to be present.

"A curious thing happened about that barbel which Jones gave me last Saturday," observed its recipient. "It had swallowed a little pike."

"You will not make me swallow that," observed Buckland confidently. "A barbel could not do it. Its conformation forbids it."

"You may theorize as you like," returned the other, "but I must be allowed to believe the evidence of my senses. I saw the jack taken out of the barbel with my own eyes."

"I don't believe it," said Buckland.

The conversation, in fact, was growing very warm, when Jones broke in with: "Don't quarrel, gentlemen. You are both of you right. The fact is, I was so afraid that somebody might catch a heavier fish than I that I poked the little jack down the barbel's throat with my fishing rod to make him weigh more."—James Payn in Contemporary Review.

Railroad Speed.

In high speeds the United States seems just now to hold the world's records. Neither England nor any other country in the world has any trains as fast, for the distance, as the Empire State express, which runs 440 miles at 50.7 miles an hour, including four stops, or as fast for the distance as the defunct exposition flier of last summer, which ran 964 miles at 48.2 miles an hour, including nine stops.

Among the very fast special runs we find the following pretty authentic records of performances in the United States, which, so far as I know, have not been equaled in England since a run made on the Great Western, in 1848, of 53 miles at 68 miles an hour, and that was not up to the best of those given here: September, 1891, on the New York Central, New York to East Buffalo, 436 miles, at 59.6 miles an hour, including three stops; 1892, same railroad, 21½ miles at the rate of 72.7 miles an hour, no stops; Pennsylvania railroad, 1891, Jersey City to Washington, 227 miles, 54.3 miles an hour, two stops; New York Central, 1893, 80.4 miles at 68.5 miles an hour, no stops.—Scribner's Magazine.

Easy to Work.

"I told the peddler to carry 75 cents' worth of potatoes into the basement, and when he did it I gave him a $5 bill."

This was Mrs. Fifty-second street.

"He gave me a 25 cent piece and then counted four $1 bills. I don't see now what made him so nervous, poor man. He wet his finger and thumb and lifted up the ends of the four bills over and over until I lost patience and just took the money from his hands and went into the house with it. When I happened to want some more money, I discovered that he had given me only three $1 bills, one of them folded so that both ends were between the ends of the other two. You see, he had counted each of those two ends for a dollar. Think how badly he'll feel when he discovers it! He may even think I suspect he did it purposely to cheat me. When do you think he will return it?"

"When flimflammers have grown honest," replied Mr. Fifty-second street, and his wife wondered what that had to do with it.—New York Sun.

Earning It.

There was no one at the table save the landlady and Mr. Skaggs, and Mr. S. was doing his level best trying to cut the piece of steak on his plate.

"Mr. Skaggs," said the lady firmly, "when are you ever going to pay your board bill?"

"Ma'am?" responded Mr. Skaggs in a tone of surprise.

"When are you going to pay your board bill?"

"I didn't know I had to," he said as he looked reproachfully at the steak. "I thought I was working it out," and once more he resumed his labors.—Detroit Free Press.

Modest.

Lady—Well, what do you want?

Tramp—Me and me pal's left a dispute to you, mim.

Lady—What is the dispute?

Tramp—As to whether you looks more like Mrs. Langtry or Helen of Troy. We had a bet of a lunch on it, mim, and if you'd kindly decide the bet and loan us the lunch we'd be much obliged.—London Quiver.

Difference.

"I hear," said the clam, "that you are going in for Christian socialism."

"You have been misinformed," averred the oyster. "It is church socialism that I expect to figure in."—Indianapolis Journal.

Concord, N. H., was originally called by an Indian name, Musketacook, "Dead Stream. It was changed to Runeford in honor of a prominent settler, then to the present name in honor of the settlement of an old land dispute.

An Expensive Wife.

"Mr. Skinflint, I have brought the account for your late wife's funeral. The expenses amount in all to £4 5s."

—Truth.

Uncle Tobias' Case Was Different.

"Twenty-five years ago," said the man in the mackintosh, "my Uncle Tobias, down in Macoupin county, made a vow he wouldn't cut his hair until General John I. Rinaker was elected governor of Illinois. He has kept it faithfully all these years, and he's a sight. I don't suppose you've ever seen a man that's a match for him in the matter of hair."

"I've seen nearly a dozen such men in my time," said the man with the goggles on. "There was a fellow named Howellton over in Missouri that vowed he wouldn't shave or cut his hair till John C. Fremont was elected president. He's alive yet and going around with hair and beard more than two feet long. Then there was"—

"I knew a man named Hughitt, down somewhere in Illinois," broke in the man in the slouch hat, "who made a vow of the same kind. When I saw him last, he had at least a peck of hair on his head. Over in Indiana"—

"I was well acquainted with a fellow of the name of Grimshaw, down in La Salle county," interrupted the man who had his feet on the table, "that registered on oath in 1869 he wouldn't cut his hair till Elizabeth Cady Stanton was elected president of the United States. He has a tangle on his head now that would fill a half bushel basket."

"You mean well, gentlemen," said the first speaker, "but none of those freaks you have mentioned can trot in the same class as my Uncle Tobias."

"I suppose his hair is about four feet long."

"That doesn't begin to describe him."

"Five feet?"

"You'll have to come again."

"Well, six feet, then. I've heard of one or two men with hair as long as that."

"You don't come anywhere near it."

"Confound it!" exclaimed the man in the baggy trousers, "how much hair has he got on his head anyhow?"

"Gentlemen," replied the man in the mackintosh, edging toward the door, "he's as bald as a glass marble."—Chicago Tribune.

If We Only Could See.

Our best acquaintance with the wonders of the visible universe must always be held provisional. The organ wherewith we are aware of it is an imperfect one, insensible to the colors beyond the red and the violet which certain insects appear to perceive. Light itself is nothing but a vibration of what we call, without understanding it, the ether, and sight is a sense easily deceived and of very feeble range. It is probable that only a slight exaltation of the power of the optic nerve would present the picture of the starry sky to us in a very different aspect.

To our vision the waste of space appears astounding, much as the Pacific ocean seems far too large for its archipelagoes. The boundless vault looks as though wasted in containing at such enormous intervals the tiny specks that are its worlds and suns. Would it wear anything like so open an aspect if we had better or different eyes? To see the stars at all it is necessary to wait for the darkness of night. To be aware of those crimson fountains of glory streaming into space from the sun we have to borrow the help of the moon's interposed disk.

Since all heavenly bodies exercise an influence, gravitatory and otherwise, upon all other bodies, it is conceivable that a kind of vision may hereafter exist to which their mutual contact and interaction would be perceptible. We see nothing now which is not of the nature to reflect upon our retinas or to project upon them those light waves of which alone our light sense can take any cognizance. The fish which dimly perceives a star through the water composed of oxygen and hydrogen is not in a much worse position for reliable astronomical observations than man, with his limited visual spectrum, at the bottom of his ocean of oxygen, nitrogen and the new gas.—Sir Edwin Arnold in North American Review.

The First Marital Kiss.

If, as seems to be the case, it is to be considered the correct thing for bride and bridegroom to exchange their first marital kiss at the altar, it would be a wise thing to announce the fact through the papers beforehand, along with the number of attendants, list of presents, etc. That would at least prepare the wedding friends for this very beautiful observance. At a largely attended wedding, when the bridegroom at the conclusion of the ceremony kissed his bride, from all quarters of the crowded church came a snicker, which was the more surprising on account of the well bred looks of the gathering. On another occasion the bride herself was taken by surprise and started back in alarm when her newly made husband wished to enter upon his lately acquired privileges on the spot. —Washington Post.

INDIAN GAMBLERS.

ALWAYS READY TO RISK THEIR ALL IN A GAME OF CHANCE.

Sometimes Whole Villages Are Impoverished by a Streak of Bad Luck—They Rely Upon Charms and Their Ability to Cheat—They Are Good Losers.

As eagerly as a duck flops into the water does an Indian jump into a game of chance. Unbounded belief in luck and perhaps the natural deviltry of the race make Indians inveterate gamblers. There is nothing in an Indian's possession that he will not readily wager on a game of chance. Nearly every noble red man is the possessor of an individual charm or fetich which enables him to do things that other Indians cannot do. This fetich is of value exclusively to the owner, and according to their belief would be of no use or advantage to any other Indian. No person besides the possessor knows what the fetich is and were it to become known it would immediately lose its power for good. No Indian will knowingly steal another Indian's fetich. Such theft vitiates the power of the thief's fetich and casts over him a hoodoo.

Having full faith in the ability of his charm to bring luck to him, the Indian never fails to place all his possessions in the balance when there is a bet on. If he loses, he takes it philosophically and attributes his bad luck to the greater power of his adversary's charm. If he wins, he has added faith in the power of his own charm. Indians have been known to wager all their earthly possessions, even to their squaws and children and tepees, on the fall of a stick in one of their games. Indian villages have become pauperized and dependent upon charity for months because the inhabitants bet everything they had on the result of games with other villages. Such occurrences were common several years ago, and were it not for the restrictions of government regulations would be so still.

Gambling is not a secret vice among the Indians. It is indulged in by all the members of the tribe, and the more expert the gambler the higher he stands in the estimation of his fellows. To have the fame of being a successful gambler causes an Indian to looked up to almost as much as if he were a successful warrior. There is no fear of shocking the morals of even the highest chief by proposing a game with him—in fact, the invitation pleases him. One point of advantage held by the red man over his white brother is in the fact that when he loses everything he possesses he is not much poorer than he was before, and he can readily recoup himself by making a raid upon some unfortunate white settler or upon a weaker tribe. The white man may commit suicide, but the Indian simply looks for a victim and seldom fails to find him.

Before the government tightened the moral lines on the Indians professional Indian gamblers were plentiful. Of late years their number has decreased rapidly. The most famous Indian gambler of today is Quelepah, a Comanche. His game is monte. He is about 30 years old, tall and straight, with a thin, narrow face. His eyes are sunken like those of a consumptive. He never smiles and seldom speaks. Like all Indian gamblers, his dress is rich in bright colors. He usually rides a white pony and is attended by two Apache Indians, both famous for deeds of prowess. He travels from village to village and from tribe to tribe. Everywhere he is well known. When his approach is made known, the Indians wait for him to appear, saving their money to play with him, for it is an Indian maxim that "in the game of Quelepah the play is honest, and the stakes are what you please."

Quelepah once appeared at the Cash creek village. He rode into the village shortly before sundown. One of his companions spread a bright red blanket on the ground. Quelepah knelt before it. As he settled down on his haunches and brought forth a new deck of Mexican monte cards the blanket was surrounded by Indians crouching three and four deep. And behind them stood other Indians eager for an opportunity to play. The long, loan fingers of Quelepah shuffled the cards with marvelous rapidity. The interest in the game waxed as the light waned. Candles were procured as night fell and were fastened in sharp pointed green twigs stuck in the ground.

By their flickering light Quelepah could be seen paying his losses and pocketing his gains. He was both dealer and banker. Behind him on his right and on his left crouched his two Apache fellows. As dawn was breaking Quelepah looked about him. He had stripped all save two Indians. One of them was a heavy winner. Laying down $100 for each of them to cover, Quelepah announced that it was his last bet. The cards left were the queen and the deuce. Both Indians laid on the queen. The deuce won. Quelepah pocketed his money. The village, save for the two Indians, was penniless.

Squaws also are inveterate gamblers. It is a common sight to see a dozen squaws, young and old, their papooses lying neglected on the ground, crowded around an old shawl, busy over a 10 cent game of monte. Their play is persistent, and many of them are marvelously clever gamblers. But they seldom have money of their own sufficient to play for high stakes.

One peculiarity of Indian gambling games is their intricacy. In several tribes the writer has seen Indians playing games with sticks and stones for hours at a time. Notwithstanding the closest attention he has been unable to discover the system used, nor has he ever met a white man who could explain the game. There are several games of this kind, and among the Pacific coast tribes they are common.

In addition to his faith in his charm the Indian places great dependence on his ability to cheat. To the best cheat are accorded the highest honors when gambling is indulged in. There is never a thought of getting angry over deft tricks or unfair methods so long as the perpetrator is not caught in the act. If he is caught, he refunds his gains and is laughed at for clumsiness.

Since playing cards have become common, games taught by the whites and Mexicans are generally the favorite among the red men. Monte is played for large amounts. Sometimes an Indian with hundreds of dollars will become impoverished in a single evening by trying his luck against a skillful player. An especially deft monte dealer, more skillful even than Quelepah, has been known to go from tribe to tribe in the mountains of New Mexico and return home loaded down with his winnings. Many Mexican gamblers devote almost their entire time traveling among the various tribes in the Sierras. They win large sums, but lose them again in Mexican cities.—Fort Sill (O. T.) Cor. New York Sun.

Diamond Coated Boots.

Everybody has remarked that the matter applied to boots and shoes—viz, blacking—is a dull, blue black substance entirely devoid of gloss, but when the leather thus coated is rubbed over with a dry brush the boot begins to shine like a bright luminary. What is the cause of this strange phenomenon is a question which naturally presents itself to every well regulated mind. The diamond, as everybody knows and as recent experiments have abundantly proved, is nothing more or less than crystallized carbon. The chief element in blacking is likewise carbon, in the shape of lampblack. The friction of the dry brush on the leather produces electricity, which has the property of crystallizing carbon. The leather, coated with blacking and brushed, is covered with millions of microscopical diamonds, which give to the blacking its peculiar brilliancy. Accordingly everybody wears diamonds on his boots.—Imparcial.

What Ails My Nerves?

They Are Almost Driving Me Crazy.

They Won't Let Me Work and They Spoil My Pleasure.

Here is a Way to Have Nerves Like Steel. Just Read This.

Thousands of people feel this way. Their nerves are weak and irritable, they pass sleepless nights; waking in the morning, tired and unrefreshed, with bad taste in the mouth, and dull feeling head. They feel nervous, blue and discouraged, often having a sense of anxiety and apprehension, as of some impending danger.

They feel they have lost their nerve power and much of their energy and ambition. They often declare themselves as "feeling just good for nothing." This was so with Mrs. N. H. Clark, a prominent and well-known lady of Mosetown, Vt. She writes the following unusually interesting letter:

"For some time I have been fearfully prostrated with nervous weakness. I was continually without strength and unable to do my work. I was completely tired out, and my nerves were so weak I was good for nothing.

"I could not sleep nights I was so weak and nervous, and when I arose in the morning, I was as tired as when I went to bed, and sometimes even more so. I was entirely used up and miserable. I had no appetite, and the little food I could eat distressed me awfully.

"I had a constant fear and dread that something was going to happen. I also had a cough and bronchitis. I employed doctors and took medicines constantly, but without benefit. At this time a friend who had used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and had been cured by it, advised me to try it.

MRS. N. H. CLARK.

"I had not used the first bottle when I could plainly see more good results than from all the other medicines I had ever before taken. The good I derived from this most wonderful medicine was marvelous.

"I can sleep well and my nerves are strong and quiet. My appetite is good and I can eat anything without distress. I heartily recommend Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to everybody, for I believe it to be the best medicine I have ever found, and a great boon to mankind."

You who are sick and suffering just remember this: Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the medicine that cures, and it is exactly what you want. There are countless numbers of persons in just this condition. They are not sick with any particular disease, but are out of order, have weak nerves and tired bodies. They have lost their snap and energy, and work becomes an effort.

You need Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will cure you. It is purely vegetable and harmless, and is the discovery of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

Harper's Magazine

IN 1895

The Simpletons, a new novel by THOMAS HARDY, will be begun in the December Number, 1894, and continued to November, 1895. Whoever may be one's favorite among English novelists, it will be conceded by all critics that THOMAS HARDY stands foremost as a master artist in fiction, and The Simpletons may be expected to arouse enthusiasm not inferior in degree to that which has marked Trilby—the most successful story of the year. Another leading feature will be the Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc, by the Sieur LOUIS DE CONTE. Her Page and Secretary, under which guise the most popular of living American magazine writers will present the story of the Maid of Orleans. In the January Number will appear a profusely illustrated paper on Charleston and the Carolinas, the first of a series of Southern Papers.

Northern Africa is attracting more attention than at any other time since it was the seat of empires. The next volume of HARPER'S MAGAZINE will contain four illustrated articles on this region, and three of them will depict the present life there. JULIAN RALPH will prepare for the MAGAZINE a series of eight stories, depicting typical phases of Chinese Life and Manners. Besides the long stories, there will begin in the January Number the first chapters of A Three-Part Novelette, by RICHARD HARDING DAVIS—the longest work yet attempted by this writer. Complete short stories by popular writers will continue to be a feature of the MAGAZINE.

Send for Illustrated Prospectus.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE begin with the Numbers for June and December of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order. Cloth cases, for binding, 50 cents each—by mail, postpaid. Title-page and Index sent on application.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss.

ULSTERS!

The ULSTER is the great New England storm coat. As a bodyguard it is almost impregnable. It is proof against cold, wind, rain and snow. For warmth and comfort, for health and well being it has no equal. If you have worn an ULSTER you know it. If you have not, try one—buy one. Here is the greatest opportunity ever known in Western Massachusetts to secure great, grand ULSTERS at almost ridiculous prices. One of the largest ULSTER manufacturers in the country needed "CASH." CASH has been, is, hard to get. The road to it is difficult. It has no mercy. It means sacrifice.

A price was asked. A price was bid. The difference was great. Haggling and arguing ensued. The deal was off. The manufacturer declared he could not, LYNCH that he would not. A week elapsed, then two, nearly three.

"Does your offer for ULSTERS hold good? Wire reply," telegraphed the manufacturer.

"It does," replied LYNCH.

The ULSTERS are now for sale. The greatest values ever known in Western Massachusetts.

$20, $22 and $25 ULSTERS FOR $15.
$25 and $28 ULSTERS FOR $18.
$28 and $30 FOR $20.

A Poor Man's Wealth.

A poor man? Yes, I must confess—
No wealth of gold do I possess;
No pastures fine, with gazing kine,
Nor fields of waving grain are mine;
No foot of fat or fallow land
Where rightfully my feet may stand,
The while I claim it as my own—
My deed and title, mine alone

Ah, poor indeed! perhaps you say,
But spare me your compassion, pray;
When I ride not—with you—I walk
In Nature's company, and talk
With one who will not slight or slur
The child forever dear to her;
And one who answers back, be sure,
With smile for smile, though I am poor.

And while communing thus, I count
An inner wealth of large amount—
The wealth of honest purpose bent
With Penury's environment,
The wealth of owing naught to-day
But debts that I would gladly pay,
With wealth of thanks still unexpressed
With cumulative interest.

A wealth of patience and content,
For all my ways improvident;
A faith still fondly exercised
For all my plans unrealized;
A wealth of promises that still,
However I fail, I hope to fill;
A wealth of charity for those
Who pity me my ragged clothes.

A poor man? Yes, I must confess—
No wealth of gold do I possess;
No pastures fine with grazing kine,
Nor fields of waving grain are mine.
But ah, my friend! I've wealth, no end!
For millionaires might condescend
To bend the knee and envy me
This opulence of poverty.

THE BROWN WOMAN.

At a distance of about thirty miles from Harper's Ferry is situated one of the oldest and quaintest towns in Virginia. Not only do its historic associations attract the traveler, but the picturesque charm of its old-time homes induces him to linger there, hunting curios or picking thyme and myrtle from the garden of some ancient dame. Of all these homes none so invites the curious passerby as that of Miss Polly Waller. A stone wall, ivy grow and discolored, incloses the spacious garden in the center of which stands this lady's house. What delights are revealed to those who can roam at will in this garden on a sunny day! The inner side of the stone wall is a background against which one sees a row of twisted white lilac bushes, the blossoms of which in spring fill the whole neighborhood with their delicious sweetness. A carefully trimmed and regularly grown border of box incloses the flower beds and outlines the well trodden gravel walks, along the sides of which grow rosemary and calacanthus, yellow jassemine and syringa, citron aloes and damask roses.

One evening in the month of September several ladies were gathered about a card table in Miss Polly's front parlor. The evening being cool and windy the huge fireplace was piled high with blazing logs. So enticing did the fire prove that very soon all the ladies threw down their cards and grouped themselves close to the hearth. The high wind outside caused an overhanging maple bough to lash itself against the window pane. This excited the nerves of some of the ladies, and this, with the social and expansive element which a fire has always the power to awaken, turning the conversation upon the weird and fantastic.

"I can tell you a genuine ghost story, and, what's more, every word of it is true," said Miss Blunt, a lady who, though yet unwedded, could own to years and experience sufficient to expect that her word would be accepted.

"Tell us! Tell us!" clamored half a dozen female voices.

"Well," began Miss Blunt, who was a frail, nervous little woman, with wide open, startled eyes, which one could easily believe had acquired their present expression from frequent observation of ghosts. Before continuing she drew nearer to the fire, clasped one knee about with both hands and continued: "Some years ago I went to New York on a visit to a relative. This cousin was descended on the paternal side from an old Dutch family, which in days long gone by had built a great house in Bleecker street and there for three generations had lived in the enjoyment of wealth and high social position. At last, however, evil days came, the house in Bleecker street passed into strange hands, and the old family became scattered.

"This cousin had somewhat regained the wealth and position which his family had lost. By a strange freak he rebought the old house in Bleecker street, preferring it to an up town residence. After he had refitted it, it made a charming home. It was after he and his family had been living there for some months that I went to visit them. When looking out of the windows it seemed queer to be in this part of New York, but when I gave myself up to the comfort and beauty of the rooms it was as delightful as any house I ever saw—at least I thought so, though the family itself did not seem quite certain concerning it.

"My cousin, I could see, was charmed with the success of his scheme and had the satisfied air of a man who has played a bold game and won. The wife and daughter did not appear to partake of his content. They were restless at times, and I was inclined to think them wanting in gratitude.

"One day I was sitting in my room, untying some embroidery silks, when upon looking up I saw standing before me a little old woman, all dressed in brown, with a white handkerchief crossed upon her breast. Her face was that of a foreigner, and her eyes had that pathetic, appealing look in them which goes straight to the heart. Finding this strange woman in my room unannounced, I felt some surprise and questioned her sharply. She gave me no reply, but stood there, as it were, with those pathetic eyes. Thinking her some foreign sewing woman who was possibly embarrassed at her inability to use the language, I told her to accompany me down stairs, where some one no doubt could be found who understood what she wished.

"We started together out of the room. I preceded, but kept her in sight. Upon the stairs she seemed to disappear suddenly. I called to her. I ran back to see if she had been mistaken and if she lingered still in my room. I did not see her anywhere. Then I concluded that she had disappeared into one of the other rooms, and that I had better descend and send some one to seek her. I went down into the library, where my cousin's wife and daughters were occupied with their embroideries. I told them about the little woman up stairs and requested that they look after her. When I had finished my story, my cousin's wife shivered a little and remarked in a strained voice, 'That is strange.' She rose from her chair. 'You said she had very pathetic eyes?' she asked. 'Yes, the most pathetic I ever saw,' I replied. The girls looked down at their work, but said nothing. Their mother left the room, but soon returned, saying, 'It was nothing.' After this we settled down to our work, and the morning, though perceptibly chilled by my little episode, passed quickly by."

At this point in the narration all the ladies drew closer together, and forming a circle about the narrator urged her to proceed.

"Some nights after this," continued Miss Blunt, "I awoke suddenly from my sleep, and there, standing by my bed, almost bending over me, I saw clearly by the street light, which fell directly into my room, this same little woman, all dressed in brown, with the white handkerchief crossed upon her breast, and looking earnestly at me as she had done some days before. I sprang up quickly and called to her as I hastened to light the gas, but she was not to be seen, nor was there any sign of any one having entered my room. It is not necessary to say that I bolted my door securely, wrapped myself in the blankets and sat up the rest of the night. This time I concluded that my cousin's wife had some demented relative or friend confined in the house, and that she had escaped accidentally and made these excursions into my room. I determined to speak to my cousin in the morning and obtain the truth from him, and thus protect myself against further alarm and fright. When I descended the next morning I was so fortunate as to meet my cousin alone in the lower hall. 'Came into the library and let me speak with you,' I said. He let me into the room, saying laughingly, 'Have you, too, seen the ghost?' 'Indeed I have,' I replied, and then told him of what had happened to me. He seemed annoyed. 'It is very strange,' he said. 'No one is confined here in the house.' Soon after we came this same little brown woman appeared to my wife. When she told me of it, I laughed at her. In a few days, however, the thing repeated itself. Both of the girls have seen her. I myself have not yet been honored. Seriously, though, I begin to fear that there is a mystery. Something must be done. My wife and daughters wished to give up the house a month ago, but I felt that there must be some mistake, and I determined to remain and prove to them that either it was overwrought imaginations or something which would in time explain itself naturally.'

"At breakfast my cousin related my experience to the family. We discussed the matter very seriously. The same day my cousin's wife heard low cries of distress in one of the vacant bed rooms. Summoned by her, we went into the room immediately, but found no one. On the night of that day I was again awakened from my sleep by the appearance at my bedside of this same little woman, as silent and pathetic as ever.

"On the following day the cries of distress were again heard in the vacant bed room, but no clue to them could be discovered. Of course the whole household was aroused and excited, and there was little rest for any of us. Had it not been for the ardent feeling of my cousin concerning the old family house, nothing could have held us there a day longer. Appreciating his pride in the matter, we determined to wait a while, and with the assistance of skilled detectives see if the mystery could be solved.

"A week passed. Detectives came and went, but they discovered nothing. In the meantime, however, the little brown woman appeared twice to me in my room and as often to my cousin's wife. When we called or rang for some one, she disappeared as suddenly and as mysteriously as she had come.

"I can give you no idea of the sensation she produced upon those who saw her. About everything we saw at the time and recalled afterward were those pathetic eyes of hers, looking beseechingly into ours. Whoever she was, she was a woman of deep sorrow, and in some way we all felt she represented some terrible tragedy or undying grief.

"One evening at the end of a week Mr. Graves, a young detective, called and asked to see the family. He was shown into the library, and drawing a package of papers from his pocket, begged leave to lay before us some information which he had obtained. Somewhere in New York, it seems, is kept a record of all the old houses in the city. This enterprising young detective, baffled by his investigations at the house, was convinced from what he had learned that the affair partook of the supernatural; consequently he had gone into these records and hunted out that of this old family house on Bleecker street. What he told us contained the only explanation of the little brown woman which we have ever had, and as my cousin gave up the house immediately none of us have ever seen her since."

"What was it?" asked in a whisper the group of women.

"After this house had passed from my cousin's family," continued Miss Blunt, "it was occupied for some years, it seems, by a M. Grovoche, a French wine merchant. He lived alone in Bleecker street with his servants and was supposed to have amassed a large fortune. When some years had gone by in this way, he suddenly disappeared and for many years no explanation could be discovered. His mother, a pleasant woman from Gironde, came to this country in the hope of finding him. She spent the remaining years of her life in the search, and the devotion and energy with which she pursued her purpose made her at one time a familiar figure to the police of New York, and especially to the people in Bleecker street, where she was frequently to be seen. The poor woman died without obtaining any clew to the fate of her son, and soon the whole matter was lost sight of by those who had taken an interest in her. A few years after her death a man died in New Jersey who left a confession to the effect that the house of M. Grovoche in Bleecher street had been entered by him one night with the intent to rob; that M. Grovoche had discovered him concealed in his bedroom and had attacked him; that forthwith he returned the attack and murdered M. Grovoche by a thrust in the side with a dagger. He knew the house very well, for in planning the robbery he had been familiarizing himself for some months with it. He dragged the dead body below to a cellar, which he knew contained a drainage well, into which he dropped it. He then made his escape noiselessly, leaving the treasures of the house untouched. When search was made for the body, which was said to be buried in the well, it was readily discovered and identified as that of M. Grovoche by a silver chain and crucifix which still hung about the skeleton's neck. From that time until my cousin bought and refitted the house it had remained vacant, and an air of mystery had clung about it. I have no doubt, unless it has been pulled down to make way for stores or warehouses, it is vacant to-day and pointed at as a place where a crime was enacted."

As Miss Blunt finished her story a very handsome and stately lady entered the room. She threw off her wrap and drew near the attentive group. As she did so a blonde young girl rose from her seat and said to her in a husky voice:

"Mother, will you tell these ladies what you saw in your room yesterday?"

"Oh, yes," exclaimed the lady. "Something so strange, I must tell you. Yesterday morning as I was dressing, when I had just lifted my face from its bath and was about to give its usual rubbing, I saw standing before me the funniest little old woman, all clad in brown, with a white handkerchief crossed upon her breast, and with the most pathetic eyes I ever beheld. They will haunt me to my dying day. Just as I spoke to her, demanding an explanation of this sudden intrusion, she disappeared, and my daughter there was awakened by my running about the room calling: 'Where is she? Where is she?'"

Miss Blunt gave a scream of terror, accompanied by the cry, "She has followed me here!"

Every one turned toward her in fright. With her face buried in her hands she fell forward, sobbing convulsively.—Romance.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

EMBROIDERY STITCHES

In this article I copy the descriptions of embroidery stitches from an instruction book on art embroidery. The comments are my own.

Hemstitch. To hemstitch take a piece of linen in which threads draw easily. Fold and baste a hem. Draw above the edge of the fold from four to six threads, according the quality of the material; with needle and a finer number of cotton than would be used for sewing the same stuff, insert the needle into the edge of the fold, throw the thread to the left, take up a cluster of threads, pull them together, insert the needle into the edge of the fold and repeat. The number of threads in a cluster must be determined by the quality of the material; the finer this is the greater number of threads can be taken, and the reverse the coarser. This stitch may be used without making a hem by simply catching the thread into the body of the cloth, and where the mesh is very loose and open, as in scrim, a large needle is used without drawing threads. You may also finish the edg of linen in this way and then fringe the linen, instead of having the hem, and it is customary now when fringing is done to fill in the corners with the linen threads that are drawn out.

Outline Stitch. This is perhaps, the simplest of the art stitches. Bring the needle up through the material, lay the thread slantwise toward the right, proceeding from you. Put the needle downwards at the desired length of the stitch from the starting point, through the material, then bring it up again with the point toward you, and also toward the left. The needle should come up close beside the stitch previously made, a short distance below its end.

You will notice that in this direction the stitch is not taken back to the end of the proceeding stitch, as we are sometimes taught, but in small patterns the work is more satisfactory when done in that way, and also when you want a heavy line; and for certain heavy work fine effects are produced by carrying the stitch even further back. Some persons turn the thread to the left instead of the right, but this is awkward: the left-hand stitch, however, makes a pretty stem stitch when embroidering with fine silks on their material.

Split Stitch. Make the slanting stitch nearly straight and bring the needle up through each preceding stitch.

Cording Stitch. Slant the needle toward the right a little more, and make the stitches a little shorter.

Stem Stitch. Slant the stitches a little less and make them a little longer than in outline.

Satin Stitch. This consists of stitches laid in straight lines side by side as closely as possible, straight or diagonally according to the pattern. It may be copied from the raised figures in Hamburg edgings which although machine made, are fair imitations of the true stitch. This is an all over stitch.

Kensington Filling Stitch. This is not so much a stitch as a system of stitches to produce a close satiny effect. The stitches may be outline cording, stem or split according to circumstance; the satin stitch, may also be introduced. To fill a leaf begin at the tip and work toward the base with a row of outline. Then turn the work and come back with a row beside it. So continue till the work is well-nigh filled. Have the stitches somewhat irregular, according to the outline and texture of the leaf. Finish by working in extra stitches to fill bare spots, bringing out shading, veining, etc.

Another method of Kensington Filling Stitch is to begin at the base of the leaf and work the right hand edge to the tip, then bring the silk back over the outside of the work to the first starting point, and outline stitch again from base to tip. Some leaves are worked from midrib to edge, and vice versa. I often combine several stitches with fine effects. The long and short stitch is much used now, and may be also introduced into solid work.

Long and Short Stitches This is used where a half solid effect is desired, and is very effective for suitable designs. Flowers and leaf forms are most often executed in this stitch. The stitches follow the outline and are irregular in length. They should all slant toward the center of the figure, or nearly so, and may be worked with or without previously outlining the design. Where a design is to be cut out as a border it should be outlined with close buttonhole stitch and the long and short stitch worked inside this outline.

As this description intimates, this style of stitch is much in favor just now. Next to the styles I described last time for finishing the edge, if not equal to them in favor, is that described above. There are the most exquisite doilies, tea trays, luncheon cloths, dressing case covers, etc., etc., embroidered with a border of flower heads in the stitch and by the methods described under "Long and Short Stitch." These are done upon fine white linen in cream filo or outline or rope silk, according to circumstances, the larger designs being stamped on the larger cloths and done in the coarser silks. You will notice the kinds of cloths I have named are those that lay flat on the furniture. The draped cloths that fall over the tables have borders of fringe or lace or hems, although the long and short stitch appears on every kind of cloth for every possible purpose.

Another handsome border for doilies, etc., is crochet lace of silk. This is usually made in wheels and buttonhole stitched on the linen; use knitting or crochet silk. Any pretty and simple pattern for a wheel may be used. Then you may embroider upon the linen or not, as you prefer. If you have a number of cloths and doilies this border makes a pleasing variety upon the heavier linen, while linen braids are put on finer linen.

Button-Hole Stitch. The same old-fashioned stitch as seen in the scalloped edges of muslin or flannel embroidery. Buttonhole stitch may be worked long and short. Open Buttonhole is the same as buttonhole, except that a wide interval is seen between every two stitches.

Back Stitch. This is the old-fashioned stitch known by that name in plain needlework. When evenly and regularly done it may take the place of outline.

I have seen very beautiful outline and solid work done in this stitch, but it must be very even and regular to be beautiful, and hence requires more care than the outline and the Kensington filling stitches. If, however, you want to do embroidery and have not learned any stitch and are a fine hand sewer,—an art, alas, not taught to girls in these days of sewing machines, as it was to our mothers and grandmothers,—you can produce fine embroidery by using the art you have. Have the design stamped, then back-stitch the outline and fill in with back stitch.

Laid Stitch. When satin stitch is very close and worked over a raised cord or bit of tufting it becomes laid stitch.

Laid stitch is used for solid work of one color upon heavy materials like chair covers, or the embroidered capes in fashion several years ago. You do not see very much of it just now.

I must not forget to copy the instructions for "Couching," as that is now in high favor.

Couching. Lay a thread down to form an outline and catch it in place at intervals by fine over-stitches. Several threads in a row may be applied in this way, and held in place by one series of over or loop stitches.

I saw in Boston the other day some most elegant sofa cushions. One was made of some kind of heavy corded silk, cream color, embroidered in outline stitch with old blue rope silk. The design was a large conventionalized chrysanthemum repeated in each corner. Along the outer leaves of the rope outline was couched a heavy gold thread. The cushion was finished with a frill of old blue China silk. This gold thread couched on appears in much of the heavy rich work. It is made especially for couching, jointed at intervals where the fine silk is caught over and drawn down, and when the work is done the heavy gold thread appears to lay in place of its own volition.

Handkerchief Sachet. Take a piece of linen twenty inches long and sixteen inches wide. Hemstitch and fringe the narrower ends. Embroider a design upon one corner to cover a quarter of the linen. Sew together lengthwise, then fold widthwise with the embroidery outside. Now you have two pockets. Into the under one put a sheet of cotton wadding filled with sachet. The handkerchiefs are put into the upper pocket and between the pockets. This is the very latest thing for handkerchiefs.

A Handsome Photograph Holder. Embroider a piece of linen with a spray of white daisies with yellow centers, tied with a white ribbon in design. Have the linen about three fourths of an inch larger than you want the case, or an inch larger on each side than a cabinet photo, if you want it for photos, of that size. Glue or sew this over a piece of card-board. Cover one side of another piece of card-board with yellow silk to match the centers of the daisies, and sew the linen and silk cards together. This is for the front of the case. Make the back in the same way and of the same size, covered with plain linen and silk, or on both sides with silk. Crochet over chrochet molds or brass rings with crochet silk the shade of the yellow you are using; same quality and size in any make is the kind to use. Make enough of these rings sewed together to sew between the front and back cards of the case on three sides, and continued above for a handle. Tie together at the top with a bow of yellow or white ribbon. You may have a narrower end for the open top, or a broader side, as you prefer. This may be embroidered with violets, pansies, or any other flowers, and corresponding silk and crochet silk used. This case is to hang up.

A Dainty Veil Case. Make this case the same as the handkerchief sachet, except you cut the linen sixteen by twelve inches. Put straps of ribbon across on the inside to slip the veils under. I have seen a lovely case with this motto embroidered in with the flowers:

"See within this dainty case
Filmy veils for thy dear face."

An Opera Bag may be made in which to keep and carry slippers, fan, gloves and other such articles of the toilet as a lady takes to the party with her. One yard of fancy silk lined with plain china to match, with lace around the top and drawn up with a string makes a simple and useful bag. Another form may be made as follows: Embroider a piece of linen cut fourteen inches wide and eighteen inches long. Line with silk and fold to form a large envelope. Bind the seams and edges with white silk galloon or linen braid. Attach a pocket outside, lined and perfumed, for fan, gloves and handkerchief; the inside of the envelope is for slippers. Attack ribbon or galloon to the fold of the envelope to make all secure when in use.

At the Food Fair on Japanese Day the exhibit showed one stand of crêpe paper work. This was very elaborate, but I saw only one thing that could not have been made from the descriptions I gave last year in the JOURNAL of such work. The new idea was that of making fancy boxes and baskets of twisted rolls of the paper. Make the box or basket of pasteboard. Take strips of the crêpe or of tissue paper, draw through the hand, then roll like a rope and sew onto the pastboard close together. Line with crêpe paper.

Celluloid work is also very simple. If you paint upon celluloid you must use oil paints.

I do not wish to close this series of articles upon fancy work without speaking of a little paper with which I have recently become acquainted, which has helped me very much in work of this kind. It is devoted exclusively to fancy work, and is useful alike to expert, amateur and beginner. It is really the best paper of the kind I have ever seen, for it tells you everything on these subjects. I refer to The Modern Priscilla, published at 110 Boylston street, Boston. It is an illustrated monthly paper, five cents a number, fifty cents a year. The October and November numbers are particularly full, and to those interested in this work, and especially to those who have written me to inquire for new ideas, I recommend this paper.

A book peddler had called at the lawyer's office to sell him a book and the lawyer said peremptorily he didn't want any book. The peddler insisted and the lawyer continued to decline. At last the lawyer rose in wrath. "Now look here," he said emphatically, "I've told you I don't want your book, and I mean what I say. Furthermore, my advice to you is to get out of this promptly, or I'll throw you out." The peddler was about to make a remark. "And," interrupted the lawyer, "let me also say that if you hesitate, I shall charge you for that advice, and levy on your books to satisfy judgment. Now git," and the suppressed peddler got.—Detroit Free Press.

She had attended the ambulance classes and obtained the certificate. The street accident she had earnestly prayed for took place. A man had broken his leg. She confiscated the walking stick of a passer-by and broke it into three pieces for splints. She tore up her skirt for bandages. When all was complete she summoned a cab and took her patient to the hospital. "Who bandaged this limb so creditably?" inquired the surgeon. "I did," she blushingly replied. "Well, it is most beautifully—most beautifully done; but you made, I find, one little mistake; you have bandaged the wrong leg."—Tit-Bits.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 7, 1894.

LOCAL NOTICES.

22 pounds Revere granulated sugar for $1 at J. F. Foley's.

Cut flowers at Royce's greenhouse on Maple street for Sunday.

E. S. Brooks's leaders this season are fine holiday and wedding presents, and he will not be undersold by any one.

In order to correct any wrong impression which may have arisen, we would say that in the recent sale of our business to J. F. Foley there was no agreement and no understanding that we should not go into business again in Palmer. Smith & Co

Mr. Frederick R. Sistare will be pleased to show his Palmer friends our elegant line of overcoats and suitings; never surpassed, regarding styles, prices and quality. They are assuredly as handsome, as elegant, and in every way as perfect as it is possible to make them. They are equal in every respect to custom goods, and cost much less. Geo. N. Norris, 325 Main Street, Springfield, Mass.

PALMER NEWS.

Opening Night of the High School Entertainment Course.

The first entertainment in the high school course will be given next Tuesday evening in the Congregational church, when the following talented artists will appear: Charles T. Grilley, New England's popular humorist; Heinrich Schuecher and Charles Molé, who are respectively the harp and flute solists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Grilley's popularity is shown by the fact that he has been termed "The Return Date Reciter," as a large proportion of his engagements have been in places where he has made two, three, and oftentimes more appearances during the same season. "He is a host in himself." Heinrich Schuecker is probably the finest harpist in America; his exquisitely rendered solos always completely captivate his audiences. Charles Molé is unsurpassed as a flute solist. The programme will be:

Fantaisie ..... Saint-Saens
Mr. Schuecker.
The First Banjo ..... Irving Russell
Mr. Grilley.
Les Echos D'Alsace ..... Rueroy
Mr. Mole.
Grave Digger's Scene ..... Shakespeare
Mr. Grilley.
Prayer ..... Rossini-Alvars
Mr. Schuecker
The Literary ..... Jas. Whitcomb Riley
Mr. Grilley.
Babillard ..... Verschak
Mr. Mole.
Selected .....
Mr. Schuecker.
Reading ..... Selected
Mr. Grilley.

This first entertainment, as well as the others in the course, ought to be liberally patronized, both for its own worth and also as an encouragement to the high school, which offers to the people of Palmer a rare chance to hear in town the very best artists. Whatever profits there may be from the course will go toward forming a high school library. The doors will be open at 7 30, and the entertainment will begin at 8 15, this first entertainment commencing a little later than it otherwise would so that it may not conflict with the annual supper and sale at the Universalist church.

Tickets for the course will be for sale at LeGro & Lynde's drug store after 9 a. m. tomorrow. Course tickets, $2. Any pupil of the Palmer public schools can obtain of the principal of the high school a non-transferable course ticket for $1.50, single reserved seat tickets, 50 cents; general admission, 35 cents.

A. J. Northrop has been spending the week in Boston.

Dr. L. H. Hendee has rented F. N. Aiken's house on Pleasant street.

Miss Mabel Brown is spending a few weeks with friends in Springfield.

Miss Emma Parkhurst of Boston is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Chilson.

A small private party gave a supper and dance at the Weeks House last evening.

A. T. Wing and son Clarence returned yesterday from a trip of a week in Georgia.

Miss Grace Huntley of Amherst, formerly of Palmer, visited friends in town Tuesday.

The residence of Rufus Flynt is to be connected by telephone with the local exchange.

The annual meeting of L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R., will be held next Wednesday evening.

Dr. J. K. Warren of Worcester was in town Tuesday night and Wednesday morning.

W. C. Dewey has moved his family from New Rochelle, N. Y., to Springfield for the winter.

A. E. Park and daughters of Brattleboro visited friends in Palmer the latter part of last week.

Mrs. Clara B. Ellis entertained a small party of lady friends at her home on Main street this afternoon.

The W. C. T. U. will hold a meeting in the parlors of the Congregational church next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Hellyar entertained a small party of friends at their home on Thorndike street Tuesday evening.

Dr. L. H. Hendee is attending to the practice of Dr. Desmarais of Three Rivers during the absence of the latter in Canada.

The annual meeting of the Relief Corps will be held this evening at 7.30 sharp, and a full attendance of members is requested.

Conductor Tryon of the Ware River freight has been on the sick list this week, and James Donahue has been taking his place.

Miss Effie G. Shaw will give an exhibition of decorated china at her home on West Main street to-morrow from 9. a. m. to 8 p. m.

Dr. A. T. Schoomaker of Philadelphia has been in town this week looking over the field, with a view of possibly locating in Palmer.

On Monday morning at 8 o'clock a requiem high mass will be celebrated in St. Thomas's church, in memory of the late Mrs. Mary Finnerty.

The feast of the immaculate conception will be observed at St. Thomas's church to-morrow. Masses will be celebrated at 5.30 and 8 a. m.

Miss Annie Fish, who has been at home for a couple of weeks, will return next week to her musical studies at the Montpelier Seminary, Montpelier, Vt.

The new switchboard for the local telephone exchange has arrived and is being set. The service will be much improved by the addition of the new board.

Mrs. Clarence Brown visited Mrs. H. E. Huntley at Amherst last week, returning Saturday. She found Mrs. Huntley well, and happy in her new home.

John Dawson, Sr., who has been ill with pneumonia for about two weeks, was reported dead the first of the week, but there was no truth in the statement.

Several inches of snow fell Saturday night and there has been some sleighing this week, though not the best. A few inches of snow now would make fine sleighing.

Fred Hovey has been ill at his home for several days with the grippe. He is attended by Dr. G. H. Wilkins, and it is thought his illness will not be of long duration.

The main shaft at Holden & Fuller's woolen mill gave out about 7.30 Wednesday morning, and the mill was forced to shut down until this morning in consequence.

Winter seems to have taken a firm grip on this section, and the past week has been almost ideal winter weather. Wednesday morning the mercury was only 4° above zero.

Robinson & Taylor, the Central street grocers, have opened their new store in Holden's block, and now have the handsomest store in their line of business in town.

Thomas Lodge, F. and A. M., held its annual meeting Monday night. Five officers were elected, and the remainder will be appointed at the next meeting, when all will be installed.

The Sunday school of the Congregational church will give the cantata of "Samuel," with a chorus of about 25 voices, on the evening of the 23d, in place of the usual Christmas concert.

Dr. Willard E. Stowe, who has been seriously ill for so long, is very much better this week, and his family and physicians think that his recovery from this time on will be rapid.

G. A. Moore has been disappointed in not having his jewelry store in the Holden block ready for occupancy to-day, as he had expected, but will have his opening early next week. It will be lighted with electric lights.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins gave an address Wednesday evening on "Wanted, by the 20th Century, a Church, Who Will Furnish It?" before the Richmond Christian Endeavor society, the occasion being their anniversary.

The annual turkey supper of the ladies of St. Paul's church will take place next Tuesday evening, in connection with their annual sale of fancy articles. An entertainment will follow the supper, and will commence at 7.15.

T. F. Edmunds and wife and F. White have gone to Brimfield, where they will have the care of the farm of Joseph Allen of Palmer. Mr. Allen will be at the farm more or less during the winter, and M. Rooney will care for his livery business here while he is absent.

The first installment of the list of books in the public library other than fiction will be found on the fourth page of this paper. Cut it out and preserve it, and also the other installments as they appear, and you will have a complete catalogue of all the books in the library with the exception of the fiction.

The next meeting of the Pauline Brotherhood of St. Paul's church will be held next Wednesday evening. Addresses will be made on "The Social Reform Movement in New York,"—by G.C. Stanchfield on "Its Beginnings," Joseph Page on "Its Developments," and Walter Brown on "Its Culmination."

D. F. Holden has sold the Plimpton place of five acres, half a mile from Blanchardville, twice this year, first to William W. Harrington of Mount Vernon, N. Y., then to a Mr. Blodgett of Chicopee. The place is now rented to John Hancock, engineer at the electric light station, who will occupy it until spring.

Madam Longevin of Warren gave the first of a series of French lessons to a class Monday evening at the home of Mrs. G. H. Wilkins on Pleasant street, and will continue them each Monday evening at 7.30. She is a native of France, and is having excellent success with classes in Monson, West Brookfield and Warren.

The Royal Arcanum held its annual meeting Tuesday evening and elected these officers: Regent, C. E. Fuller; vice regent, C. A. LeGro; secretary, F. A. Royce; collector, F. W. Harrison; treasurer, H. N. Sedgwick; guide, F. N. Carpenter; chaplain, E. W. Rollins; orator, A. E. Fitch; warden, F. E. Cady; sentry, C. G. Shaw.

The ladies of the Congregational society will give a social in the church parlors next Wednesday evening, when supper will be served by Mrs. L. E. Chandler, Mrs. Rufus Flynt, Mrs. L. H. Gager, Mrs. F. B. Pope, Mrs. G. H. Wilkins and Mrs. J. C. Wing. The Lend-a-Hand club of the church will at the same time have a sale of useful and fancy articles.

The time of the excursion trains run by the merchants has been changed from 9.10 to 8.30, in response to requests from patrons of the trains who desire to reach home earlier than was possible under the old schedule. The trains have been exceedingly well patronized. To-morrow evening one will be run to Thorndike, stopping at the town house crossing to accommodate Three Rivers people.

John Dockery, aged 33, died at his home in Palmer Monday afternoon at 5 o'clock of typhoid pneumonia. He had been ill just a week, and his death was a shock to his friends, many of whom did not know of his illness. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Dockery had been employed in the undertaking establishment of H. G. Loomis for many years, and was a valued employe. He leaves a father, two brothers and a sister.

The frescoers and finishers have been pushing the work in the rooms of the Palmer Business and Social Club in Holden's block, and have them nearly ready for occupancy. It is expected that they will be in shape to use by the middle of next week, and it is proposed to have an opening, for members only, next Wednesday evening, and on the Tuesday evening following, December 18th, the rooms will be thrown open for the inspection of the public.

The electric lights in the stores on Main street were out for about an hour Wednesday evening, just long enough to cause considerable kicking. The cause was a burned out fuse in the transformer on the pole at the corner of Main and Central street. The pole was set on fire when the fuse was burned out, but the blaze lasted only a moment. Prompt work on the part of the linemen soon repaired the damage, and the lights were again in working order about 7 o'clock.

The Boston and Albany road will sell holiday excursion tickets to principal points on the New York Central, Michigan Central, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, Pittsburg and Lake Erie, and "Big Four" roads at reduced rates. Tickets will be sold from December 15 to December 24, good to return until Jan. 12, 1895. The round-trip rate to Utica will be $6.90; Syracuse, $8.50; Buffalo, $13.25; Cleveland, $19.90; Cincinnati, $27.40; Detroit, $22.90; Chicago, $30.40; St. Louis, $36.75. To other points the rate will be one and one-half the regular one-way rate.

The overseers of the poor have, by changing some of the partitions at the town farm, arranged to accommodate six more inmates. There are 21 or 22 now there, but some who are now supported at the Northampton insane asylum and are mildly insane will be brought back to the farm to lessen the expense, and then all the rooms will be filled. One thing which the town must do soon is to build an L on the west end of the present building, making another ward for the female inmates, and separating them from the section occupied by the men. This has been recommended by the state board, and the town will be compelled to do it soon.

Mrs. Lovina Griffin passed away at the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. Frank Tracy, Saturday morning, at the advanced age of 90 years and 11 months. Mrs. Griffin was born in Granby, Ct., in 1804. She retained all her faculties to the last, not even wearing glasses, and enjoying the best of hearing. Her intellect also remained bright and keen, and she maintained an unusual cheerfulness for one in her condition, for she was a cripple, forced to depend upon a wheel chair for locomotion, having broken one hip six years ago and the other two years later. She leaves four sons and two daughters. The body was taken to Simsbury, Ct., her old home, for burial.

John Chalk, who has been living with his son, T. J. Chalk, at Tenneyville for a year or so, left there Sunday, and going to the home of some friends near the carpet mill stated that he had not enough to eat and was starving. He said he had a son in Lowell, and that if he could get there he would be all right, so a purse of over $12 was made up for him and he left Tuesday for Lowell. Those who know T. J. Chalk take little stock in the old man's statement that he has been deprived of sufficient food. Mr. Chalk says that last spring his father took an unaccountable dislike to the housekeeper, and that since then he has been dissatisfied. As to the scarcity of food, his father has had the same as the rest of the family,—and they certainly do not seem to have suffered,—and he invites any one to drop in any time and see if all do not have enough to eat.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society was held in the district court room Tuesday afternoon and these officers elected: President, C. E. Fuller of Palmer; vice presidents, A. H. White of Monson and H. E. Wallis of Holland; secretary and treasurer, O. P. Allen of Palmer; directors, L. E. Chandler of Palmer, F. D. Rogers of Monson, E. N. Fisher of Ludlow, Josiah Stebbins of Brimfield, F. E. Clark of Wilbraham, D. R. McCray of Hampden, A. B. Howard of Belchertown, W. L. Day of Warren, B. P. Aiken of West Brookfield, C. T. Brainerd of Palmer, H. A. Rindge and O. E. Bradway of Monson. It was voted to hold three farmers' institutes, on the second Tuesdays of January, February and March, the one in February to be held in Monson, the subjects to be discussed to be selected by the president, vice presidents and secretary.

For several months there has been more or less talk of another telephone exchange in Palmer, and it now seems as if the project is somewhat near the reality. The Central Massachusetts Electric Company has this week received an invoice of telephone instruments, which it will proceed to put in at once in Monson, and will place 15 to 20 instruments in that town. The switchboard is to be at W. N. Flynt & Sons', and will be automatic, thus giving an all-night service. The service will be local at present, but the electric company proposes to soon run its wires to Palmer, Three Rivers, Thorndike, Bondsville, West Warren, Warren and Stafford, Ct., including them all in one exchange, with wires to Rockville, Ct. The telephone is the Columbia, manufactured in New York, and works very satisfactorily. The rates have not yet been decided upon, but will be lower than those of the New England company.

The stallion "Pollux", owned by a Palmer stock company, is to be sold at auction tomorrow afternoon. The horse was bought last winter by 28 men, each taking one share of $100; a joint note for $1300 was given, and $1500 in cash paid. It was intended to keep the horse for breeding purposes, it being the idea of the stockholders that a very fine strain of draught horses could be bred from him. The speculation proved to be an unfortunate one, very little money having come in. It is alleged that the horse's board bill is now about $250, and the stockholders are not willing to pay out any more money on the animal. There is a question whether or not the joint note can be collected, but as all the stockholders have signed it, it seems as if there could be no difficulty. It is said, however, that the signers will make an effort to evade payment, and the outcome of the matter will be watched with considerable interest.

At a session of the probate court held in Springfield Wednesday the following was among the business transacted: Administration granted in the estate of Luther D. Alexander, late of Palmer. Will approved of Patrick Quinlan, late of Wilbraham, Frances E. Clark executrix. Lillian L. Chapin appointed guardian of Harry T. Chapin, minor, of Monson. Accounts rendered in the estates of—George Parker of Brimfield; Charles G. Browning of Edith H. Crowningshield of Ludlow, minor; Frank R. Newton of George Parker of Brimfield. Affidavit of notice of appointment received in the estate of Harlow Chapin, late of Monson. Inventory filed in the estate of Almira L. Alden, late of Monson, personal $4918, real $1460. Allowance granted guardian in the estate of George Parker, late of Brimfield, to resign. Petition for a sum sufficient to satisfy a claim granted in the estate of Sophia B. Holmes of Monson.

There seems to be no occasion for fear of a typhoid fever epidemic, as some are inclined to think. The number of cases has been small and scattered, one at least being taken sick out of town. The record of the board of health shows the following cases reported: June 21st, one case at Three Rivers; June 23d, two cases at Three Rivers; August 22d, one case at Bondsville; October 24th, two cases at Three Rivers; October 31st, one case at Palmer Center; November 20th, one case at Palmer; November 28th, one case at Thorndike and one at Three Rivers. This makes a total of ten cases this year, six of them since the first of October. Only two were fatal, the one reported August 22d from Bondsville and one of the two reported October 24th from Three Rivers. In addition to the above there have been two cases which have not been reported to the board of health, which is directly contrary to the laws of the commonwealth, which say that every householder who shall have in his family any contagious disease or disease dangerous to the public health and shall neglect to notify the board of health, may be punished by a fine not exceeding $100; any physician attending such a case and neglecting to report it shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $200.

State Primary School Notes.

Rev. Robert Kellerman of Orange spoke to the children last Sunday.

Miss Jennie Leonard has resigned her position, and left Monday for Boston.

The farmers have finished drawing about 16 tons of hay from East Brimfield.

District Court.

The following civil entries were made last Saturday: George A. Bills against George Shicks, William H. Underwood against Andrew J. Robbins, Carlos O. Moore against Emma F. Whitney, C. A. Brown & Co. against John K. Knox, G. E. Buck & Co. against Mrs. James H. Gearey, George P. Campbell against Charles R. Shaw and trustee, all for action of contract.

Martin D. Hess of Palmer came before the criminal court last Saturday and paid a fine of $10 for drunkenness. Matthew French of Haverhill, for the same offense, paid a similar amount. The case against George Lee for drunkenness was continued until Dec 29. The case against Dexter W. Lombard, for obtaining money under false pretenses, was also continued until Dec 15th.

The case of Pietro Bicchiere against Patrick H. Mullaney for assault was tried Monday. It appears that Bicchiere had been ordered to leave the premises of the Mt. Bunyan Granite Company by Mullaney, and had refused to go. Mullaney, fearing an assault by Bicchiere, struck the latter, but the court held that he was justified in doing so, and discharged the defendant. Joseph Ropeya of Bondsville took too many drinks on Sunday, and as a result paid $7 in court Monday.

Jerry Kelliher came before the court on Tuesday for drunkenness, and paid a fine of $10. Dennis Leary came up the same day on the same charge, and was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for one year.

Jerry Kelliher of Thorndike came before the court Tuesday morning for drunkenness and paid a fine of $10.

TOWN OF PALMER.
TOWN WARRANT.
COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN ss. To Herbert A. Northrop, constable of the town of Palmer. Greeting:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs, to meet at the Town House in said Palmer on Monday, the seventeenth day of December, current, at 2 o'clock p. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

ART. 1. To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

ART. 2. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money to meet the existing obligations of the town.

ART. 3. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money to pay the expenses incurred in the change of grade crossings at Tenneyville, Blanchardville and near Three Rivers, to satisfy any existing judgments against the town, and for such other purposes as money may be appropriated at said meeting.

ART. 4. To see if the town will appropriate money to pay the balance incurred for repairs on the Engine House.

ART. 5. To see if the town will vote to build one-half of a foot bridge over Swift river in Duckville, and appropriate money for the same.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by the vote of the town, seven days at least before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal at least two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not and make due return of this warrant, with your doings thereon, to the Town Clerk, on or before the holding of said meeting.

Given under our hands this sixth day of December, A. D. 1894.

HENRY P. HOLDEN, } Selectmen of
JOHN F. TWISS, } Palmer.

A true copy—Attest:
H. A. NORTHROP, Constable. 2-36

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. November 17, A. D. 1894.

By virtue of an execution, which issued on a judgment recorded in the District Court of Eastern Hampden at Palmer, in said county, on the twentieth day of October A. D. 1894, in favor of George A. Bills of Palmer, in said county of Hampden, and against George M. Shaw of Brimfield, in the county aforesaid, I have this day taken all the right, title and interest which the said George M. Shaw had on the twenty-sixth day of January A. D. 1892, the day when the same was attached on mesne process in this action in and to the following described real estate, situate in Brimfield aforesaid, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

A lot of land and buildings thereon, beginning at an ash tree and running south twenty-five degrees west six rods and twenty-one links, thence south thirty-four degrees west six rods, thence east nine degrees south ten rods and twelve links, thence north twelve rods and ten links to the road, thence to the place of beginning, containing ninety-two rods of land, being the same premises described in a deed thereof recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, book 136, page 198.

The interest of the within named defendant in and to the above described real estate was acquired by inheritance from Abner Shaw of Brimfield, in said county.

And on Saturday, the twenty-second day of December A. D. 1894, in front of the Court House in Palmer, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, I shall offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, said right, title and interest in and to the above described real estate, to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

The Sunday school will give a Christmas concert in the church Sunday evening, Dec. 23d. There will also be a Christmas tree Tuesday evening, the 25th.

The Christian Endeavor Society gave a missionary concert last Sunday evening, the subject being Africa. Four papers were read, one on the "Geography of Africa," one "The Ways and Customs of the People," one, "The Native Religions," and "What Missions have done in Africa." There was also special music, which was much enjoyed by all.

Mrs. Harriet Burr, widow of the late Lyman Burr, celebrated her 90th birthday last Saturday. Quite a number of her relatives and friends, including members of her Sunday-school class 50 years ago, called upon her to offer their congratulations. She also received letters from friends out of town, among them being one from her former pastor, Rev. M. P. Dickey of Milton, N. H. In 1827 she joined the First Congregational church of this place, and for the past 67 years has been an earnest worker in it. Mrs. Burr has lived for some time with her son, B. F. Burr, the only remaining child of her family of four children. She enjoys good health, and one day last summer walked the distance of a mile.

WARREN.

Miss Marengo has taken the school in the Bemis district.

Luke H. Hitchcock of Nashville, Tenn., is the guest of N. R. Moore.

Charles Moore and children from Newton were in town over the Sabbath.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen Day have been spending a few days in New York with their daughter.

Miss Emma Blodgett returned to her school in Springfield Monday, after a few days' vacation.

The many friends of Charles Keyes will be pained to hear of his severe illness, caused by a strain while lifting.

The annual fair of the ladies of the Universalist church will be held in the town hall next week Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Supper will be served both evenings.

Rev. I. H. Weber has held meetings in the Congregational church every evening, for a week, and is now with the Methodist church, where union meetings are held every evening. There is much interest, and the meetings are well attended. It is his third week in town.

An unknown man accosted Officer Holdsworth Tuesday evening and asked for lodging over night. Mr. Holdsworth told him that he could not help him, whereupon the man crossed the street and threw a stone through a shop window. He was arrested at once and given a lodging for six months free of charge in Worcester jail.

Samuel D. Holdsworth, the night watchman, in going his rounds Wednesday morning discovered a light in the building belonging to John Tyler, and at once rang in the fire alarm, calling out the department. The blaze was under the main stairway, and as the outside door is never locked it gives an opportunity for any one to enter, so the fire was soon extinguished with pails of water, the hydrants being frozen.

WALES.

Mrs. McGee has moved to Warren.

William Peel, wife and child of Stafford, spent Thanksgiving with Mrs. Hubbard.

John Ferguson has moved his family to Montville, Ct., as has John Swindell.

Miss Alice Pepper spent Thanksgiving with her cousin, Mrs. F. G. Hitchcock, in Brimfield.

Ernest L. Needham has moved his sawmill to his wood lot in Brimfield.

Elijah Harris spent Thanksgiving with his brother, Chester Harris, in Springfield.

Many families are short of water, and will suffer severely unless rain is had. Many of the wells are not yet affected by the rains.

W. A. Lyon, who was drawn as juror to attend court Monday, was not able to go, being confined to his home with rheumatism.

Bradley and Heck had twenty couples at their Thanksgiving ball in the Valley mill. The dancers were much pleased with the new floor.

C. M. Thompson, who has been confined to his home several weeks, is now stirring about again. This is the only sickness he has had for nearly 40 years.

Mrs. Mandige of Vermont spent a day here recently looking over the town, in view of coming with her family to join her husband, who has been here a few weeks at work.

The friends of Andrew J. Royce and wife gave them a surprise party last Friday evening to remind them of their twenty-second wedding anniversary. The night was stormy, but a good time was enjoyed by all present.

Mr. Steele is very busy now-a-days butchering hogs in this vicinity. He also butchers the neat cattle for Meatman Smith, and this keeps Inspector Eager on the move most of the time to see that the cattle are all right for slaughtering.

Mrs. Estella Boyden and son of Worcester are at the home of her father, George S. Rogers, being called home on account of the sickness of Mr. and Mrs. Rogers. Mr. Rogers has been confined to his room several weeks with a cold and whooping cough, or something similar, but is now on the mend. His wife was taken a week ago with about the same disease, but is now better.

WILBRAHAM.

David Munroe of Worcester is in town for a short time.

"Pieria" open society in Fisk Hall to-morrow evening.

B. Frank Delano of Boston spent Thanksgiving with friends in town.

The W. C. T. U. met at the Congregational parsonage Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. W. C. Laughlin of Westfield spent Thanksgiving at James Merrick's.

Mrs. Adams of Williamsburg is visiting her daughter, Mrs Charles Church.

Mrs. A. L. Merrick and daughters spent Thanksgiving with friends in Springfield.

There will be a Demorest silver medal contest in the Methodist church next Monday evening.

Miss Emily Wright gave a five o'clock tea in honor of her guest, Mrs. Dyer of Newton, last Monday evening.

Prof. Charles Merrick of the Worcester high school spent Thanksgiving with his father, James Merrick.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Congregational church held a social at Mrs. L. A. Warner's Thursday.

Superintendent of schools Mary L. Poland has returned from Boston, where she attended the superintendent's meeting.

At the Demorest gold medal contest held in the Congregational church Monday evening William Nelson of Monson won the medal.

The public schools began Monday with the same corps of teachers as 1 st term, except in No. 3, where Miss Gregg of Brattleboro, Vt., takes the position vacated by Miss Peffers.

Mrs. F. C. Learned and family of Agawam, Mrs. H. G. Bent and family of West Longmeadow, Charles Warner and family of Boston, Miss Mary L. Warner and Frank Warner of Taylor's music store, Springfield, spent Thanksgiving with their mother, Mrs. Laura Warner, on South Main street.

The Chautauqua Club met with Miss Lizzie McGuire last Friday evening, and will carry out the following programme at the meeting with Mr. and Mrs. Livingstone on Faculty street to-night: Discussion of current events; Relation of the Roman Catholic Church to the Liquor Question, opened by W. McGuire and Miss Farnham; discussion, Woman Suffrage, by Mr. Livingstone and Miss Dora Merrick; paper—Woman England, W. H. Robbins; outline sketch of 19th chapter of "Europe in the 19th century;" social solo, Miss Grace Atkins; patriotic quotations, by the club; question box; questions on required readings in October "Chautauquan," Miss McGuire.

BRIMFIELD.

Mrs. John Noyes is in Worcester for a week.

Frank E. Bacon has left for Providence, where he will engage in business.

Mrs. Anderson and Miss Julia Warren have gone to New York for the winter.

George A. Furness, who is studying at Lay College, Revere, was home last week.

Marshall S. Allen and wife of Worcester spent Thanksgiving with Mr. and Mrs Elijah Allen.

George Whitehouse and daughter, Miss Georgiana, left Tuesday for Boston, where they will spend the winter.

The marriage of Miss Carrie M. Smith, formerly of this town, to Lewis D. Bemis of Spencer, was celebrated Thanksgiving evening at six o'clock, at the home of Frank R. Newton.

Mrs. Sabra Sherman died last Saturday, after an illness of several weeks. She was born in Palmer eighty-two years ago, but spent the greater part of her life in this town. Mrs. Sherman leaves two daughters, Mrs. Charles H. Mitchell in Minnesota, and Miss Augusta here. The funeral service was held Tuesday, Rev. W. K. Peirce officiating.

A special meeting of the voters of Brimfield was held Monday, to act on the proposition made by the descendants of Marquis Converse, to erect a structure for a drinking fountain provided the town would furnish the same with a permanent supply of water and build the foundation. The vote to accept the generous gift was almost unanimous, and a sufficiently large amount was appropriated. The fountain will be located in the center of the town, just south of the park.

Installation of a Pastor.

The congregation of the First Congregational church yesterday installed Rev. R. J. Kyle as pastor of the church. The council met at 10.30 in the forenoon, and the reports of the clerks of the church and parish were read and accepted. Mr. Kyle's credentials and religious views were examined, and found satisfactory. The council adjourned for dinner, and at 1.15 p. m. the installation services commenced. Rev. Mr. Bissel of Holland opened the meeting with prayer and Scripture reading, and Rev. Mr. Bassett of Ware followed with a sermon, which was very well received. The installation prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Ingalis of Brookfield, and the charge to the pastor was made by Rev. F. S. Hatch of Monson. The right hand of fellowship was extended to the pastor by Rev. Mr. Dyer of North Brookfield, and the charge to the people was made by Rev. Mr. Hayward of Globe Village. The benediction was pronounced by the pastor, and a few moments were spent in mutual congratulations. Nine churches were represented by pastors and delegates, as follows: Sturbridge, H. D. Haynes, delegate; Palmer, W. A. Breckenridge, delegate; Monson, pastor, and J. H. Carpenter, delegate; Gilbertville, pastor; Ware, pastor, and H. K. Hyde, delegate; Iobe Village, William Booth, delegate; Brookfield, pastor; North Brookfield, pastor, and A. G. Stone, delegate.

Already the increased sales at Broadhurst Bros. shoe store, Springfield, show a brisk beginning of the holiday trade for which they have made great preparations. Thousands of pairs of Men's, Boys' and Women's slippers in every variety of shapes and all the combination of colors are strung along their counters and marked at a price you'll be apt to quickly decide to purchase.

Physicians universally recommend Ayer's Hygienic Coffee. Grocers sell it.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

It Pays.

It pays everyone to follow the thousands who have escaped that remarkable free offer of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He has established a system of free letter correspondence, to tell the sick and suffering everywhere just what their trouble is, and how to get well. All you need to do is write him a letter, telling him your symptoms and how you feel. He will answer it, explaining your case minutely and giving all possible information. And for all this he charges nothing. It is the best opportunity you ever had to consult the highest authority, without leaving your home, and without paying any fee.

He gives such careful attention to every letter that you understand instantly just what ails you. He makes a specialty of treating patients through letter correspondence, and is having wonderful success by this method. It was this same successful physician who discovered that remarkable medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. The doctor's long experience and tremendous practice enables him to thoroughly understand your complaint by writing him your symptoms. It is easy enough to try it, and it won't cost you anything. Write him to-day and it will probably be the means of your getting strong and well.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria

The Hub Clothiers.

You will find their advertisement in another column. This firm has only been doing business in Springfield since September 22d and we are not surprised at the large business they are doing. They handle only the best clothing and never has such good stylish clothing for men or boys been sold at such remarkably low prices. They have one of the best store rooms in the city, and their tables are loaded down with an entire new stock. When in Springfield pay them a visit, whether you wish to purchase or not. You will find them obliging. We predict for them a large business.

SPRINGFIELD'S NEW STORE.

MEIGS & COMPANY.

FORMERLY THE D. H. BRIGHAM CO.

Friday evening, October 19th, we opened our new store to the public for their inspection, no goods being sold. On Saturday, October 20th, the store opened for the sale of goods, and has been crowded with customers daily ever since.

"LOW PRICES FOR HIGH QUALITIES" IS OUR MOTTO.

What we try to do in getting up our Clothing, is to pick out what intelligent people would want if they knew cloth as we know it.

There are different wants and different tastes. We mean to provide for them.

There are also a worldful of cheaper-looking Clothing that is made to waste money on.

We don't sell that sort. Everything is dependable here.

MEN'S SUITS.

At $8, we have a good assortment of Cassimeres and Fancy Cheviots in D. B and S. B. suits. All sizes, 34 to 44.

At $10 we show an immense line in both Sacks and Cutaways, including a famous Black Cheviot, the name of which we're not allowed to tell. Sizes 34 to 44.

At $12, $13.50 and $15, the lines are larger yet, and include our famous Clay Worsted Dress Suit at $15. We have sold hundreds of them. They lead easily. Sizes 34 to 44.

At $16.50, we've got the best that's made anywhere. The assortment that we show at these prices is far larger than you'd spend time to look through. Sizes 34 to 44

MEN'S OVERCOATS.

At $7.50 there's stock enough for a fair selection: The best in the lot is a clean, Black Cheviot with silk velvet collar.
These coats would easily sell at $10.

At $10 our great "Home Ruler" comes to the front as being the best in the business. Made from all wool beaver in three colors, Blue, Black and Brown. They are the equal of any $12 coat in this city.

At $12, $13.50 and $15 an assortment of Beavers' Kerseys and few Chinchillas, made and trimmed in the best possible manner. At these prices we show over four hundred Overcoats.

At $18, $20, $25 and $30, the cream of the Overcoat world.

All the leading shapes and cloth and all the newest kinks of the tailor's art.

We want to punctuate right here our Great lines of Men's Winter Ulsters.

We're going to make a reputation for ourselves this winter on Ulsters. It's a bit early to talk them, we know: but when you want one you'll do best with your dollars by consulting our stock.

We start them at $6.50 to $25, with whole counterful at $8, $10, $12, $13.50, $15, $18, $20 and $22.

By all means consult us on Ulsters!

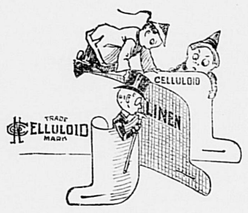
Then it's easy enough—and safe enough, too. Millions of women are washing in this way. Are you?

Soak your clothes in Pearline and water (over night is best); boil them in Pearline and water twenty minutes; rinse them—and they will be clean.

When you think what you save by doing away with the rubbing, the saving of health, the saving of clothes, the saving of hard work, time and money—then isn't it time to think about washing with Pearline?

Beware of imitations. 335 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.



"CELLULOID" COLLARS AND CUFFS are made by covering a linen collar or cuff with "celluloid," thus making them strong, durable and waterproof. When soiled they can be cleaned by simply wiping off with a wet cloth. No other waterproof goods are made with this interlining, consequently no other goods can possibly give satisfaction. Do not forget that every piece of the genuine is stamped as follows:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Insist upon goods so marked and refuse anything else if offered. If your dealer does not keep them you can procure a sample from us direct by enclosing amount and stating size and whether stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted. Collars 25c. each. Cuffs 50c. pair.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. Va. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure.

Any one who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope, and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it.' 25 and 50 cent bottles.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

But then it sort o' eased my mind to think that, after all,
We hadn't changed our record much—we've allers had the call
At chasin' Britishers around when there was suthin' up
A great sight more important than a pewter mug or cup.

I wasn't overcome with pride, along about July,
When foreign-made Americans, out there in Illiny,
Got kickin' up a nasty row, a-tryin' for to show
That rule o' mob was just the thing, and law would have to go;

But then again that had its side that sort o' made me glad,
When Grover upped an' spanked 'em like he would a sassy lad.
It took a riot just like that to show the folks that jeer
That we kin handle mobs because we've got a gov'ment here.

An' then, ye know, o' course, that I'm a rock-ribbed Democrat,
An' like the rest I'm askin', sorter dazed, "where we are at?"
It ain't much cause for thankfulness to git oneself knocked out,
Unless ye look inside an' see what brought the thing about.

An' when I do that thing I'm glad and thankful, for I see
We Democrats have thrashed ourselves, and won a victory.
We've taken up the leaders that were bad, each single scamp,
And drummed 'em, yes, we've drummed 'em, we have drummed 'em out o' camp.

And while, o' course, we're nervous an' a trembly in our knees,
We'll soon get o'er the wobbles an' be chipper as you please,
And we'd ought all to be thankful that we got into this fix,
Since it leaves us with no trai'ors to our cause for '96.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured.

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?"

A Rose Might Smell as Sweet, but Adulteration would be More Easy.

What's in a name? asked the poet of old. Modern housekeepers could have enlightened him. They know that the goods sold by a house with an established name is a reputation to lose are infinitely less likely to be adulterated than those nameless articles bought in bulk.

OVERCOATS AND ULSTERS.

It would do you good to hear the expressions of admiration that fall from the lips of sensible, practical persons upon beholding the style and beauty of the elegant Overcoats and Ulsters displayed here. Pleasant as this is, it is not at all surprising, because it is only another evidence that honest merit, in clothing as in everything else, is always appreciated. There can be no finer or handsomer garments than those shown here. In cut, style, material, trimmings and workmanship throughout, they are simply perfection itself. The prices range from $8.50 to $40.—but whatever figure you pay, you may be sure of the finest garment for the money that you ever laid eyes upon.

DON'T PASS THESE SUITS.

Good luck and ready cash have brought us 200 Sack Suits for men and young men. These are made of fine black Cheviots and fancy Scotch Mixtures, single and double breasted cut in the very latest style.

VAGABONDIA.

It is a country of the sun,
Full of forgotten yesterdays,
When Time takes summer in his care
And fills the distance of her gaze.

It stretches from the open sea
To the blue mountains and beyond.
The world is Vagabondia
To him who is a vagabond.

In the beginning God made man
Out of the wandering dust, men say,
And in the end his life shall be
A wandering wind and blown away.

* * * * * * *

There is a tavern, I have heard,
Not far, and frugal, kept by one
Who knows the children of the word,
And welcomes each when day is done.

Some say the house is lonely set
In northern night, and snowdrifts keep
The silent door. The hearth is cold,
And all my fellows gone to sleep.

* * * * * * *

Had I my will! I hear the sea
Thunder a welcome on the shore.
I know where lies the hostelry
And who should open me the door.

THE CRIMSON BOW.

"I see," said my friend, the state inspector, as he lazily stood on the corner and followed with his restless eyes the two bank clerks who were carrying a heavy load of currency to the clearing house, "I see that it's quite the fad nowadays to fill up the papers and magazines with detective stories. I suppose this here Sherlock Holmes fellow is responsible for it."

I agreed that he had diagnosed the matter about right and immediately braced myself against the side of the nearby building in a sort of interrogative attitude, knowing well that my friend, the inspector, would have something more of interest to say, if it was only to express an opinion.

"Well," he continued as the bank clerks disappeared within the entrance to the clearing house, "I have read some of these stories, and I think I could tell a few myself that would go them one better. I have one in mind now that would interest you, and a local one at that, but I've got to meet my partner round on Milk street in 20 minutes, and I don't believe I ought to start on it now."

I insisted that he should, however, and he rather reluctantly, as I thought, began to tell the tale.

"The story I am about to tell you," said he impressively, "concerns one of the most interesting and mysterious cases that ever came under my observation and goes to prove, among other things, that even a first class college education will sometimes fail to restrain a man's criminal propensities. In fact, I sometimes think it has a tendency to augment them.

"But I'm not talking to you about the philosophy of crime. I'm going to tell you about the commission of it.

"One evening in the summer of 1882 shortly before 9 o'clock two men walking through one of the side streets of the west end of Boston stumbled over the prostrate form of a man. It was lying on the dark sidewalk a little distance from a couple of small stores which furnished about the only light to the street, the electric service being only in its inception about that time.

"A hasty examination on the part of the two startled pedestrians discovered that the body had been subjected to the most horrible mutilation. A terrible gash had been made in the side of the head, evidently with a sharp hatchet. One of the arms was chopped clean off, and various other mutilations had been made by the fiendish assailant.

"How such a dreadful deed could have been committed in a thickly settled neighborhood within a stone's throw of two open stores without instant discovery was something the two men could not understand.

"I was connected with the Joy Street station at that time—and, by the way, I never could understand why they didn't either change the name of that street or move the station house off of it—and being a special officer I was assigned to work up the case.

"I had mighty little to work on when I started, but when I got through I felt that I was farther along toward promotion than I was when I first began.

"Even the very victim of the crime was useless in the way of furnishing a clew. The body was neatly attired in a new suit of rather pronounced blue, but there was an utter absence of watch, cards, letters or anything else upon which identification might be based.

"I wasted no time in trying to identify the victim, but gave my first attention to looking around for a motive and an assailant. This may strike you as apparently reversing the usual process of unraveling a crime of this sort, but I had my reasons for doing it, as will appear later.

"My first discovery was the ax with which the deed had been accomplished. This really helped me very little, however, for I was not long in finding that it had been taken from in front of the farthest of the two little stores. The instrument was what is known as a broadax and had been taken from a case in front of the store, where a lot of other tools were displayed for sale.

"The other store, I should have remarked, was one of those furnishing stores so common in the west and north ends of the city. Strange to say, the proprietor of neither saw the theft of the ax nor heard anything of what had happened so near them.

"From the hardware dealer, however, I did elicit the information that he had heard, probably about ten minutes before the two men had made their sensational discovery, a party of young men pass the door, evidently full of enthusiasm or something stronger. He knew they were young men by the tone of their voices, although he had not taken enough interest in them to turn round and look in their direction.

"This news might prove of importance, so I made a mental note of the circumstance. You see, we detectives are a good deal like you newspaper men—we have to study the trifles as well as the manifestly important things, for it is the sum total of the trifles that usually counts in our case.

"I returned to the scene and studied every square inch of the ground, or rather the brick sidewalk. Brick sidewalks are a good deal like dead men themselves, however—they tell few tales—and for a time I was totally without anything resembling a clew.

"I had almost given up my search in despair when I came across a small bow of bright crimson ribbon that was lying in the gutter among a lot of rubbish not far from the spot where the deed had been committed.

"It was badly soiled, having evidently been trampled underfoot in a scuffle, and while I was unable to invest it with any special significance at the time I put it in my pocket along with a half burned cigarette I discovered about the same time and went home to do a little thinking.

"A piece of ribbon which might have come there in 100 different ways made a rather dubious clew, considering the circumstances, and a half burned cigarette was even more so.

"I have a curious faculty of being able to think more quickly and clearly when I have a pen or pencil in my hand, just as some writers can map out plots and incidents best when similarly equipped, and so I sat down with a pad in front of me and began to systematically go over all I had seen and heard, making a note or a diagram here or there and being wonderfully assisted by the operation.

"I tried in a dozen ways to connect the supposititious young roisterers, whom nobody had seen and only one man had heard, with the ax, the bow of ribbon and the cigarette.

"It was the only thing I could do just at that juncture, and it was the easiest thing in the world to connect them in theory, all except the bow of ribbon, which would hardly be thought of in conjunction with a man, young or old, and of course it wasn't a woman who had done the deed.

"This led me to figuratively hold the red ornament up against a feminine background, and I was struck by the curious thought that if such a small and peculiarly shaped bow had been worn by a female at all it must have adorned a very small girl. I certainly could not remember ever having seen such a one about the person of a woman, either in her hair or upon her garments.

"'This is unimportant, however,' said I to myself after revolving the matter in my mind, 'for it might really have been dropped by a little girl in the daytime, perhaps from her doll.'

"Yet I could not dismiss the matter wholly from my mind. Having reached the end of my theory building for the present, I mechanically took up the morning paper, partly as a duty I owed myself and my country as a good citizen and partly to get a moment's respite from my thoughts.

"One of the first things my eye fell upon was an article describing the defeat of the Yale baseball team by Harvard the day before and what was thought about it by the sporting world. I was somewhat interested in it, being a baseball crank myself, but probably more on account of the curious fact that the victory had been with the crimson.

"With the crimson!

"Like a flash the red bow of ribbon came to me again. It fairly flaunted before my eyes as I read farther down the column about the crazy goings on of some of the Harvard undergraduates over the defeat of the hated blue in Cambridge the night before.

"The hated blue!

"Another electric shock fairly set me on fire with excitement as I thought of the second color.

"For the victim of the ax had been dressed in a blue suit.

"Here was the whole plot unfolded before me in a flash.

"The boisterous men whom the hardware dealer had heard were Harvard students out celebrating the victory in their own peculiar Harvard style.

"One of them, either drunk or made temporarily insane at the sight of the blue suit on the unknown victim, had snatched the ax, rushed up to him and committed the madman's deed that had sent me forth upon the trail. In the scuffle the crimson bow had been detached from his coat, and here it was now in my hands.

"Apparently nothing remained now but to find out just what particular party had struck off through this section of the town, and the fact that there were more than two in the crowd made the ultimate discovery of their identity almost certain.

"My conclusions proved to be exactly right, for a half a day's work put in between the spot where the deed was committed and Craigie's bridge resulted in a complete description of all of the members of the party—they were four in number—and the exact identity of one of them.

"Furthermore, I discovered through a barkeeper whom I knew that every one of the four had a crimson bow in his buttonhole when he left his place.

"Well, after that it was mere child's play," said the inspector as he glanced up nervously at the old statehouse clock. "I had no trouble at all in fastening the guilt upon the particular member of the party who had done the cutting. The arrest was made in the yard, and I can tell you it was a dramatic one. I would give you the details, but I am due on the next block in just three minutes."

"But the murderer?" I said. "What was done with him?"

"The what! Oh, he was arraigned in court next day, of course. The evidence was conclusive, and he was fined $50 and costs. The judge came pretty near sending him to the island without the option of a fine."

"Fined $50 for an atrocious, cold blooded deed like that!" I gasped. "You must be crazy."

"Not at all," replied the inspector suavely as he stepped off the curb. "I forgot to tell you in the first place that the man who was chopped up was a very life-like dummy that had stood in front of the furnishing store.

"That doesn't prevent it from being a first class detective story, however, does it? Just give my regards to Sherlock Holmes when you see him."—Thomas F. Anderson in Boston Globe.

Mr. Scott's Views of Heaven.

A glimpse of heaven is a rare if not unheard of privilege, yet John A. Scott, a well known and reliable old Philadelphian who resides at 2427 North Seventh street, claims to have enjoyed that extraordinary distinction.

Two years ago Mr. Scott was so ill that the doctors and his family had given up all hope of his recovery. The night on which the grim reaper was expected the old man fell into a trance, and all felt the end had come. It was during this temporary lapse of life that Mr. Scott found himself ascending a grand marble stairway leading to the gates of heaven. There he found St. Peter and begged to be admitted. The venerable gatekeeper refused, but the eager supplicant mentioned a number of high church dignitaries with whom he was acquainted on earth and claimed they were particular friends of his. Peter finally admitted him for a short stroll through paradise. Mr. Scott says everything was golden hued and surpassingly beautiful. There were myriads of angels flitting through the air, enjoying a siesta on the glittering highways or disporting in a crystal lake. There was not a man among them. While Mr. Scott was contemplating this startling condition of celestial affairs St. Peter tapped him gently on the shoulder and told him his time was up. Mr. Scott was so charmed with the interior beauty of heaven that he backed slowly away from the gate and fell down to the bottom of the big stairway.

The next day he was convalescent.—Philadelphia Record.

Marriage Ceremony—Finland.

Marriage fetes in Finland, as in Norway, are often prolonged for several days, even among folk of humble rank. One peculiarity, which may excite more surprise than approval among eligible suitors in our own country, is that the Finnish lover never himself 'pops the question" to the girl of his choice. The momentous proposal is made through a third person, called the "talman," to whom the happy couple give a present when his delicate mediation proves successful and ends in a wedding. Not uncommonly their gift to the talman takes the unromantic form of a shirt.

In like manner the clergyman who presides over the nuptial service receives a simple and inexpensive present, often a handkerchief and a pair of warm hair gloves. A similar gift is bestowed upon the officiating priest at funerals. Upon these mournful occasions the service is exceedingly simple—more so than would satisfy the views of British undertakers—but the burial is, as a rule, followed by large hospitality on the part of the bereaved family.—Westminster Review.

She—Oh, Charlie, papa is going to give us $100,000 when we marry!

He—Is that so, darling? Well, suppose we get married a few months sooner than we expected.—Detroit Free Press.

Cayuga lake, in New York, was so named from an Indian word meaning "lake of the murky land."

TRAINING ANIMALS TO ACT.

Educating Dogs and Baboons to Amuse the Public.

Down Brixton way they live, and theirs is one of the nattiest and airiest houses in the road. The milkman sings at the area door, and down from the room on the drawing room floor, where he has been very busy indeed, runs one of the firm to make sure of the supply of milk. If you happened to pass by in the road just as this dairy transaction takes place, you would laugh, even if you were the grimmest and most morose of men. It is altogether too funny. The door opens, the youth hands in some substantial cans—for the firm is a large one, requiring a good deal in the way of their daily dinner, tea and supper—and out of the door the said partner pokes his brown nose in a quiet but very businesslike fashion. He only wants a pair of goggles to convert him into the typical stage doorkeeper who looks out of his lodge in pompous style, inquiring, "What is it you want?"

Instead of goggles our friend of the Brixton firm is attired in something else. A padded oblong erection adorns his back.

At first you might find it difficult to give the thing a name, but when you have presently been admitted to the offices of the firm you will appreciate the virtues of this saddle. Its wearer is a spaniel of the sporting variety, and besides being the keeper of the milk cans he is also present in the character of a thoroughbred race horse, and when he waddled, somewhat stealthily, down to the area door he ought really to have stuck to his guns up stairs, for there, in the large front room, a performance by the entire staff of the firm of Babe & Co. is going on. Just now there is a pause in the performance. The boxing members—three of them in tights, belts and knickers—glower at each other from the seats to which they have retired. A fourth, in gray raiment, sniffs critically at the skipping rope, which two minutes ago served him in the fulfillment of his duties as champion terrier. In the center of the room sits Babe, the head of the firm, whose private family name is Baboon, and on the shoulder of one of the "sleeping partners"—to wit, Mr. and Mrs. Macart,—sits the most intelligent and mischievous looking of little apes. Some years ago Mr. and Mrs. Macart and their nine performing dogs were the delight of London. They "worked" at a big music hall, and great was their success. They were among the most popular soloists on the large music hall stages. In the provinces they were always welcome, and America, their native country, received them and their dogs always with gladness.

Not the least part of their universal popularity they owed to the fact that their performing dogs were a happy family. We saw them on the stage and off, at times when a crowd applauded them and when Mr. Fred Macart was with them all alone behind the scenes. The animals were madly fond of their master and mistress, who taught by kindness, and not by cruelty, and made no virtue of it. "You see," Mr. Macart said in his quiet way, while three hounds attempted to lick his face and two terriers tugged impudently at his trousers legs, "you see, it doesn't answer to frighten the animals. You make them hate and fear you, and they work without spirit, and the public won't stand it and hiss you off the stage. You coax them into learning their tricks, you praise them if they do well and give them just a taste of the whip if they're obstinate or sulky, and you get them just to love to show off. I don't know about trainers of performing animals being paragons of gentleness and patience. We, my wife and I, are fond of our dogs and monkeys, but that's neither here nor there. The point is, you can do with them what you like almost in the way of training them if you train them by kindness. It's the best and, in fact, the only policy." And then Babe, in a sudden fit of affection, bounded upon Mr. Macart's arm, hugged him tightly with her long hairy arms, made a babbling noise of approval and delight and began what looked like studies of phrenology with her master's skull.

"Time!" calls out the master of ceremonies, and into the middle of the room bound the two jolly boxers and begin the most absurd and spirited tussle imaginable. "Give it to him, Pepper!" "Go it, Mustard!" And the comical performance goes on and on till a third gentleman of the same breed of rough coated terriers comes upon the scene. He wears a policeman's uniform and is most imposing to behold in his capacity of representative of the law. He interferes between the prizefighters and would have you believe that he is sternly opposed to such creatures as prize boxers and professional fighters. But in his eyes all the time there gleams a light of intellectual enjoyment of the scene which belies his general demeanor, and the way in which he deals blows right and left for the ostensible purpose of separating the sportsmen shows that his delight is in their work and his own.—Westminster Budget.

An Alaskan Ice Cave.

"While at Birch creek," said Mr. Oberlander, "I was informed of the discovery of a wonderful cave by a miner named Schumann. I was unable to visit the cave, which is located 40 miles above Masterdan creek. Schumann states that this cave is 80 feet in length and varies from 4 to 70 feet in width. After entering through a small aperture, the sides of which are composed of granite, one emerges into a solid ice chamber, from which hang numerous stalactites glistening like silver. Schumann was surprised to find that there were a number of air currents in the cave, the source of which he could not determine. At one side he found a black bear sitting partly upright. The sight of the animal alarmed him greatly at first, but failing to detect any signs of life he approached it and found that the bear was frozen stiff in a block of ice. He took his ax and chopped a piece off the animal. Picking up portions, he found that it crumbled at his touch.—San Francisco Examiner.

"A woman couldn't run for office," argued the fanny man, "because she can't find her pocket."

"Judging from what I have seen of politics," was his wife's austere rejoinder, "there would be plenty of people to find it for her."—Detroit Tribune.

INFINITY OF SPACE.

MATTERS BEYOND THE POWERS OF THE HUMAN MIND.

Still There Has Been Much Light Thrown Upon the Subject Since the Astronomers of the Seventeenth Century Declared That There Were Only One Thousand Stars.

There can be no subject more calculated to impress a man's mind with his own insignificance, compared with the overwhelming power and glory of his Creator, than the study and contemplation of the firmament in all its boundless infinity. It is not to be wondered at that from the earliest ages the subject has never failed to exercise a fascination over men, and that those who, by their genius and learning, have most nearly succeeded in solving its mysteries have always been reverenced and esteemed to be among the wisest men of their day. More has been done within the last 50 years than in all the rest of the world's history toward the piercing of the veil which shuts off from our eyes the beauties and mysteries of far-off realms, and doubtless, by means of the spectroscope and increased size in the lenses of our telescopes, we shall be enabled before long to unravel still more secrets of the universe, and further add to our stock of information regarding the construction and conditions of other worlds besides our own.

The question as to whether space is finite or infinite can never be satisfactorily argued out or indeed even thought of, for the human mind is incapable of grasping the existence of a limit to space, even in its most abstract form, but the question of the infinity of worlds and their distribution in the infinity of space lies more closely within the scope of human intellect, for we have many material facts and calculations to go upon in discovering the probable answer to this most fascinating question.

Only as far back as the seventeenth century astronomers placed the number of stars in the universe as a little over 1,000, but this was absurd, as the real number visible to the naked eye is about 7,000, and perhaps treble that number can be seen by persons with exceptionally good eyesight. When the heavens, however, are examined through a telescope, the number of visible stars are enormously increased. In fact, it has been calculated that the great Lick telescope, the most powerful yet made, reveals as many as 100,000,000! Yet what is that vast number compared with infinity? It cannot even be likened to a grain of sand on the seashore, and yet if we think the matter out carefully we shall see that the number of visible stars cannot really be infinite, for if they were the heavens would be a complete blaze of light. This, of course, we know, is far from being the case, and indeed there cannot be any doubt that, in certain parts of the heavens at least, the number of visible stars is already known, for even with the very strongest telescopes there are blank spaces which are absolutely devoid of stars below a certain magnitude or even the veriest trace of nebulous light.

These spaces are known to astronomers by the name of "coal sacks." They contain no stars fainter than the twelfth magnitude, and, in fact, appear to mark those parts of the universe which are comparatively thin. On the other hand, in other parts of the heavens we have not by any means reached the limit of telescopic resolvability. It is curious, though, that these intensely dark "holes" in the bright empyrean are mostly to be found in those parts of the heavens where most stars abound, notably in the Milky Way. These remarkable blank spots have been a favorite theme of discussion and argument among all astronomers, for, whatever the real shape or distribution of that universe may be, they point to the almost certain inference that in a particular direction at least there is an actual limit to the number of stars, and if there is a limit in one direction we have every right to suppose that such is the case in others, and that we have only to wait for telescopes strong enough to resolve those parts which are still unresolvable to discover that a point can be reached when all the stars of the universe are unfolded to our gaze, and that, no matter how keen the power of our mechanical vision, we can find no more.

If, now, we admit that the number of visible stars is limited, the next question to be asked is, What is the order or shape of their distribution? Various astronomers have had various theories about this matter. Herschel was inclined to think that the visible universe was in the shape of a disk, though his views in this direction were considerably modified during the later part of his life. Struve considered that the universe was in the shape of a disk of limited thickness, but infinite length—a theory which is hard to support, as, unless the ultimate extinction of light in space is believed in, that part of the heavens which lay toward the plane of the disk would necessarily shine with the brightness of the sun. The late Mr. Proctor, though finding it impossible to define any particular shape for the visible universe, as a whole, was of the opinion that the brightest part of it—namely, the Milky Way—was in the form of a spiral. This latter theory, however, has many objections to contend with. Other astronomers have had different theories on this question, but all, or nearly all, appear to admit an ultimate limit to the size of the visible universe, or, in other words, believe that the galaxy of worlds which surround us form, in fact, but an islet in the vast infinity of space.

It would appear at first sight that any attempt to solve the question of the existence of external galaxies and their distance was absolutely futile, yet such is not the case. The result of calculation is that the nearest external universe is so far distant that light from it traveling at the speed of 186,000 miles a second would take nearly 90,000,000 years to reach us!—Chambers' Journal.

Horns.

Professor Cyrus Adler, assistant curator of oriental antiques in the United States National museum, describes an endless variety of horns made of divers material used for religious purposes. The Berbers have an instrument made of two rams' horns, joined at the ends with a metal mouthpiece. An ox's horn or a cow's horn was sounded in India in honor of the Hindoo god Siva. In Africa the tusk of the elephant is used. The Etruscans had a bronze horn, a specimen of which is in the British museum. The kurna sounded by the Brahmans was sacred and not to be blown by any one of low caste. The Jewish shofar, made of a ram's horn, is the survival of the most ancient worship. Professor Adler writes, "It is not only the solitary musical instrument actually preserved in the Mosaic ritual, but the oldest form of wind instrument known to be retained in use in the world."—New York Times.

Making Socks In Sections.

A novelty has recently appeared in hosiery, the new idea being to make it possible to repair hosiery so that it will appear as if new. To this end fast seams in the mesh are made across the toe, ankle and heel. If, therefore, a hole appears in the toe, it is cut off and a new one attached, which is easily and quickly done by hand, the seams appearing practically the same as when new. In like manner the heel is repaired, or, in case of "general debility," the whole foot can be removed by cutting it off at the ankle. In order to make it possible for all to repair their own stockings it is the design of the manufacturer to furnish with every dozen pairs of hosiery one dozen extra pairs of feet, three dozen pairs of toes and three dozen pairs of heels.—Textile Record.

Honey Dew on Leaves.

The peculiar deposit often noticed on the upper surfaces of leaves, especially upon those of the basswood and the hickory, has been accounted for in two ways—by the excretion of a species of minute insect called aphides, and also as an exudation of the leaves themselves. It may be truthfully said that the cause of this exudation, which is a saccharine liquid of wonderful sweetness, is still an unsolved botanical mystery. Gray says, "It seems to be caused by something peculiar in the atmosphere and occurs most frequently on trees growing upon islands in temperate latitudes."—St. Louis Republic.

A PECULIAR HABIT.

People Who Eat Clay and Thrive on the Repulsive Food.

The natives of nearly all tropical countries, and especially those of the sea islands, exhibit many vagaries of taste in the matter of food, in many cases showing an almost irresistible desire to fill their stomachs with the various kinds of earth, generally clays. On first thought one would imagine that this clay eating habit had been formed through a desire to get alkaline substances into the stomach in order to neutralize the acids of that organ, but investigations prove the contrary, the clays which such people most crave being unctuous and wholly devoid of saline elements.

Humboldt says that the female pottery workers on the Madalena river, in South America, put large lumps of clay into their mouths quite frequently while shaping their earthenware vessels, and that the clay eating instinct is so strong in the natives of that region that infants of from 1½ to 3 years of age are tied in the huts to prevent them from overloading their stomachs with the unwholesome diet. On the Orinoco, too, our great traveler passed several days with a clay eating tribe of Indians called the Otomacs. He thus describes the peculiar habit as noted in that queer people:

"The earth which the Otomacs eat is a soft, yellowish white potter's clay, with a small quantity of oxide of iron as a constituent part.

"They seek for it on the banks of the Orinoco and Meta rivers and select it with great care, not considering all clays equally agreeable to eat. A very intelligent monk assured us that one of them would eat from three-quarters of a pound to 1½ pounds of this food in a single day. If you inquire of an Otomac Indian concerning his winter's provisions, he will point to a heap of clay balls stored away in his hut."

As noted in the opening, we find this queer earth eating practice diffused throughout the torrid zone and occasionally hear of the practice in Sweden, Norway, Finland and in New Caledonia as well as in the southern states of our own country. Why the human system should crave such odd food could probably be scientifically explained. However, it is not the purpose of this "note" to seek remote reasons for the existence of the habit, but simply to state that the practice, though admittedly a curious one, is well known in the various quarters of the globe.—St. Louis Republic.

JOHN'S FESTIVE IDEA.

But It Discouraged the Young Lady Who Was Teaching Him.

A clever girl, who would make a sensation in society if fate had been a little more kind to her in a material way, lives on a side street and is a constant source of amusement and joy to her little circle of friends. She is poor. She is compelled to turn and return her gowns, trim and retrim her bonnets and make all sorts of little sacrifices, and all because fate decreed that her father should be a quiet, unambitious, conscientious, dreaming sort of a fellow, instead of a bustling, money making, successful merchant. This girl has brains and good looks, and, what is better, originality, but she is compelled very often to walk because she has no car fare. She amuses herself with all sorts of things that other girls seldom think of. Her latest exploit is a class of Chinamen, into whose wooden heads she is endeavoring to inject a faint idea of the limitations of the English language and incidentally the Christian religion.

In her class, on a recent Sunday, she was giving Ching Poi an object lesson on the wonderful creations of God.

"See, Ching," she said, "see this beautiful rose. God made this rose. He made it to look pretty and smell sweet. God made all things, Ching. He made you, and he made me. Now, tell me, Ching, who made the rose?"

Ching grinned and said: "God. He makee lose."

"That's right, Ching. Now, why did he make the rose?"

"He makee lose to look pletty and smellee sweet."

"That's right. Who made you, Ching?"

"God makee me," replied Ching. "He makee me to look pletty and smellee sweet."

She is endeavoring to teach the Chinamen a few other things, but will let personal similes with the rose rest for awhile.—Kansas City Star.

Simplicity and Charity.

We smile at the childlike simplicity of the kind hearted man whose charity "believeth all things, hopeth all things," even of those whom the man of the world distrusts. "But," as Dr. Holmes says, "the angels laugh, too, at the good he has done."

Dr. Dobbin, an old fashioned clergyman of Dublin, was noted for his kindness to the poor and for the simplicity with which he trusted them, as if they could be guilty of no deception. Once a man was begging at the clergyman's carriage window. Having no change about him, he handed the beggar a guinea, saying, "Go, my poor man, get me change of that, and I will give you a shilling." He never saw the beggar's face again.

One day his wife, on coming home, found him in the hall with his hands behind his back, as if hiding something. She insisted on knowing what it was, and he timidly brought out from behind his back a roasted leg of mutton. He had quietly taken it from the spit in the kitchen to give to a poor woman waiting at the door.—Youth's Companion.

Evolution of Letters.

Mr. Balfour presents a theory for the formation of letters which is as follows: Suppose a man of today, fairly artistic, were to draw a snail crawling on a branch. The artistic man has ten friends. He gives his sketch to No. 1, who copies the snail on the branch, and then No. 1 gives his own sketch to No. 2. Then No. 2 gives his to No. 3, and so on until the No. 10 concludes the circle. Nine of them have not seen the original. What kind of a picture would be turned out at the end of the series? Something probably with but the vaguest resemblance to the snail. Primitive man may have made a lifelike sketch of something, which, passing to a second generation, bore no semblance to the original. Then a scrath or a scrawl may have meant a horse or a wolf. Thus may have come hieroglyphs, and later on fixed letters.—New York Times.

Abstruse Mathematics.

"Now, Johnny," said the arithmetic teacher, "suppose that one man were to put a stone 2 feet thick on top of another like stone, and the next day another on top of that and keep on thus for 70 years, what would be the result?"

"I dunno," replied the student, "but I guess he'd have a pretty good start for a new postoffice."—Washington Star.

Bco, the exclamation used to frighten children, is a corruption of Bah, the name of a famous Gothic general. It has been used for a terror word for centuries.

For Weak Women.

A Discovery of Priceless Value.

What Gives One Woman Advantage Over Another.

How to be Master of Yourself and Look Your Best.

Shakespeare says: "He jests at scars that never felt a wound."

How often it happens that weak, nervous suffering women are the subjects of ridicule by friends, who, being well themselves, cannot understand such feelings in others. Yet there is no more terrible suffering than that resulting from nervousness, and it is the most prevalent of all complaints.

The most frightful tortures haunt the mind; the person is in constant dread of impending evil; sleep refuses to come, and the merest trifles cause worry and anxiety. Thoughts of insanity develop, and the poor sufferer feels weak, tired and unable to do anything. There are sometimes faintness and sinking at the stomach, loss of appetite, coated tongue, and lack of interest in society and daily affairs. Female weakness, with pains in the side, back or abdomen, are often present. Miss Nettie Richards, of Livermore Falls, Maine, says:

"For two years I had hysterics, and was fearfully nervous. I would have them every day, and was in terrible condition. My limbs were cold all the time. I could not sleep nights and had no appetite. My nerves were in a frightful state, and I was very weak.

MISS NETTIE RICHARDS.

"I could not walk but what it put me out of breath. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me no good. One day a friend wished me to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"After taking three bottles of this wonderful medicine I was in perfect health. I think it a splendid medicine, and would advise everybody to try it."

To look well and feel well you want strong nerves and good blood. They are quickly, surely and permanently made by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It is doing wonderful work among the sick and suffering. It will cure you also. You need just such a remedy.

It is the discovery of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. You can consult him free, personally or by letter.

HE WALTZED IN PERU.

Not Knowing What Etiquette Demanded, He Had a Hard Time.

This one is told by a navy officer on himself: One of our handsome ships, with her handsome officers, was cruising in Peruvian waters, and while in port the grand ball in honor of the wife of the president of the republic was given. The young officer was there in full uniform, which is warm enough at any time, but which, in a ballroom, after a number of whirls in a giddy waltz, such as the Spanish descendants in Peru put up, is anything but an ice cooler. Our young hero invited a charming Peruvian to waltz. She consented, and away they went.

After several turns about the room he began to wish the young lady would suggest that they promenade, as most of the other couples did from time to time, but not she. On they went, spinning and prancing. The heavy uniform had become a sweatbox. The young man was burning up. "Will she never stop?" asked the young officer under his breath. Early in the game he had exhausted the few Spanish phrases he knew. He did not dare stop until she did, as such a breach of etiquette might mean that her brother would be likely to put a stiletto between his ribs for insulting his sister by stopping in a waltz before she did.

The Peruvian waltz lasts 20 minutes. That is a long time in a tight fitting uniform in a tropical climate. Our ensign began to wabble, but he kept his feet, and that girl never seemed to weary. When the 20 minutes had expired, the music ceased. Other couples had waltzed and stopped and waltzed again. Some of his brother officers had waltzed with half a dozen beautiful senoritas, and they were wondering why he was so devoted to the particular one he was still hugging and whirling when the music stopped. He led her to a seat, and for himself sought the open air and unbuttoned his coat.

He was in a pitiable plight. He did not enter the ballroom again for two hours, and when he did was still too weak to dance or enjoy the festivities. The young lady he had waltzed with avoided him. Other ladies, who had seen the long distance record, seemed pleased that he did not ask them to dance when presented. Later in the evening he learned that it was the Peruvian custom for the gentleman to suggest that they should cease waltzing and promenade or retire from the floor. It would have been immodest for his partner to suggest stopping. The young officer says the memory of that Peruvian night haunts him still.—Washington Star.

JAPANESE PAGODAS.

Earthquake Proof, and Therefore Able to Stand the Severest Shock.

The absence of buildings of any size and antiquity in Japan is ascribed to the destruction of them by the frequent earthquakes which occur. The only structures which seem to be earthquake proof are the pagodas, which are erected before the temples. There are many pagodas which are 700 or 800 years old and as solid as when first built. There is a reason for this, and it lies in their construction. A pagoda is practically a framework of heavy timbers, which starts from a wide base and is in itself a substantial structure, but it is rendered still more stable by a peculiar device. Inside the framework and suspended from the apex is a long, heavy bulk of timber 2 feet thick or more. This hangs from one end, and to the other end are bolted, at each of the four sides, four more heavy timbers, and if the pagoda be very lofty still more timbers are added on to these. The whole forms an enormous pendulum which reaches to within six inches of the ground. When the shock of an earthquake rocks the pagoda, the pendulum swings in unison and keeps the center of gravity always at the base of the framework. Consequently the equilibrium of the pagoda is never disturbed, and this is the explanation of the great age of many of them, when from their height one would suppose them to be peculiarly susceptible to the effect of an earthquake.

Hitherto the long sticks of timber in the center of the pagoda have been supposed to be for the purpose of supporting the framework. It was not until the recent earthquake brought them into prominence that their purpose became generally known among Europeans.—New York World.

Peculiar Chinese Dishes.

Some of the dishes were extremely nice, notably the little shreds of roast mutton, excellently seasoned, such as I learned ever after to call for with confidence at Chinese inns. On the other hand, the chicken was made uneatable, and the eggs on this occasion, I am bound to say, were inexpressibly nasty. The taste for them as eaten in China had need to be acquired, no doubt, for I had been told at Vierny of the wonderful pains and expense at which Chinese gormands preserve their eggs till they are black and putrid, and of which they are as proud when many, many years old as an English squire of his crusted port. I have, moreover, a vague impression, which for the moment I cannot verify, that I somewhere tasted these ancient delicacies and found them good, but on the present occasion my notebook condemns them utterly.

The rissoles of pork sausage were tasty, and so were the French beans, peas and hearts of cabbage stalk cut in slices, and the mandarin oranges preserved in sirup. We helped ourselves to these delicacies as we pleased, but our host every now and then with his chopsticks placed on the plate of one or other of his three guests a choice morsel, which mercifully it was not a matter of unbending etiquette that one should eat. It was polite, of course, occasionally to return the compliment and help him to tidbits with one's knife and fork.—"Chinese Central Asia," Harry Lansdell.

Breakfast.

The Watchman says: It may be almost said as goes breakfast so goes the day. The appearance of the breakfast table has power for good or ill over the appetite. It is not so much the kind of food placed before one as it is the way in which it is served that makes it inviting or uninviting. So, too, it makes a vast deal of difference whether one sits down to breakfast in a thankful, pleasant frame of mind or in a moody and fault finding spirit. Breakfast should be eaten amid smiles and cheery conversation. Bright looks and merry words are most excellent appetizers and digesters, better tonics than any apothecary can recommend. Nor, if it can be helped, is one's breakfast to be eaten hurriedly. It is much wiser to abridge the morning nap than to abridge the morning meal. If you want to be a pessimist and win the reputation of a chronic growler, you are on the right road to success. A generous half hour devoted to breakfast is time well spent. Eat leisurely and not too heartily, and you will be stronger and happier for it all the day. The art of breakfasting rightly is one of the distinguishing marks of higher civilization.

A Modern Diogenes.

A man had a quarrel with his wife which led to a breach of the peace. The woman took her revenge by refusing to speak to him for several days. The husband, who was good natured enough when not excited, could not bear this protracted silence any longer and thought of a way to break the spell. One afternoon he lighted a candle, stuck it in a lantern, and while his wife was sitting in the room busy sewing he began to look under the table, the chairs, etc., as though he had lost something. At this the wife could not help laughing, and she asked him:

"What are you looking for?"

Delighted at having gained his point, he cheerfully replied:

"I was looking for your tongue."—Thuringer Monatsblatt.

Harper's Weekly
IN 1895

HARPER'S WEEKLY is a pictorial history of the times. It presents every important event, promptly, accurately, and exhaustively in illustration and descriptive text of the highest order.

The manner in which, during 1894, it has treated the Chicago Railway Strikes and the Chino-Japanese War, and the amount of light it was able to throw on Korea the instant attention was directed to that little-known country, are examples of its almost boundless resources. JULIAN RALPH, the distinguished writer and correspondent, has been sent to the seat of war, and there joined by C. D. WELDON, the well-known American artist, now for many years resident in Japan, who has been engaged to co-operate with Mr. RALPH in sending to HARPER'S WEEKLY exclusive information and illustrations.

During 1895 every vital question will be discussed with vigor and without prejudice in the editorial columns, and also in special articles by the highest authorities in each department. Portraits of the men and women who are making history, and powerful and caustic political cartoons, will continue to be characteristic features. This Busy World, with its keen and kindly comment on the lesser doings of the day, will remain a regular department.

FICTION. There will be two powerful serials, both handsomely illustrated—The Red Cockade, a stirring romance of olden days by STANLEY J. WEYMAN, and a novel of New York, entitled The Son of His Father, by BRANDER MATTHEWS—several novelettes, and many short stories by popular writers.

Send for Illustrated Prospectus.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY begin with the first Number for January of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of Order.

Cloth Cases for each volume, suitable for binding, will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1.00 each. Title-page and Index sent on application.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss.

Were It Twenty Centuries Ago.

If this were twenty centuries ago,
And three wise men should seek my house, and say:
"We bring glad tidings! Christ is born to-day;
Arise and follow yonder star, whose glow
Will lead you to the Child!"—would I obey
If this were twenty centuries ago?

From out my urn of precious hoarded things
Would I make haste to pour the richest share
For him? The sweetest of my perfumes spare
To bathe the feet of the young King of Kings?
Or break the costliest ointment on his hair
From out my urn of precious, hoarded things?

Alas! I dare not say this would I do,
Since I have slighted many another guest
That came from God—have strayed from many a quest
That would have led me to the good and true,
To slumber on, with head upon my breast;
Nay, nay! I dare not say this would I do.

My best resolves like shifting shadows are;
Each day some holy light shines on unsought,—
And while my fluttering wings are caught
By the world's rosy candle, Christ's own star,—
How can I tell?—might beckon me for naught;
My best resolves like shifting shadows are.

And when Christ comes again,—as come he will,—
And wise ones hasten out with rapt delight
To welcome him, and own his kingly right,
Will men be questioning and doubting still,
As when upon that first, far Christmas night,—
When Christ shall come again,—as come he will?

—May Riley Smith.

ONE CHRISTMAS NIGHT.

"Are you the clargyman who was to marry Ed Andrews this afternoon? Because if you are, Ed wants you to come to the signal tower No. 1 quick, mighty quick, too!"

I replied that I had an appointment for a wedding at the parsonage at six o'clock, and —yes, on consulting my memorandum I found the name. "But—"

"Well, you are the man Ed wants to see," the messenger shot at me in a volley, "and he can't get off. The poor chap 's most dead. Been on duty thirteen hours now, and all unnerved. Come on. Get your hat. I'll show you the way through the yard. It is most dark now, and this is the time trains should be rushing."

"What's the matter?"

"Strike! Come!"

I had read of the threatenings of the dread strike by switchmen and others in the daily papers. In fact, I sat reading the evening city papers, whose big headlines announced the event as actually on, when this roughly-dressed but kindly-faced man burst into my study so excitedly.

I took a second look at my visitor and concluded to obey his command. We passed through the great station, over whose gray and gathering shadows a deeper gloom than usual seemed to be falling. I nodded good-evening, I remember, to the president of the road as he stood consulting with a knot of officials on the platform. The president was grave and anxious. His face was bloodless, pale, by no means smiling as usual. The train house was packed with cars and a dozen engines were puffing and snorting at the front of as many trains, no one of which gave any signs of starting. The cars were literally jammed; especially was this the case with the suburban trains. I noticed, as we threaded our way past the long lines of cars, that the same omnious silence seemed to brood over the passengers. Even the crowded platforms were still, no man saying aught to his neighbor.

"Are incoming trains also held like this up the road, do you know?" I asked of my guide.

He whispered the reply. "The tunnel is empty. But they are all jammed up afore. That's Ed's trouble."

"Ed? You mean Mr. Andrews, the bridegroom?"

"Exactly. Be careful! The moguls are steaming round lively. They 'd chew us up quick. Look sharp!" and he pulled me aside just in season to escape being knocked down by a sneaking box car, which a "mogul," that is a switching engine, was pushing up toward the tower.

"Why is it so dark?" I asked.

The man did not reply verbally, but pointed to a knot of idle men near the wall. I afterwards learned that these men had "strangled every electric light wire within reach," so that the gloom of the falling night was only relieved by the headlights below us and the twinkling switch signals. These latter were guarded by three militia men in every instance, their bayonets tipped with the dim red fire from the waiting locomotives at the head of the train house.

A moment more and we were standing at the end of the room in the tower where seemingly countless switch levers in two long rows lifted their polished steel handles like a double file of soldiers in the first motions of "charge bayonets."

"Awful glad to see you," exclaimed Mr. Andrews, who stood with his two hands among the levers. He did not look up, but kept his big black eyes trained on the electric annunciator board before him.

"What can I do for you?" I asked briefly, not daring to move lest I might get in the way of this one faithful man whose strained nerves held the lives of thousands of people in their sway.

"I am all—alone—" click, the right hand lever came to reverse, moving the semaphore two thousand feet away, "and I must stand." Click! Another lever was reversed. "The boys—you being a preacher I dare tell you."

But the electric annunciator began its alarm, and though it was not by any means a loud note, yet the whirr of that little bell was so big with fate that it seemed like a toc-sin call to war.

My man gave me no attention, even for the completion of his weighty secret, till he had marked the changes on the board, and governed himself accordingly. Then, with his pallid face hectic by fatigue, his eyes still reading the board, he went on: "The boys have got all three of the other men to leave the town. I would not go. Here I am, if they don't shoot me. Did you bolt the door, Wallace?"

"Yes, after me and the preacher came in," replied his friend, who had been my guide.

"No, sir," resumed Andrews, "my sweetheart's on the Fast Mail. She's up at the third tower from here. How do I know? Wallace, here, is rear-end brake on the mail going out. He lives up at — street, and came down to take his train. Fannie saw him walking through the jam up there, and hailed him from the window to bring me word. But, of course, I expected her, and I expected to be off duty at two o'clock."

Andrews ceased to speak. He seemed to be most intensely listening. His glance was for the first time lifted for an instant from the annunciator board, where, in diagram, the complex mass of white lines indicated the real steel out of doors. I saw by his glance that he was expecting some signal from the train despatcher in the great station. Wallace also stepped to the window and looked long and earnestly up and down the tracks, after which he sprang back saying:

"Not yet, Ed. But it has grown mighty still all around, and I see the electrics are picking up again and the boys are gone. You'll get it shortly, I do believe. Then God help ye. D'ye think you can do it alone?"

Andrews made no reply. He took a long breath, and released his right hand from a lever long enough to rub his forehead violently. His face flushed and paled by turns, and he seemed like a man knitting his powers for one tremendous effort more. I did not like the flushing and paling of his handsome, haggard features. I knew enough of human nerves to understand that the man was in danger of collapse. Yet it is a provision of nature also that at such a physical crisis latent power is the only alternative. A man may fall, or a man may suddenly become a giant and his mind prematurely clear. I stepped along to him and placed my warm palm on the back of his neck. I can feel it yet; the icy chill that answered to my touch, as I held my hands alternately on the fair, broad neck, so like a bullock's in thickness, but bloodless cold, while I knew the fine head was surcharged with the life currant to the danger point.

"Thank you, God bless you," he said tipping back his head upon my hands for an instant. "I think I can do it. But Oh, Wallie," piteously addressing his friend, "would not you think they would send up here to find out?"

"Perhaps the other snipes will come creeping back before the despatcher rings," replied Wallie.

"They will not, the cowards! What? Come back after leaving me here alone all this time? No, siree! They've as good as committed a crime, and they know it. We've got to do it all alone!" The poor fellow fairly trembled in every limb as he said it. I got him a glass of water from the ice cooler and he asked me to put it to his mouth.

"Of course," I remarked reassuringly, and ignoring the true reason of his request, that he trembled so he could not carry it to his lips, "You must keep your hands free for prompt action. I do not know, Mr. Andrews, what it is that you fear, or what you have to do which you speak of. But I know you can do it, whatever it may be. You are all right and this day's work will make your fortune with the corporation. Fannie, up there, will know you're—"

"My God, sir! if she was not up there I could do it all right. But I fear I can't with her there."

It did not seem wise to ask him for an explanation. I was wholly in the dark as to his meaning, but the man needed all his vitality intact, and I reasoned rapidly with myself that, of all things, I must not speak of the bride-to-be again.

The ominous stillness without the open window increased. That is, the sound of continuous voices grew less and less. We could more and more distinctly hear the puffing of the dozen or so fettered locomotives away down at the train house. At least we were aware of the locomotives rather than men's voices. This seemed to me to be encouraging, and I remarked, "Maybe the strike is off. This stillness is hopeful of good, men."

"That's what he dreads, sir," said Wallace, with uplifted hand as he drew his head in from a further search of the tracks.

A most distressing suspicion then seized me. Could it be that the man whom I had thought a hero was also in secret league with the strikers? Did he not wish all this reign of terror to end? Was it then a cause of secret apprehension lest the strike should fail? What was the thing that he must "do alone," as he said? What could he mean by saying that he could do it if only his sweetheart were not up there among those waiting incoming trains? What was he to do? Was he a thousand-fold murderer in his heart? Was he ready, in desperate alliance with the lawless, to use these awful levers to derail and send to collision where others had by numbers failed?

And if this was the situation, in what kind of collusion was I, an aider and abettor, to be found and dragged out to arrest with these other culprits? I felt my blood grow hot. Why was I invited here, anyway? To destroy me also? My own nerves got taut. I might better spring at that great, white, bared throat in a life-and-death grapple to save a thousand lives.

To save? How so? If the man Andrews fell dead what could I do? I was as helpless amid that intricate mass of splendid machinery as I would have been if the Almighty had asked me to manage the stars for an evening or two.

"I say, Ed," exclaimed the other man just then, "I think it's coming. Shall I run over to the despatcher's and tell how spent you are and being alone?"

"Go! Go as if you were shot out of a gun, Wallace! But it will not be any use, I've got to do it."

The man was down the stairs and off into the darkness in less time than one can tell it. We two were left alone.

"You see," said Andrews, "I thought I ought to do this. I have been with this company since I was a poor newspaper boy. They have always done well by me. But more than that"—then he ceased to speak.

"More than that," I prompted him.

"She was on board some of the incoming trains and I could not leave the tower."

"But why was I to come here?"

"I thought, perhaps, if I could live through the racket that perhaps we could be married here, but you see how it is. She is up there in the yard yet, and Heaven only knows if she ever lives to get out of there. For it is going to be tough work now in a minute."

"I do not understand what you refer to, Mr. Andrews. Explain further what is—that is, what is going to happen which you seem so to dread?"

The man turned now to look me fully in the face. The long, almost fourteen hours watch had marred his features terribly, as has been explained, yet it was a handsome, boyish face. There was not, I was sure, anything vicious in it, though many passions were writing their signs there. As he looked at me he shot a hasty eager glance at the despatcher's gong above my head, but finally let his black eyes soberly meet my own.

"Sir, I am going to bring her train in if I smash every other in the effort."

"But no trains are moving," I answered.

"They will all get signal in a minute, you see. Ins and Outs. Twenty trains, and one man to do it all, the fools!"

The man was right. Scarcely had he ceased to speak before the operator up the line wired in that the "block was clear," and he was signaling all clear to the foremost incomer.

"There she comes!" said Andrews, reading on the ticker. But it was not necessary to change a lever in reply to that.

The next instant the gong from the station sounded out its three bells. A minute more and it would be two bells, for the first outward bound express to start. I knew enough of the situation to fully understand that the task of managing all these trains, switch and block signal alike, was a work superhuman for one man. At least there should be four men here. In that awful sixty seconds we seemed to live an hour.

"Wallace must have got there and asked help," I said. "Do your duty moment by moment. That's all any of us have to live, one moment at a time."

"I don't trust Wallace," groaned the signal man.

"Don't trust him! I thought he was your friend," I exclaimed, instantly starting to attempt the errand myself.

"No man can tell what another man will do with friendship when he gets among walking delegates on a strike. Don't go, I beg you. Stay with me and pray to God. I will do it if I drop."

Then the starter's gong struck two! In an instant Andrews threw the first lever that cleared her way.

But the enunciator now tinkled out its calls. Almost before we could catch its note it had become a chorus of calls, each one telling its own tale of moving trains blocks away, each seeking its long delayed entrance.

Andrews was transformed. He became two men, three men, four men. He leaped like a tiger from one lever to another. He threw, with chaotic mixing, I should say, the levers open and reverse. He must have noted with unerring ear, like a skilled pianist, all the tinkling and clanging bells and gongs and the clicks of the telegraph.

Of course much, very much, must be put down to the credit of long custom with the movement of trains. He knew, in a general way, how each ought to proceed in ordinary times. Still the sight I looked upon was a wonder. One faithful, exhausted man doing the work of four at least; and I knew as I looked upon his springing form and flashing bare arms that in every motion the fate of hundreds of my fellow beings was involved. Oh, that I could have helped him! I could, however, do nothing but bow my head in prayer, repeating the promise, "As thy days, so thy strength shall be."

"All right!"

Andrews began to count aloud, as one after another the whirring trains passed us safely, in or out. "All right! All right!" He seemed to be keeping count for the Fast Mail. What seemed an age, but was, in fact, only four or five minutes, ran by.

"Now, there she's coming! God help ye all," cried Andrews. "The Fast Mail! Look out for yourselves! She's coming! I'll have her in safe. Fannie, your Ed's got ye in his arms. You're safe."

I looked up. The man seemed frenzied. Would he then imperil every one else for her? Had it come to that? I could not say. The man's aspect was frightful. At that moment I was sure I heard Wallace or some one shout, "Help is coming." I sprang to the window and listened. I saw Wallace and two men with him.

"Hold, Andrews, brave fellow," I shouted too. "Help is near. Don't do it alone. Can't you block them out and wait?"

But I was too late. Andrews threw the levers right and left. Then I knew the mail was coming, plunging in.

A moment more and she steamed past as I stopped my ears. I bowed my head. I did not wish to hear the awful crash. I could only ask God to forgive, if forgiveness was needed.

"Old boy, you are nervy! Jim, he's dead!" When I looked up at this word four men had swiftly emerged from the stairway. Andrews lay on the floor insensible.

The three signal men jumped to their places among the levers. Wallace and I lifted the fallen man and dragged him to the corner of the room, while we began efforts for his resuscitation.

I knew the danger was over. I said to Wallace: "Now, you just fly right over and get that pretty girl if you know her. Bring her here. I will stay till she comes. This grand fellow is all right, or will be in a few minutes. Then we will have a wedding in a Block Signal Tower."

Well, to tell it all in brief, that is just what we did have two hours later. Fanny proved to be a charming little woman. She caressed Ed back to life. The boys insisted on having time to witness the ceremony, and therefore we must wait till this press of trains was "worked." By that time the superintendent of the road had come to be an enthusiastic witness.

The "nervy fellow" has reached high honors in the railway world since then, and lives in the style of wealth. But we often speak of the wedding in the Block Signal Tower.

HINTS FOR HOLIDAY SHOPPERS.

What Palmer Merchants Have to Offer to the Buying Public.

Large and Varied Stocks to Select from—Fine Goods and Reasonable Prices.

Never before in the history of Palmer have there been so many stores and such complete stocks of goods as at the present time. And the merchants have this year exerted themselves as never before to please the shoppers at the holiday time; the result is a splendid variety of all kinds of seasonable articles. Hardly a desirable thing in the market but can be found in stock in Palmer's stores. And the best of it all is that lower prices than ever are the rule this year. Hard indeed to suit must be the person who cannot find something to please his or her fancy among the numerous lines displayed on every hand, and anaemic must be the pocketbook which is insufficient for the shopping tour.

F. D. Barton, Jeweler.

Mr. Barton can show you many dainty Christmas gifts for friends. He has a large assortment of ladies' fine gold watches from $10 up; also gentlemen's watches, which he can sell at low prices. His large stock of sterling silver novelties is surely tempting to the purchaser. Long watch chains are just now coming into fashion, and you will find very pretty ones here in either gold or silver. There is a variety of clocks here of gold, onyx, iron and wood, all warranted to keep good time. Those who are in need of gold pens will be glad to know that there is a special bargain in these during the holidays.

What You Can Get at Hellyar & Co's.

This firm is now ready for the holiday trade. Housewives will do well to examine their line of chenille portiers and table covers, bed blankets, stamped linens, aprons, etc. Dolls of various sizes may be found here for the children, as well as many toys on the 5 and 10c. counters. In looking around don't fail to notice the full line of perfumery and the large number of books and booklets, or if you are making Christmas gifts look over the plush, which is to be found in all colors for fancy work, also the full line of ribbons, which are sold at a low price.

Special Attractions at Holden's New Block.

Holden's Opera House was burned January 28, 1894, and as soon as possible work was begun on the new block, which is now nearly completed. The five stores fronting on Main street already present a very attractive appearance for the holiday season. On the corner of Main and Central streets is

O. P. Allen's Drug Store.

This is one of the most attractive stores in town, which feature alone ought to draw trade. He offers many pleasing novelties for the holiday time, and they are all of the newest styles, not an old article in stock. He has perfumes enough to suit the most fastidious, and all are of the best quality. The toilet cases are dainty and attractive, as also are the Japanese and aluminum wares. There is a great variety of Bibles, and some of the prettiest booklets ever shown. He has many interesting books for both old and young. Fountain pens, diaries for '95, and tasteful calendars are sold here at low prices, besides many other articles of an attractive nature.

Blake & Co.

A seeker after really useful holiday gifts will do well to call at Blake & Co's. new and attractive shoe store. They will find a full line of ladies' and gents' shoes and rubbers, and if you are looking for gent's slippers, Blake & Co's. is the place to find them. Your choice in Russian calf, russets, black or velvet. Patent leather footwear is also found in great variety.

Where to Buy Your Crockery.

Robinson & Taylor's new place of business was opened to the public for the first time last week. Theirs is the largest and best equipped store of the kind in town. Before deciding what to purchase for Christmas one should look over their large assortment of handsome crockery, and you will be sure of getting some of the latest designs in that line. In looking about take special notice of their dinner sets, fancy cups and saucers, berry dishes, chocolate pitchers, salad dishes, rose bowls, and the fine array of Royal Worcester ware. Any of the banquet, stand, vase or hall lamps found here would make a very fine present for some one.

Christmas Gifts at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store.

Legro & Lynde have certainly displayed considerable taste in their selection for Christmas. They have a large line of handsome cases such as jewelry and perfumery cases in plush, which would delight many a friend. Their large line of gold and fountain pens, which sell at low prices, ought to find ready purchasers. There are new styles of inkwells in cut glass, either double or single, also cologne bottles and vases. The silver calendars, diaries, plush albums, pocket knives, and fine line of ladies' and gent's pocket boooks are all attractive. They make quite a specialty of smoker's articles. Before leaving the store don't fail to go around in the children's department, where you will find a large assortment of toys for the young.

H. G. Loomis, Furniture.

Many elegant and useful artices in the way of furniture may be found at H. G. Loomis's. His three large floors are completely filled with goods of the latest styles. Look around here and see if you cannot find something for the parlor, such as willow, reed and rattan chairs, fancy rockers in plush, antique oak, etc.; or perhaps you may prefer a combination of writing desks and bookcases, which are sold at very reasonable prices. If, however, you want something for a child, you can buy here doll carriages for girls, and as we have a long winter before us, surely any boy would be delighted with a sled. Mr. Loomis has them of all grades, and you can purchase very good ones at the low price of 75 cents. Besides these are special lines of dining room, boudoir and chamber suites.

P. E. Bard, Baker.

A most attractive assortment of confectionery is to be found at P. E. Bard's; fancy cakes, cookies and other good things in abundance. He will also make a specialty of ice cream, and all orders will be promptly delivered.

Brooks's Jewelry Store.

The Christmas gifts which are to be found at Brooks's are numerous and beautiful, but in order to appreciate their value you should inspect them. Sterling silver articles are all the rage now, and the latest novelties may be found here. Bon bon boxes and spoons, orange spoons, thimbles, card cases, napkin rings, in fact anything you could wish for in the silver line. Also gold and silver watches, chains, charms, cuff buttons, rings, any of which would make a beautiful present.

Useful Articles at W. E. Stone's.

If you wish to make some useful presents you will find a complete assortment to choose from at W. E. Stone's. Shawls, handkerchiefs, silk or linen, embroidered or plain, ladies' gloves or mittens, and other articles too numerous to mention. A pair of blankets would be a useful present, and would be appreciated. You can get them from 49c. to $7 a pair, in gray or white. There is also an abundance of toys to choose from, such as drums, tea-sets, nine pins, dolls, games, etc.

For the Boys at Buck & Co's.

Remember to look at Buck & Co's. windows during the holidays, as there will be special attractions. Every boy wants to own a pair of skates. You will find a complete line of boy's and girl's skates, ranging in prices from 38 cents to $4.50 per pair; ladies' skates from 75 cents to $4.50 per pair. Carving sets make very useful presents; they are made with stag handles, celluloid, wood and ebony, and contain the finest steel. They also have a full line of scissors and pocket cutlery. In sleds they have a large assortment of sizes and qualities, all at low prices.

OUR MOTTO,

"LOW PRICES FOR HIGH QUALITIES,"

IS NOW DOING WONDERS.

Sales and Receipts were Never so Large.
Stock and Prices Never so Attractive.

MEN'S OVERCOATS!

At $7.50—there's stock enough for a fair selection. The best in the lot is a clean, Black Cheviot with a silk velvet collar. These coats would sell easily at $10.

At $10—our great "Home Ruler" comes to the front as being the best in the business. Made from all-wool Beaver in three colors, Blue, Black and Brown. They are the equal of any $12 coat in this city.

At $12, $13.50 and $15—an assortment of Beavers, Kerseys and a few Chinchillas, made and trimmed in the best possible manner. At these prices we show over four hundred Overcoats.

At $18, $20, $25 and $30—the cream of the Overcoat World. All the leading shapes and cloths and all the newest kinks of the tailor's art.

We want to punctuate right here our Great Lines of Men's Winter Ulsters.

We're going to make a reputation for ourselves this winter on Ulsters. It's a bit early to talk them, we know, but when you want one you'll do best with your dollars by consulting our stock.

We start them at $6.50 to $25, with whole counters full at $8, $10, $12, $13.50, $15, $18, $20 and $22. By all means consult us on Ulsters.

FANCY DRY GOODS AND NOVELTIES,

Corner Main and Bridge Streets, - - - - Springfield, Mass.

J. F. Foley, Groceries.

Although not a dealer in holiday presents, J. F. Foley has many things which are necessary in the house at this season. A full stock of choice groceries is as necessary for the holiday time as are toys, and at Foley's this will be found. All the leading brands of coffees and teas, the best spices, and canned goods of every description. And the best of it all, they are fresh. Oranges and nuts are in variety, and a surprise in the confectionery line is promised next week. For those who have scant time for household duties there is a full line of bread, cakes, pies, doughnuts, cookies, fancy cakes, etc., from the Domestic Bakery at Ware.

Latest Styles in Boots and Shoes.

E. Goodes has been in business here for the past thirteen years, and recently had his salesroom enlarged to better accommodate his increasing trade. Anything in the shoe line is, as you know, acceptable at all times of the year, and will make a good present at Christmas time. Children's shoes are sold anywhere from 35 cents to $1.50, while ladies' patent tip button can be bought for $1.25 up to $3 per pair; and men can have their choice of fine shoes, either lace or congress, for $1.25 up to $5 a pair. He has made quite a specialty of the Universal Ankle Supporter for weak ankles and for children just learning to walk. Mr. Goodes will be pleased to receive a call from you, whether you buy or not.

Sager & Co.

Sager & Co. have an attractive assortment of stamped goods. Those interested in fancy work will find nearly everything necessary to use in that line. The firm will be pleased to have any one call and examine their large stock of embroidered handkerchiefs, etc.

Toys for the Children at Shaw's.

J. B. Shaw has a display of games which will gladden the hearts of the children. There is a variety of mechanical toys in the display, such as iron fire engines, animals, etc. If nothing in the toy line is desired, beautifully embroidered handkerchiefs, towels, napkins or similar articles can be found. Among the other good things which Mr. Shaw will make a specialty of during the holidays will be candies, oranges and nuts.

C. K. Gamwell, Gents' Furnishings.

C. K. Gamwell has a display of silk handkerchiefs and neckwear which make very suitable presents for husband or brother. He is well equipped in the line of men's furnishings. The ready-made suits and overcoats are a great attraction, all the latest and best styles. You will find men's hats in various styles, besides collars, cuffs and underwear.

What G. A. Moore Offers in the Jewelry Line.

G. A. Moore opens his store this week in Holden's new block. He has an attractive stock of goods suitable for Christmas gifts. You will find the latest novelties in silverware, bread trays, bon bon dishes, card receivers, etc. Something entirely new is the 1894 clock. Call and examine.

C. A. Brown & Co.

C. A. Brown & Co. have a large supply of "Electric" oil stoves, for which they have had a large sale during the past year. The boys would be delighted with the skates, sleds, tool chests and pocket cutlery shown here. The firm has a good supply of girls' sleds on hand, one of the newest being the self-steering sled.

Bodfish's a Good Place to Call at Christmas Time.

During the coming holidays the windows at D. L. Bodfish's will attract much attention, one window being used to represent a scene at Christmas Eve. In the store there will be many useful and dainty things for the season. Among the useful articles for ladies are silk and linen embroidered handkerchiefs, hoods, shawls, and the latest and most approved styles of dress patterns. Suitable gifts for gentlemen also are found here, consisting of mufflers, silk and linen handkerchiefs, neckware, gloves, etc. For the children there is a large assortment of dolls at all prices. Before leaving the store notice particularly the dainty novelties in celluloid, also the books, albums, Christmas cards and booklets.

The Smith Tea Co's. Confectionery

Will easily take the lead in variety, while the price will be found as satisfactory as the stock is good. There is candy of innumerable kinds, from the common broken sort to the finer grades of the most celebrated manufacturers. Nuts and fruit are also found in great varieties.

THE GRANDMOTHER'S DOLLARS.

A woman recently died in a neighboring town, and beside a granddaughter and her cynical husband, she left a few relatives and $80 in gold with other things. The woman was over 95 when she died, and the $80 had been a wedding presents. Like many persons in those days, she held fast to the shining eagles, and had them for nearly 77 years. When she died, of course, the birds were distributed among the heirs. The cynical husband, who was married to the old lady's favorite granddaughter, mused upon the $80 in gold and stripped his thoughts of all sentiment as he speculated in his mind what might have been. He has not quite got through figuring yet, and his constant query is, if grandmother had only put that $80 in the bank when she first got it, what a clutch of golden eagles we would have now! He mused on this as he got ready on cold mornings to go to work, and his favorite topic of thought was suggested as he jingled a nickel and a bunch of keys looking for his car fare: Then he began to figure that money at 6 per cent doubles in about 11 years, and he lost sleep as he thought how many times 11 years went into 77 years. When the cynical husband finally referred the question of his losses to a bank man, he learned that in 50 years the $80 in gold would have amounted to $1473.60. Without figuring any further on the problem, the bank man said he would easily consider that $10,000 was lost by saving the $80.

It is not an unusual thing in some of the old banks to have an account doubled many times over and over again. One day last week in the Worcester county institution for savings, an account was reckoned at $224.03, which originally was but $10.65. Nothing had ever been added or taken from the bank account, and it was left to accumulate. It took about 50 years for the original sum to gather all that moss. There was another recent instance in the same bank where 31 times the original sum was paid to a depositor. No one wonders that somebody discovered and said that money makes money.—Worcester Gazette.

WHAT THEY USED THE AX FOR.

A Maine Central conductor tells a story which shows how queer it is that it should cost a railroad less to kill a passenger in an accident than to maim one. A very inquisitive passenger one day began asking the brakeman all sorts of questions about things that he saw. The employe answered courteously and explained everything until the conversation began to weary him. "What is that ax for?" suddenly asked the passenger, pointing to an implement fastened to the end of the car, with the words over it, "For accident only." "What do you want of an ax in case of accident?" "Why that," replied the brakeman, "is what we use to kill the wounded ones with. We don't have to pay as much for dead people as for live ones, so when there's an accident that ax saves money." "Yes, I see, replied the inquisite man demurely, and then he began to ponder so seriously on the risks he was taking he didn't ask any more questions.—Lewiston Journal.

"I lost my best friend the other day," said the cheerful idiot.

"Indeed? Who was that?" asked the sympathetic man.

"Myself. I was out hunting and lost myself in the woods."—Indianapolis Journal.

CLOTHIERS and FURNISHERS.

BARGAIN SALE!

Bargains—Don't like to use that word—so many advertisers use it and don't mean it. Webster says it is a gainful transaction—that's how we mean it.

A Gainful Transaction to Our Patrons.

To show you how we use it in its rig t sense we'd refer to these:

Men's Cassimere Suits, $6, usual price $10.

Long Swagger Overcoats, Black and Blue Kersey, $12. Usual price $16.

Men's All Wool Worsted Suits, $12 and $15. Usual price $16 and $20.

Men's Harris Cassimere Suits, $12. Usual price $18.

Little Boy's Reefer Top Coats, $2.50. Usual price $4.

Men's Cassimere Trousers, $3.50. Usual price $4.50.

Can't enumerate them all specially here. Your coming will make it more interesting—to you and us. No need buying unless you see fit and are satisfied. You can't purchase for as little anywhere else, and your money back even then if you're dissatisfied afterwards.

(Trade Mark.)
A FLESH FORMING FOOD.
(Artificially Digested.)

Assimilated without any digestive effort. If you want to grow fat, strong, robust and plump, use this food. It will stop the wasting and add new, healthy tissue to the emaciated form. Paskola is far superior to Cod Liver Oil in consumptive cases, without its repulsive taste. Thin, pale people gain from five to ten pounds a month. You can buy it at any drug store. Send your name to The Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade St., New York, and get their interesting pamphlet.

The English Sparrow.

He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear Lord who loveth us,
He made and loveth all.
—Coleridge.

O alien sparrow, spurned, despised
When summer brings the gayer throng—
The pretty warblers justly prized
Both for their plumage and their song:—
When these to other climes have flown,
And harsh the winds of winter blow,
Then, alien, thou art all our own—
A bit of life amid the snow!

When loud the northern tempest roars,
O'flakes thick-falling blind the sky,
Around our homes, about our doors,
Thou art content to flit and fly.
And though thy chirrup seldom cheers
The heart by sorrow overcome,
Yet, which of us can close our ears
To plaintive cry for crust or crumb?

And when the frost wind, like a knife,
Cuts to the bone, poor sparrow, thou
(The only thing endowed with life
That rests upon the rimy bough,)
Art still content to perch, and peer
Out on the cold and dismal day;
Or wrapped in fog, your only fear
The fierce grimalkin grimly gray.

And when descends the darksome night,
With ivy none in which to cling,
Oh, where at dusk do you alight
And fold thy raveled, ragged wing?
Is it in yonder elm tree hole,
In chilly chink, or snow-filled nest,
Or in some dark and dusty hole,
Poor sparrow, that you roost and rest?

Ah! different 'tis across the sea,
Where open barns and byres abound;
Where 'neath the roof that sheltered me
The sparrow's feathered nest is found.
There they were wont to brood and hatch,
There still they hide them from the storm;
Steal in at night below the thatch,
Beneath the eaves so thick and warm.

Too oft in sport we crime commit,
But who would not the sparrow spare,
Remembering that in Holy Writ
Her name's recorded white and fair?
While we admire the burnished doves
On snowy wings that come and go,
Our heavenly Father feeds and loves
The ragamuffin mid the snow.

MOSES TEGGART.

OF USE IN THE WORLD.

Crash! bang! jingle! jingle!

The noise alarmed the whole household, the members thereof rushing excitedly into the room to find Sadie, pale and frightened, standing in the midst of a demolished chair, fragments of earthern flower pots and broken glass, nervously smoothing out her dress.

"Well, I do declare!" ejaculated Aunt Matilda, a spinster sister of Mr. Benson's, as she surveyed the destruction through her spectacles.

"I'm real sorry, Aunty. I'm sure I did not mean to break them," apologized Sadie, humbly.

"Oh, no," answered Aunt Matilda, curtly, holding a crushed fuchsia tenderly in her hand, "children never mean to do anything wrong after the mischief's been accomplished. You ought to have been hurt as a punishment for your inquisitiveness," she continued with emphasis. "The flower was blooming so beautifully and so rapidly; and then consider the care and pride I took in decorating the pot, the appropriate designs, the exquisite harmony of color—all my labor gone to naught. Oh, dear me!" she interrogated petulently, "of what use are children in the world, anyway?"

"Remember, Matilda," quietly interposed Mr. Benson, "you were a child."

"Yes, but unlike your children, John Benson, I was taught never to meddle with things which did not belong to me, and you know it," she rejoined sarcastically, as she swept with an air of indignant disdain from the room.

It was Sunday before Christmas, one of those gloomy, monotonous days, with leaden clouds floating overhead, the biting wind howling and moaning through the streets, and a drizzling rain descending steadily upon the earth, making everybody morose and cross and fretful. It fact it was what children call "keep in" day, when they roam aimlessly from room to room, or are lulled to sleep by the pattering rain drops against the windowpanes. And this particular Sunday was "keep in" day with Sadie Benson, and it was while attempting to move the flower stand that the misfortune narrated overtook her.

"Oh, my!" she wearily soliloquized, as she stood gazing out of the window, after the excitement had subsided, "I wish the sun would shine."

As she turned away, an open Bible on the table caught her notice. Picking it up she began to read, and coming presently to a passage which she did not clearly comprehend, she hastened with the book to her mother. It was this:

"Give and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosoms. For with the same measure that ye mete withall, it shall be measured to you again."—St. Luke, iv, 38.

"Well, Sadie," answered her mother, "perhaps I'm not competent to give you a really intelligent interpretation, but maybe I can give an idea of its meaning; that we should be generous; that those who have an abundance of everything should give to those who are poor and needy; that what we give must be given in a free, unselfish spirit; God repays doubly, or in 'measure pressed down and running over,' in some unseen manner. It is not benevolence to boast and tell the world what you give and do for the poor. That is vanity and self-commendation inspired by selfish motives, and God does not recognize such gifts as true charity. What we give from the hand must be prompted by a clean, generous and sympathetic heart."

"Thank you, mamma," said Sadie, respectfully, as her mother ceased speaking; "I think I understand now."

Mr. Benson entered the room, lit a cigar, picked up the paper and, settling himself comfortably in his chair, gave himself over to a perusal of the events of the day.

Presently Sadie looked up from the Bible.

"Papa," she asked, "are you rich?"

Mr. Benson looked up from his paper as he answered:

"God has been good to me, daughter; He has blessed us all with excellent health and prospered me in all my undertakings."

"Yes, sir; but papa," she continued, looking him directly in the face, "do you ever give anything to the poor?"

An expression of sudden confusion crossed his features. He seems to sit uncomfortably, and he shifted his position several times ere he answered in a somewhat abstract way:

"Well, yes—that is—something. But what has prompted that question?" he inquired, gazing at her curiously.

She read the verse over for him.

He made no reply at its conclusion, but puffed away vigorously at his cigar and tried to get interested in his reading. But somehow or other his mind wandered; he could concentrate his thoughts upon no one particular object in the Journal. His countenance had relaxed into a grave and sober expression. He picked up his hat and went out into the nipping air.

"Do I ever give anything to the poor?" 'I is true I'm rich, but since I've acquired my wealth there's something left undone. What is it?" he mentally queried.

Conscience whispered: "Give and it shall be given unto you."

* * * * * * *

Christmas came at last, bright and crisp and the whole world seemed joyous and glad. Sadie and Frankie—he was Sadie's brother—had risen before the stars were out of the heavens and were shouting and laughing as they looked upon their presents; and mamma and papa, too, joined them in their happiness, while Aunt Matilda, whose slumbers had been disturbed by the noise, lamented the "extravagant expenditure of hard-earned money for foolish toys for foolish children."

"Take it away! take it away!" she shrieked, as Frankie blew a blast on his trumpet, "My head is nearly bursting!" And clapping her hands to her ears she fled precipitately from the room, followed by the laughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benson.

Toward mid-day Sadie strolled up on Eighth street, wandering along, looking first in one window and then in another. At one she halted to admire some dolls, and while there she took a piece of candy from her pocket and raised it to her mouth.

"I like candy," squeaked a voice close beside her. Looking around, she discovered a mite of humanity who had crept up unobserved and was gazing up wistfully into face.

"Then you shall have this," she quickly replied, offering him the candy, which he eagerly seized. His clothes were a medley of patches, his shoes were out and a torn cap crowned his flaxon hair.

"Now, that's somebody's poor boy, I know," she argued. "I think I'll take him home with me. I'm sure mamma and papa will give him something. I'll ask him, at any rate."

"Little boy," she said, "do you want to go home with me and get Christmas cake?"

"Oh, yes, me do!" exclaimed the little fellow, clapping his tiny cold hands, while his thin face beamed all over with smiles.

Sadie took him by the hand and retraced her steps up the street.

"Oh, just see there, girls! There's Sadie Benson leading a little beggar!" remarked one of Sadie's acquaintances to her companion, as they passed along on the opposite side of the street.

"Well, I never! It is her, indeed! I would not be seen doing that on this street," answered the girl with a proud, scornful curl of her lip.

But Sadie kept right on with her protege, unconscious of the disparaging comments of her friends, and indifferent to the vulgar gaze of the gay crowd of passers-by.

At a corner they encountered a policeman.

"Lost boy, eh? Shall I take charge of him, Miss?" said the policeman, reaching out his big hand toward the boy.

"Oh, no, sir," answered Sadie, shrinking away, with the frightened little fellow clinging to her hand. "He's not lost; I'm going to take him to my house and give him some candy."

"Why, bless my soul!" responded the policeman, as he looked closely at the boy, "that's Charley D—'s boy. An honester or harder-working man is not to be found in all Philadelphia; but he's been sick a long time, and I'm afraid he hasn't much to be joyful over this year."

This ended the colloquy, and Sadie and her charge hurried on. Up the great stone steps and into the wide hall, shouting: "I've got him! I've got him, Sarah."

But before the astonished housemaid could reply, Sadie was in the sitting-room dragging the bewildered boy with her, where she electrified her parents with:

"I've got him, mamma and papa! I've got him!"

"Got who? What is it?" they chorused in surprise.

"Why, don't you see this little boy? I found him on Eighth street. He asked me for candy, so I thought I'd bring him home. Policeman knows him; says his father's a good man, but he's sick and awful poor, and —"

"Stop! stop!" interrupted Mr. Benson, with a smile. "Let's get at the right end of the story."

When Sadie had quite recovered her natural self, she related the story over again. Sarah was summoned, and presently, with her hat and shawl, disappeared through the door.

Aunt Martha started into the room, but paused abruptly on the threshold as she discovered Frankie and the little stranger at play.

"Well, Jane Benson," she exclaimed, depreciatingly, "if you are going to allow your husband and your daughter to use your elegant home tomake a refuge for street gamins, you're going to introduce some dreadful disease. Now, mark my word!"

"Matilda," answered Mr. Benson, paying no heed to her ominous prophecy, "can you recall to mind an incident which occurred in your childhood days? How, when for weeks you anticipated the greatest of pleasure, the superintendent of the school by an oversight left your name from the roll, and you failed to share with the rest?"

"I can, most distinctly."

"Do you also remember, Matilda, how the tears flowed, and how full—immeasurably full—your heart was of grief at the disappointment?"

"That I do; but where's the comparison in this case?" and she tapped the carpet impatiently with her foot.

"Just here," answered Mr. Benson; "this little fellow, like you, is all expectation. Suppose we were to turn him, without some recognition of our sympathy, into the street. Can you appreciate your feelings?"

Matilda did not reply, but nervously paced up and down the room. A ray of sunshine was about to pierce that callous old heart. She at length sat down, giving vent to a long-drawn sigh.

"Now, Matilda," spoke Mr. Benson, energetically, "I intend to provide for that child, and I want your assistance," with a significant wink at his wife, "I want you to buy a pair of shoes."

"Oh, yes, do; that's a dear, good aunty," exclaimed Sadie, throwing her arms affectionately about Aunt Matilda's neck; "see his poor little cold toes peeping out from the broken leather," she pleaded.

"Well, now, I believe aunty will, for your sake, Sadie," she slowly answered, brushing something slyly off her cheek.

The happy little fellow was dressed out in a comfortable suit of Frankie's, and the new shoes put on. Sarah made a favorable report on her return, and was soon on her way back, leading the little boy and carrying a basket of substantial food, "shaken together, pressed down and running over," and late in the afternoon a well-dressed gentleman was observed to leave Mr. D's home with a light, elastic step, but what he said or did no one ever knew.

Sadie went to bed that Christmas night with a heart overflowing with happiness. "God has paid me ten-fold with a quiet conscience and a cheerful heart," thought Mr. Benson more than once during the evening, and Aunt Matilda, in quiet conversation with Mrs. Benson, admitted that "children were of some use in the world, after all."—Philadelphia Evening Call.

MADE THE DOG THANKFUL.

When the family came home from service on Thanksgiving morning, they heard Ponto howling dismally from the attic. "However could the dog have got up there?" asked grandma, as she looked up and saw his piteous black face at the window. "I didn't know the attic door had been open this morning."

"Oh, yes," cried little Annie innocently. I opened it. I put him up there on purpose."

"You did, child? What for?"

"Well, you see," replied Annie, with all the gravity given by nine years of wisdom, "I tried to think of some way to make Thanksgiving day different to him from other days. We might give him turkey, but how would he know sure it wasn't Christmas turkey instead? So I thought I'd shut him up in the dark, where he hates to be, and when he was let out he'd be thankful enough for Thanksgiving day."

Her plan was absolutely successful. Once down stairs, having again the run of the house, Ponto frisked and yelped as if he had very special cause for thanksgiving and needed no governor's proclamation to teach him the uses of the day. The town could boast at least one dog with a thankful heart.—Selected.

"Were you moved by her music?" "Yes: it amounted to that. I think we should have kept the flat for another year if it hadn't been for her."—Puck.

A Christmas Prayer.

Lord, for the lonely heart
I pray apart.
Now, for the son of sorrow
Whom this to-morrow
Rejoiceth not, O Lord,
Hear my weak word!

For lives too bitter to be borne,
For the tempted and the torn,
For the prisoner in the cell,
For the shame lip doth not tell,
For the haggard suicide,
Peace, peace, this Christmastide!

Into the desert, trod
By the long sick, O God;
Into the patient gloom
Of that small room
Where lies the child of pain
Of all neglected most—be fain
To enter, healing, and remain.

Now, at the fall of day,
I bow and pray.
For those who cannot sleep
A watch I keep.
Oh, let the starving brain
Be fed, and fed again;

At thy bequest
The tortured nerve find rest.
I see the vacant chair,
Father of souls, prepare
My poor thought's feeble power
To plead this hour:

For the empty, aching home
Where the silent footsteps come,
Where the unseen face looks on,
Where the hand-clasp is not felt,
Where the dearest eyes are gone,
Where the portrait on the wall
Stirs and struggles as to speak,
Where the light breath from the hall
Calls the color to the cheek,
Where the voice breaks in the hymn,
Where the sunset burneth dim,
Where the late, large tear will start,
Frozen by the broken heart,
Where the lesson is to learn
How to live, to grieve, to yearn,
How to bear, and how to bow.
Oh, the Christmas that is fled!
Lord of living and of dead,
Comfort thou!

—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

DAILY CARE OF CLOTHING.

A dress or coat should never be hung away with soiled spots on it, even for a few days. It is much easier to remove the spots as soon as they appear than to wait till they accumulate, and, as is often the case, collect dust and dirt until it becomes almost impossible to remove all traces of them. It will take but a few moments to thoroughly brush and shake a dress, or hang it for a little while in the open air in a windy day, and you will be well repaid in its bright, fresh appearance, even when it is necessary to give it very constant wear. The proverbial "stitch in time" must ever be kept in mind, of course; all rips should be sewed with strong thread, buttons replaced as soon as they come off, and buttonholes reworked when they become ragged.

All coats should be hung on the small wire frames which come for this purpose, or board frames made to fit the shoulders, and they will keep their shape much better than when hung by the loops in the neck or armholes. Pants should be well brushed and hung in a pants stretcher or frame. Fold them carefully, keeping the creases the same as when first bought, and they are quickly slipped in the little frame, and are thus kept looking fresh and new every time they are worn.

Boots and shoes should be carefully dried and oiled when they become wet, and should be smoothed out and set in the proper position when taken off, instead of being thrown down just as it happens, to become unshapely; and those not in actual use should be kept in a bag or box out of the dust.

Buy only fast colors in stockings, and before they are worn darn the heels and toes, and if for children the knees also with silk or other strong thread the color of the stocking. If carefully done the stitches will not show on the right side and will add much to the wear of the stocking. Darn all breaks when small, and when they are washed see that it is done carefully and that they are pulled into shape when damp.

Hats and caps should be kept well brushed, and those that are not in constant use kept in a box. Ribbons and plumes and all trimmings on hats and bonnets should be arranged in proper shape before putting them into band boxes. All laces, ribbons, gloves, etc., should be folded as they were when new, and be placed where they will be free from light and dust.

All starch clothes will keep nice much longer if they are carefully smoothed and folded when not in use. Small breaks in underclothing should receive attention as soon as they appear. Choose buttons with large eyes, and sew them on with linen thread, and it will seldom be necessary to replace them as long as the garment lasts. Knit underwear should be patched with pieces of the old, saved for the purpose.

When dresses, coats, etc., become wet, hang them so that they will not be drawn out of shape when dry. Plumes, when wet, should be dried and curled over a knife blade and shaken over a hot stove. Clothing thus cared for will last much longer, will fit well until worn out, and, best of all, any garment will be ready to put on at a moment's notice, with the assurance that everything has the fresh, new appearance so desirable.—Philadelphia Press.

For a large assortment of sterling silver novelties and staple goods, at hard time prices, see Jeweler Barton.

Special Notice.—Call on J. F. Foley, the Main steet grocer, on or after next Tuesday, and get the finest barrel of Haxall flour you ever had in your house for $3.90 per barrel. Every barrel guaranteed or money refunded. Come early.

Do not forget that I am offering unusual bargains in ladies' and gents' gold and silver watches during the month of December. F. D. Barton, the Palmer Jeweler.

There is scarcely an article in the stock of boots, shoes, rubbers and slippers shown by W. R. Milligan, the shoe dealer, but that would make an acceptable Christmas gift. Don't forget that the gold watch contest will end Dec. 24th, and the beauty of it is, it will cost the owner nothing. Buy a bottle of shoe dressing and be in it at Milligan's shoe store.

Mr. Frederick R. Sistare will be pleased to show his Palmer friends our elegant line of overcoats and suitings; never surpassed, regarding styles, prices and quality. They are assuredly as handsome, as elegant, and in every way as perfect as it is possible to make them. They are equal in every respect to custom goods, and cost much less. Geo. N. Norris, 325 Main Street, Springfield, Mass.

The Handsome New Quarters of the Business Club Opened.

The first regular meeting of the Palmer Business and Social Club was held in the new club rooms Wednesday evening, when the rooms were informally dedicated. There was a large attendance, nearly all the members of the club dropping in at some time during the evening. The rooms were very attractive in their freshness, and unanimous approval was expressed by the members, great credit being given to the furnishing committee. Reports of the various departments of the club were made and acted upon, and some necessary business was transacted. Most of the evening, however, was devoted to admiring the rooms and in pleasant chat among the members. The furnishing committee donated cigars for all smokers, and the members seemed to take solid comfort in their new home. The finish and furnishings of the rooms are worthy of a brief description, as there are many Palmer people who have not yet seen them. The entrance to the rooms is on Main street, the rooms being located on the second floor. Half way up the stairs is a landing, on which are hung swing doors, to keep out the cold. The landing at the top is in the main hall, and directly opposite is a dressing room for the lady guests of the club. A door to the left of this room leads into the billiard room, which is provided with a billiard and a pool table, and is furnished with oak furniture. The room is sheathed to a height of about five feet from the floor with ash, and the walls and ceiling are painted and frescoed in terra cotta. This is the northeast room of the suite, and fronts on Central street. To the west of the billiard room is the card room, finished and furnished in reseda green and oak. The corner room, with windows on Main and Central streets, is the parlor. This room is furnished with plush and satin furniture, which make a pleasing contrast to the finish of the room, which is in a sky effect. The library fronts on Main street and is south of the parlor. It has an entrance to that room and also into the main hall, as has the card room. It is finished in a similar manner to the parlor and is furnished in oak. In this room will always be found an abundance of writing materials, which members are invited to use freely. An entrance from the library leads into the secretary's room, which also fronts on Main street, and is directly over the entrance. There is a door from this room into the hall and also into the assembly room. The finish of the room is a soft drab, the furniture being oak. A telephone has been put into the secretary's room, which is free to all members. The assembly room is long and narrow, and is well adapted for its purpose. A small party could dance upon its floor, and there is ample accommodation for the club's members. The front is on Main street and there is an entrance to the hall. All the rooms have shades and draperies at the windows which harmonize with the finish of the rooms. A few things are still to be done before the rooms are completed. As soon as they are entirely finished the public will be given an invitation to inspect them. The rooms were more or less occupied all day yesterday, showing that the members have a disposition to make this their headquarters during leisure hours. The rooms are heated throughout with steam, and will be very comfortable at any time during the day or evening. Electricity is used for lighting.

J. P. Lynde's bay colt died this week of spinal meningitis.

The bicycle club has placed a pool table in its rooms for the use of members.

Miss Flora Studley has a position as teacher in the public schools at Warren.

A. H. Willis of Boston, formerly of Palmer, called on friends in town yesterday.

George Sumner has resigned his position in the Boston & Albany freight house.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hennessey of Springfield visited friends in Palmer Monday.

New iron stringers are being placed under the Ware River road's bridge over Foundry street.

Mrs. William Hitchcock of Bennington, Vt., visited friends in Palmer Monday and Tuesday.

H. P. Letters has been confined to his house a part of this week with a severe attack of the grippe.

The Rogers-Osgood Hat Company is making an addition to its bleachery by building on two new rooms.

The Percheron stallion Pollux who which sold at auction last Saturday was purchased by B. F. Coffin for $250.

Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Kenerson are to start next week for Hot Springs, Ark., where they will remain fort he winter.

F. O. Munger, who has been laid up with rheumatism for some weeks, is some better and is able to be out a little.

Fred Tryon has resigned his position at the Converse House as night clerk, and is succeeded by James Rooney.

Robinson & Taylor are dispensing free coffee this week to all who call at their store, in showing the merits of a new coffee pot.

E. R. Pierce of Springfield, formerly proprietor of the the Converse House, paid his friends a short visit Wednesday forenoon.

A rehearsal for the cantata to be given at Christmas time will be held in the vestry of the Congregational church this evening at 7.30.

E. Higgins, recently with Sager & Co., has resigned his position and will go on the road as salesman for a New York cloak house.

J. A. Palmer has bought 40 acres of timber, mostly pine, oak and chestnut, in New Braintree, and commenced to cut if off this week.

Three 'possums, captured by Clarence Wing during his recent Southern trip, have been on exhibition this week in the window at Buck & Co's. store.

The Grand Army post failed to get a quorum Wednesday evening, and so did not elect officers. Another attempt will be made next Monday evening.

Mrs. F. O. Hovey fell down stairs last week and sustained painful, but not serious injuries. Mr. Hovey, who has been suffering from the grippe, is able to be out.

Mrs. Anna M. Colton, sister of Mrs. J. S. Loomis, aged 72, died at her home in Palmer Monday morning. The funeral was held at her late residence yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The first racing of the season among the local horsemen was seen on Main street Tuesday afternoon. There were only a few out, and George W. Ely, with a bay pacer, captured the banner.

Masons have been at work this week relaying a portion of the rear wall of the Ware River engine house, where a locomotive was backed against it a few days ago with disastrous results.

A. B. Cowan, manager of Chas. N. Blake & Co's. shoe store, has been called to Meriden, Ct., by the serious illness of his father, and C. N. Blake of Meriden has charge of the store during his absence.

Robert C. Studley sustained a severe injury at the union depot Tuesday evening. While running on the platform he struck his toe against something and fell. His left shoulder was fractured, and the entire arm badly bruised.

The rain of Tuesday and Wednesday spoiled the sleighing, which was as fine as any we have had for several years, but if the springs have been benefitted thereby the loss of the snow will have been fully compensated.

J. J. Manning of Three Rivers and William H. Smith of Thorndike have been drawn as jurors for the December term of the superior criminal court at Springfield. Deputy Sheriff Studley has been appointed court officer to the same court.

The rooms of the Business and Social Club will soon be furnished with a baby grand piano, C. W. Johnson having offered the club the use of one at a merely nominal rental. The instrument is now in Boston, but is expected here in a few days.

Commencing with next Monday the markets of the place will close Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, Tuesday and Thursday evenings with the other places of business, and remain open as long as necessary Saturday evening.

William H. Smith, a vagrant, was before the district court Tuesday and was sent up for three months. James Healey of Ware, for drunkenness, paid $5. On Wednesday John Wood, for drunkenness, was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for six months.

Good Cheer lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, chose these officers Tuesday evening: N. G., Mrs. Ella Washburn; V. G., Miss Jennie Eastman; R. S., Mrs. S. A. Parkhurst; F. S., Miss May Robinson; treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Fuller; trustees, Mrs. Alice Smith, Mrs. William Ham, Mrs. Kenerson.

Miller & Topliff have started an oil supply route, and will deliver oil or gasoline to anyone at their home in quantities to suit. They are out with a new tank wagon, and will deliver the oil in 5-gallon automatic cans, which they will furnish the customers free as long as the oil is bought of them.

The artists who appeared at the entertainment under the auspices of the high school Tuesday evening in the Congregational church gave a concert in the parlors of the Nassowanno House after their return from the church, and were assisted by H. C. Strong, who gave a humorous recitation.

The Quaboag Literary Circle will meet this evening in the reference room in the library building, when Rev. F. E. Jenkins will read a paper on "England in the British, Roman and Saxon Periods." Miss Flora Studley will give a reading, and Mrs. Jenkins will read the selections of the Round Table.

A report was circulated yesterday that Herbert Crofton had been badly crushed at the Boston & Albany freight depot. Mr. Crofton was not crushed, but was somewhat injured. He was lifting a bale of cotton and suffered a severe strain, and it is possible that as a result he may sustain a rupture. He was taken to his home at once and medical aid summoned.

A. Pinney of Brimfield is happy over the return of his buggy, which was borrowed a few weeks ago by a young fellow by the name of Fuller, who said he wanted it to go to Warren, but failed to return it. The vehicle was sent back by freight the other day, and with a foresight which could hardly have been expected under the circumstances, the freight had been paid.

The following officers of Thomas lodge, F. and A. M., were installed Monday evening: W. M., C. T. Brainerd; S. W., G. H. Wilkins; J. W., F. N. Carpenter; treasurer, W. E. Stone; secretary, H. W. McGregory; S. D., W. H. Brainerd; J. D., H. R. Paine; S. S., J. P. Eastman; J. S., J. A. Breckenridge; M., J. B. Shaw; C., Rev. H. F. Moulton; T., James Knox; organist, C. B. Fiske.

L. L. Merrick Woman's Relief Corps met last Friday night and elected the following officers: President, Mrs. Julia Henry; senior vice president, Mrs. Jennie Weld; junior vice president, Mrs. Laura Davis; chaplain, Mrs. Effie Moulton; treasurer, Mrs. Marion Robinson; conductor, Miss Angie Johnson; guard, Mrs. Laura Calkins; delegate to convention, Mrs. D. S. Davis; alternate, Mrs. Jennie Weld.

The first entertainment in the high school course was given in the Congregational church Tuesday evening, and was well attended considering the condition of the weather. The flute and harp solos by Mole and Schuecker were the finest ever heard in Palmer, and every number was encored. As a reciter C. T. Grilley made a favorable impression upon the audience, and was obliged to respond to encores of each of his numbers.

The ladies of the Congregational society had a large attendance at their social Wednesday, and served an excellent supper. A sale of useful and fancy articles was held in connection with the social. The parlors were handsomely decorated, and a large number of articles were sold, about $90 being the result. A number of dr ssed dolls remained unsold, and can be had any time before Christmas at the home of Mrs. H. D. Converse.

A special town meeting is called for next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, to see if the town will borrow money to pay the existing obligations incurred by the separation of the grades of the highway and railroad at Blanchardville and Tenneyville, and to satisfy several judgments against the town; also to see if the town will appropriate money to pay the balance incurred in repairing the engine house; to see if the town will build half of a footbride eover the Swift river in Duckville.

Dennis W. Mack, aged 41, died at his home Wednesday afternoon about 3.30 o'clock of consumption. Mr. Mack is a native of Palmer, his real name being McNamara, although the family has been known for many years as Mack. Several years ago, while in the employ of the N. L. N. railroad, he lost one leg at the Palmer station. Since that time his health has steadily failed, and of late he has not been able to take part in any business. He has been for some time a prominent worker in the Democratic party, and will be greatly missed by his friends. He leaves a father, wife and one son.

B. F. Coffin says that the people who have put an attachment on the stallion Pollux, bought by his wife last Saturday, have put their foot in it. He claims that the attachment was to cover a personal debt of his, and that he really never had any ownership in the horse. Mrs. Coffin bought the horse with an idea of selling him at once, knowing of a customer. After purchasing the horse she sold him again, but as she could not deliver him as agreed upon, the sale fell through. Her counsel advises her that he will make things very lively for the people who made the attachment, and further developments may be expected.

The JOURNAL greets its readers with eight pages this week, made necessary by the space demanded by the merchants for their holiday announcements. What they have to say is well worth the reading, and the subject matter will be found varied and attractively set forth. A variety of reading matter is offered on the other than local pages. An original poem will be found on the third page, while on the eighth is an article on the origin of American Christmas customs, written expressly for this issue. Other Christmas stories and poems fill out a number which absent friends and former Palmer residents will enjoy looking over, and copies will be mailed from the JOURNAL office to any address.

Miss Effie Shaw's exhibition of china painting last Saturday drew a large number to her home on Main street to admire the work of her brush. A large table in the parlor was covered with a snowy cloth, on which about 50 pieces were displayed, ranging in size from the smallest of mustard ladles to a large jardiniere. Among the articles were a handsome lamp, chocolate pot, a coffee set comprising tray, sugar bowl and creamer and two cups, vases, plates of various sizes, and many smaller articles for the toilet table. Many of the articles had been painted on orders, but some were for sale and found ready customers.

The annual turkey supper at St. Paul's church Tuesday evening was a great success in spite of the unpleasant weather. The sale of fancy articles commenced at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and at 9 in the evening nearly everything had been sold. The display gave eidence that the ladies of the society had left nothing undone in that line to make the sale a success, and all the articles were greatly admired. The supper commenced at 6 o'clock, and was served for two hours. All the tables were filled twice and some of them three times. Preparation for a large crowd had been made, however, and every one was well served. The young men of the parish, who waited upon the guests, maintained the high reputation as waiters which they have won. The entertainment was well received by a large audience. Miss Brigham and Mrs. C. K. Gamwell played the leading parts and filled the company with delight by their clever work. The other ladies who took part also did well, showing an easy grace upon the stage which materially helped the play. The society cleared about $100.

Augustus Martin has severed his connection with the Boston Duck Co., and accepted a position as clerk in Harry Ryther's store.

The W. C. T. U. will meet with Mrs. F. J. Hale next Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock, instead of Thursday. As it is the last meeting for the year, a full attendance is desired.

Mrs. O. A. Parent and Mrs. Richard Russell attended the quarterly meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Springfield district in Springfield Wednesday.

John Beauregard had Alphonso Grise arrested for illegal liquor selling last week. He was to have his hearing in Ware last Friday, but it was postponed on account of Mr. Grise being sick with heart trouble.

Charles E. Getchell, agent for the Boston Duck Co. the last five years, has resigned his position, and a Mr. Childs of Lowell is to succeed him in the mills. Mr. and Mrs. Getchell will be much missed here and in Palmer, where they have made many warm friends since coming here to live, and the good wishes of all will follow them to their new home.

The Book Club met at the home of C. E. Getchell Monday evening to elect a president and secretary in the place of Mr. and Mrs. Getchell. The club expressed its thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Getchell for their kindness in making their house the headquarters for so many pleasant entertainments and social gatherings of the club. Rev. F. J. Hale was elected president, and Mrs. A. P. Knowlton secretary and treasurer.

The electric light which has been removed from the corner beside the Union church and placed in front of the Palmer Mill boarding house, is giving general satisfaction.

The supper and entertainment in the Union church on Tuesday evening was a successful affair throughout. The ladies furnished an excellent supper, and the participants in the entertainment took their parts creditably. Miss Clara Green, Miss Mattie Goshen and Mrs. L. Hodgerney gave readings, singing was furnished by members of the choir, and F. A. Upham gave an interesting talk on the effects of alcohol on the system. Master Harry Forte's recitation was well received, and at the close Ed. Carroll gave a dramatic description of a drunkard, which caused prolonged laughter.

The teachers of the public schools in this place will record last Friday as one of the most eventful days in their history, because they had a marvelous escape from serious injuries, and have since become surprisingly popular on account of the way they escaped the impending danger. They started from the schoolhouse in the afternoon with the intention of attending a teachers' meeting at Thorndike. They had a large two-seated carriage belonging to J. F. Twiss, and on approaching the corner of Main and Maple streets the horse tried to describe a rather sharp curve, in consequence of which the carriage gave signs of changing its center of gravity, to the imminent peril of the occupants. As soon as the danger was realized they simultaneously renounced all allegiance to Terpsichore and every other patron of gracefulness in the endeavor to escape. Every aperture of the vehicle was used as a means of exit, but jewelry and other valuables were dropped in the struggle to avoid injury. However, a few young men, reputed to be of stoical nature, and several unrazored youths, hitherto bashful, volunteered their services, and everything was soon collected. No evidence of the catastrophe remained, only a fragmentary carriage and the blighted hopes of the local aspirant to artistic fame, who went in search of his kodak.

THORNDIKE.

Walker & Kelly will have a fine line of game and poultry for Christmas trade.

Miss Katie Fleming has a pretty line of Christmas novelties suitable for ladies' trade.

A few from this place attended the entertainment at Palmer Tuesday evening given under the auspices of the scholars of the high school.

The sidewalks which were put in this fall by the property owners on Commercial street are now showing their advantage over those of former years.

William Smith, Jr., of this place, has been drawn as one of the jurors for the criminal term of court which convenes at Springfield on the 24th.

The King's Daughters are preparing for their entertainment and supper, which will be given next Tuesday evening at the Congregational church.

The staging around the large brick chimney at the No. 2 mill was badly damaged by the wind yesterday, and some parts of it fell, striking close to men who were at work near by.

A fire started in the picker room of the No. 1 mill soon after noon to-day and gained considerable headway before being discovered. It was finally got under control after a sharp fight.

Reports reached here this week that Mrs. Philip Lord, formerly Miss Josephine Samson of this place, was in poor health. Her many friends are very sorry to hear such news, and hope that she may be restored to health again soon.

Court Hampden, Order of Foresters, of this place, initiated several new members at their meeting Tuesday evening. The order, which has been in town only a few years, is in a flourishing condition and has a large membership.

There is some talk of organizing a banjo club in this place. Many in town have instruments already, and those who feel so disposed can leave their names with W. F. Gerald or J. W. Molloy, and an instructor will be engaged at once.

Kicked by a Horse.

Joseph Brothers, 17 years of age, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Brothers, who is working with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. St. John, was kicked by a horse yesterday morning, receiving severe if not fatal injuries. He was attended by physicians from Palmer, and at this writing was unconscious. Much sympathy is expressed for his parents. The young man was injured in a similar manner a few years ago.

WEST WARREN.

Michael Sullivan is very low with consumption.

Eat-Well Café is the new sign in front of the old hotel; Augustus Guertin is the new landlord.

It is reported that Charles Crouch has purchased the old homestead, and will occupy it in the spring.

◆ WELL MADE, STYLISH CLOTHES. ◆

It is truly remarked that "Fine feathers do not make fine birds," neither do "Fine clothes make a man," but fine clothes make men look much better than poorly cut and ill-fitting garments. Good clothes cost no more than poor ones—often-times not so much. I make none but the best, and guarantee to fit and please you.

TOWN OF PALMER.
TOWN WARRANT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN ss. To Herbert A. Northrop, constable of the town of Palmer, Greeting:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs, to meet at the Town House in said Palmer on Monday, the seventeenth day of December, current, at 2 o'clock p. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

ART. 1. To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

ART. 2. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money to meet the existing obligations of the town.

ART. 3. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money to pay the expenses incurred in the change of grade crossings at Tenneyville, Blanchardville and near Three Rivers, to satisfy any existing judgments against the town, and for such other purposes as money may be appropriated at said meeting.

ART. 4. To see if the town will appropriate money to pay the balance incurred for repairs on the Engine House.

ART. 5. To see if the town will vote to build one-half of a foot bridge over Swift river in Duckville, and appropriate money for the same.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by the vote of the town, seven days at least before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal at least two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not and make due return of this warrant, with your doings thereon, to the Town Clerk, on or before the holding of said meeting.

Given under our hands this sixth day of December, A. D. 1894.

HENRY P. HOLDEN, } Selectmen of
JOHN F. TWISS, } Palmer.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.

To the heirs at law, next of kin and all other persons interested in the estate of Mary Finnerty, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Charles L. Gardner, of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named.

You are hereby cited to appear at a probate court to be held at Springfield, in said County of Hampden, on the second day of January A. D. 1895, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be granted.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once in each week, for three successive weeks in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published in said Palmer, the last publication to be one day at least before said court, and by mailing, post-paid, or delivering a copy of this citation to all known persons interested in the estate, seven days at least before said Court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said court, this twenty-seventh day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Death of Dr. Eaton.

The death of Dr. Jeduthan C. Eaton, which occurred at his late residence on North Main street Wednesday morning, calls for more than a passing notice. Dr. Eaton was born in Mansfield, Ct., in 1807, where he resided until he was 18 years of age. He then came to Tolland, Ct. Soon after this he completed a course of medical study and began the practice of his profession, which he pursued almost without interruption for nearly sixty years,—about 45 years in Tolland, 3 in Long Bar, California, and 12 in Stafford, Ct. Then, having reached his 83d year, he gave up practice and came to Monson to spend his old age. Dr. Eaton married Miss Mercy Moore of Tolland, Ct., Feb. 18, 1830, and five of their seven children are living, the other two reaching middle life. After Mrs. Eaton's death Dr. Eaton married, August 20th, 1854, Miss Philena Agard, by whom he had five children, all of whom are living.

He was a man who took a deep interest in public affairs, and was found upon the right side of every moral question. In the stormy days of slavery he was a staunch abolitionist, afterward a Republican, and of recent years a firm adherant of the Prohibition party. He was for a long time judge of probate, belonged to the Connecticut Eclectic Medical Association, and was a life-long member of the Methodist church. Dr. Eaton was a typical family physician,—earnest, faithful, self-sacrificing, conscientious. His was

"The secret sympathy,
The silver link, the silken tie,
Which heart to heart and mind to mind
The world in brotherhood doth bind."

His life was more than ordinarily eventful, happy and useful. He lived long and well, and when his day

"Had fallen into the sere, the yellow leaf," he found himself surrounded with all

"That which should accompany old age—
Honor, love, obedience and troops of friends."

The funeral services were held at the home this afternoon. The interment will take place to-morrow in Tolland, Ct.

Lawyer Artemus Gates of Cambridge spent Sunday with relatives in town.

The Monson Orchestra gave a dance in Stonecutters' Hall last evening.

The Junior Endeavor society of the Congregational church begins next week.

Mrs. Frank Green of Boston was the guest of Dr. and Mrs. George E. Fuller the latter part of last week.

Rev. W. H. Marble will preach in the M. E. church Sunday morning on the "Parable of the Sower."

Rev. W. H. Marble of the Methodist church preached at the state primary school Sunday morning at 9 o'clock.

The Chautauqua Literary and Scientific circle meets at Rev. W. H. Marble's home next Monday evening.

Rev. Harry Blackford will preach Sunday on Rev. John Murray, who is called the father of Universalism in America.

George H. Seymour has completed a four-months' course at the Poughkeepsie Business College, and is at home for a few weeks.

Mrs. E. J. Millard of North Adams, who was the guest of her brother, A. A. Babbitt, for a week, returned home last Friday.

The Misses Morris assisted at the "at home" given by Mr. and Mrs. Ralph P. Alden in Springfield Tuesday evening.

Dr. Rand gave a practical and interesting talk on "Physiology in the Schools," at the Green street school Saturday afternoon.

Horace Squier has received four wild geese which were shot at Methuen, one of them being on exhibition at H. C. Norcross's store.

The home place of A. J. Robbins will be sold in front of the court house at Palmer Jan. 9th, on an execution in favor of William Underwood.

If the woman who, by mistake or otherwise, took a coat from a certain clothing store, will return the same, no questions will be asked.

Pipe laying is progressing. A new feature which threatens serious trouble has developed at the collecting well. There is quicksand at the bottom.

Mrs. Gilbert W. Farrington entertained the whist club Tuesday afternoon, and Mrs. William A. Needham will entertain next Tuesday afternoon.

Preparations are in progress for the annual meeting and roll call of the Congregational church, which will be held the first Thursday of the new year.

Miss Mary A. Feather, formerly of this place, has a position in a fancy goods store in Worcester, and sings in the Main street Baptist church of that city.

Rev. A. B. Bassett, one of the oldest ministers in this vicinity, will preach in the Congregational church next Sunday in exchange with Rev. F. S. Hatch, who will preach at Ware.

In spite of the storm upwards of 100 attended the social at the Congregational church Wednesday evening. The entertainment, conducted by Dr. and Mrs. F. W. Ellis, was exceedingly interesting.

W. N. Flynt & Sons have their Christmas goods on sale, and the store is filled with people from morning until late at night. Their present display goes ahead of anything in the past, and that is saying much.

Miss Gallivan, who has taught in No. 8, resigned last Friday morning and Charles L. Jewett from No. 6 has taken her place. Miss Stebbins from No. 4 goes to No. 6, and Mr Blanchard who taught last term in No. 11, goes to No. 4.

Rev. Harry Blackford's normal class, which met at his home Monday evening, has increased its membership from 15 to 30, and there are more coming in later. The meeting will hereafter be held in the Sunday school room.

Miss Mary Welch, daughter of Hugh Welch, died of heart disease Saturday morning at the age of 34, at her home in South Monson. The funeral was held Monday in St. Patrick's church, the burial being in the Pearl street cemetery.

One of the water pipes at South Monson was lately found to contain two or three hundred fliers which the distributor was too lazy to leave at the houses as he was supposed to do. Every advertisement in the Palmer JOURNAL meets some one's eye.

The stores are already assuming their holiday attire, and people are "lookin' round," but are not buying heavily until nearer Christmas time. Monson advertisers call attention to the their wares in this issue of the JOURNAL, and their announcements will prove attractive reading for the intending purchaser of holiday goods.

G. M. Severy killed a hog for A. J. Robbins Monday, and noticing that there was something unusual in the looks of the animal sent for Dr. G. E. Fuller, who found upon examination that it was affected with trichinal, so it was buried. People need not fear to eat pork which has been thoroughly cooked.

Mrs. Maria Colton, formerly of Monson, died Tuesday at the age of 72 years at the home of her sister, Mrs. James Loomis, in Palmer, and the body was brought to Monson yesterday for burial in the Center cemetery. Mrs. Colton was a member of the Monson Congregational church, and Rev. F. S. Hatch officiated at the burial.

George L. Fuller, the shoe dealer, has a novelty which will no doubt find favor with the ladies, and that is the ability to color shoes or slippers to match any dress. The work can be done while you wait,—in half an hour,—and ladies will find it convenient to have an old pair colored to match the dress to be worn on some special occasion, rather than go the expense of a new pair.

The school committee held a meeting last Friday evening. Delegates from the Gage district were present to second a petition which had been sent in. They had canvassed the district and found six pupils, so there will be a school with Miss Bradway for teacher. The committee voted to close schools where the attendance averaged but four, and transport the pupils to other schools.

The annual meeting of the Methodist Sunday school board was held Sunday, and the following officers were chosen: Superintendent, Frank M. King; assistant superintendent, Prof. Arthur N. Burke; secretary and treasurer, Myron E. Wright; librarian, Edwin C. Bradway; chorister, Edward J. Osborne; organist, Miss Jennie Day. The present board of teachers was reelected, and it was voted to have a Christmas tree and exercises Christmas night.

The Dorcas Society's Christmas sale occurs next Wednesday evening at the Congregational church parlors. It is their tenth anniversary, and everyone should attend. The proceeds of this sale are to go towards paying for wiring the church for electric lights and fixtures, consequently all are interested. No admission fee is to be charged and refreshments are to be served. The church is to be brilliantly lighted by electric lights that evening, and a good and profitable time is assured.

Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., elected the following officers at their meeting Monday evening: Commander, Dr. George E. Fuller; senior vice commander, John C. Aldrich; junior vice commander, George A. Harvey; surgeon, W. Leander Rood; quartermaster, William J. Ricketts; officer of the day, Lowell L. Wilcox; adjutant, G. H. Fosket. Past commander Henry H. Wood has been designated by the department commander to install the officers at the regular meeting of the post in January.

Last Saturday afternoon Rev. W. H. Marble organized the children's class in the M. E. Sunday school into a Junior Epworth League, with the following officers, the superintendent to be chosen: First vice president, Miss Bertha Noble; second vice president, Miss Grace Rathburn, third vice president, Miss Ella Harris; fourth vice president, Miss Louise Shaw; secretary, Miss Ruth Keeney; treasurer, Miss Lottie Nason.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Methodist church held its semi-annual meeting Monday. The following officers were elected: President, Prof. Walter E. Morse; vice president, Edward J. Osborne; recording secretary, Miss Mabel L. Fay; corresponding secretary, Miss Nellie F. Squier; treasurer, Mrs. Susan E. Thrall; Charles A. Bradway, chairman of lookout committee; Prof. Arthur N. Burke, chairman of prayer meeting committee; Adelbert W. Ferry, chairman of Sunday school committee; Miss Alice E. Darling, chairman of social committee; Miss Lizzie Osborne, chairman of flower committee; the officers comprise the greeting committee.

The Marcus Keep Woman's Relief Corps held a meeting Wednesday evening and elected these officers for the ensuing year: president, Mrs. Susan E. Thrall; senior vice president, Mrs. Sarah L. Warren; junior vice president, Mrs. W. Leander Rood; treasurer, Mrs. John C. Aldrich; conductor, Mrs. Eugene Howlett; chaplain, Mrs. Harriet Fenton; guard, Mrs. Herbert M. Smith. It was voted to invite Mrs. Davis of Palmer to install the officers, the installation to take place Jan. 19th. Mrs. John C. Aldrich was chosen delegate and Mrs. Sarah L. Warren alternate to the Department of Massachusetts convention, to be held in Springfield in February.

Lucier's minstrels are booked for Memorial Hall next Wednesday evening. The company has been thoroughly reorganized since its last appearance here, is better than ever, and will give an entirely new performance, bright and clean in every particular. Reserved seats on sale to-morrow morning at Keeney's. The Albany Express says of the company: "Lucier's minstrels opened at the Albany theater yesterday afternoon and evening, and at both performances large audiences were present. The performance is a good one. The company is large and includes a number of good voices. The specialities are new and clever, and much of the old time minstrel business is eliminated. With the company is "Billy Fries," the champion tambourine spinner of the world. His act is a feature and he made a hit. "Kenno," the human frog, is a contortionist who mystified the audience."

Academy Notes.

The Academy closes next Thursday for the Christmas recess, begining Tuesday, Jan. 1st. There will be no public examinations at the close of the term, but there will be a public day early next term.

These officers of the senior class have been elected for the coming term: President, Willie H. Reed of Stafford; vice president, Rosie G. Squier; secretary, Alice M. King, treasurer, Annie L. Rathbun.

The following programme will be given at the public rhetoricals in the chapel at 7.45 o'clock this evening:

Piano Solo.....Miss Carrie Chapin.
Declamation....."Regulus to the Roman Senate."
Geo. W. Bennett.
Recitation.....The Ringing of the Kirk Bell."
Miss Jeannie Adams.

Miss Edith Hurlburt.
Declamation....."The Downfall of Poland."
C. D. Stephanoff.
Piano Duo. Misses Cushman, Gage, Bowe and Helen Pease.

WILBRAHAM.

The Chautauqua Circle meets to-night with Miss Grace Atkins.

Edwin C. Howard has accepted a position as pricipal of a high school at Westboro.

Miss Lillian T. Russell, who has been spending the past four or five months in Maine, has returned home.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Congregational church held a social at Mrs. Moseley's Thursday evening.

At the Demorest silver medal contest held in the Methodist church Monday evening Miss Grace Atkins won the medal.

Professor R. W. Cooper has moved from the Ridge house on Faculty street into the DeWitt Mowry house on Main street.

The Grange at its last regular meeting elected Worthy Master F. A. Gurney a delegate to the State Grange convention at Haverhill the 11th, 12th and 13th.

There will be a Christmas tree at the Congregational church Christmas Eve. Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Hubbard were chosen a committee to buy presents, and Mrs. Wells Phelps and Mrs. Lily Phelps's classes a committee on arrangements.

The following officers were installed by Newton Lodge of Masons last week by Worthy Grand Lecturer Chauncey E. Peck: W. M., C. E. Fletcher; S. W., C. C. Beebe; J. W., G. A. Fisher; T., F. W. Green; C., H. Clark; M., W. T. Eaton; G. D., M. H. Cooley; J. D., C. G. Robbins; S. S., A. L. Damon; J. S., J. Conboy; T., L. Holman; S., W. H. Day.

At a meeting of the football team of the Academy last Friday evening James Davies, '96, was chosen captain for the next season.

The funeral of Mrs. Julia Nichols, wife of Rev. Fayette Nichols, who died at the Methodist parsonage last Saturday of consumption, was held at the Methodist church Wednesday afternoon.

WARREN.

Mrs. Shumway is spending a few days in Boston.

William Day has been chosen juryman at Worcester.

Mrs. Whitney and sister are spending a few weeks in Baltimore.

Mrs. Kingman and daughter are spending a few weeks in Bridgewater.

Business at Sayles & Jenks' mill is increasing, and many new families have come to town.

Mr. Chadsey and family have been spending a few days in New York.

Miss Tyler of Brookfield has been the guest of Mrs. Ball this week.

Mrs. Holden of New York has been spending a few days with Mrs. J. W. Hastings.

The Chinaman who has occupied the building of Mr. Fairbanks has removed his laundry to Main street, to a new building built for him by Mr. Whipple.

The ladies of the Universalist society held their annual fair Wednesday and Thursday evenings. There was the usual fine display of fancy work, the suppers were feasts of good things, the entertainment was exceedingly amusing, and the whole reflected much credit on the zeal and taste of the ladies in charge, which it is hoped will bring substantial returns.

The series of evangelistic services will close with the one next Sunday night. This week Mr. Webber is giving four illustrated sermons on the life of Christ in art; the stereopticon views which accompany the sermons are very beautiful. God has signally blessed the work of these meetings; already more than seventy people have acknowledged their allegiance to Jesus Christ, and those who are in close touch with the work feel that this is but a beginning of still richer showers of blessing in the immediate future.

Broadhurst Bros., the shoe dealers, 356 Main street, Springfield, are paying special attention to their slipper department and making preparations for the inevitable rush in Christmas shopping. Men's velvet slippers from 38, 49 and 75 cents to $1.00 a pair is half the price asked for the same grade elsewhere. They have good reason to expect the tremendous rush of last season repeated this year.

An Unusal Free Offer.

The world is filled with suffering people who can't seem to get well or find out what their trouble is. Such people oftentimes cannot afford the time or expense of a trip to the city, or the large fees charged by the best physicians. It is for just these people that Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who is without doubt the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, makes the following extraordinary offer. He invites you all to write him about your complaints, tell him how you feel and all the symptoms of your case, he will answer your letter free of charge, explaining the meaning of every symptom, telling just what your trouble is and how to get cured. He makes the most careful study of every letter, and his explanations are so clear that you understand exactly what ails you. And it costs you nothing. He makes a specialty of treating patients through letter correspondence and it has proved a perfect success. He is also discoverer of that wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Probably you, reader, have some complaint which you would like explained and cured, and if you will accept this offer write this successful specialist about it, you will undoubtedly be made strong and well.

BOOKS.

The most complimentry gift at Christmas is a book, unless the book is stupid. A well chosen book tells what the giver has read in the receiver. It is a faithful envoy; it carries your very words.

What are your words? Be careful. Words are the weightiest, the dearest, the most precious of all commodities.

You will pick out your book gift, then, where you have the best facilities for considering upon the thoughts that are to spring out of them; where you will be sure of conveying the words that are on your tongue.

Let us send you our book catalogue for 1895; it will help you.

Cleaning House.

Hard work or easy work, just as you choose. If you find it hard work, it's because you won't use Pearline. You'd rather waste your time and your strength with that absurd rubbing and scrubbing. Of course it's hard—that's why Pearline was invented, that's why Pearline is a household word. You don't know how easy it can be, until you let Pearline do the work.

Then house-cleaning slips right along. It is over before you know it.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 333 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

Did you ever see one of the famous waterproof Interlined Collars or Cuffs? It's very easy to tell, for they are all marked this way

TRADE ELLULOID MARK.

They are the only Interlined Collars and Cuffs, and are made of linen, covered with waterproof "CELLULOID." They'll stand right by you day in and day out, and they are all marked this way

TRADE ELLULOID MARK.

The first cost is the only cost, for they keep clean a long time, and when soiled you can clean them in a minute by simply wiping off with a wet cloth—that is the kind marked this way

TRADE ELLULOID MARK.

These collars and cuffs will outlast six linen ones. The wearer escapes laundry trials and laundry bills—no chafed neck and no wilting down if you get a collar marked this way

TRADE ELLULOID MARK.

Ask your dealer first, and take nothing that has not above trade mark, if you desire perfect satisfaction. All others are imitations absolutely.

If you can't find collars or cuffs marked this way, we will send you a sample postpaid on receipt of price. Collars, 25 cts. each. Cuffs 50 cts. pair. Give your size and say whether stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted.

TONGUE TWISTERS.—The hardest combination of vowels and consonants in the form of words and sentences, said a talkative lady yesterday, is as follows, and a person who can pronounce the sentences properly has a deft tongue. The sentences are:—

Gaze on the gay gray brigade.

The sea ceaseth and it suffices us.

Say, should such a shapely sash shabby stitches show?

Strange strategic statistics.

Give Grimes Jim's gilt gig whip.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in his famil'y for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. Va. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure.

Any one who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope, and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cent bottles.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

Little Sally Ann.

"Little Sally Ann, a-settin' in the san',
A weepin', a-cryin' for a young man!"
Down in the hollow the sunlight fell,
With its lingering love for a graisy dell;
The alders, trailed to the gurgling branch,
Lent a golden glow to the ripples' dance;
A spring bird clung to a swaying bough
And learned, and listened as birds know how—
Down in the hollow where little Sally Ann
Sat weeping and crying for a young man.

The shrill song floating away to the skies;
"Rise, Sally, rise, and wipe your eyes.
Turn to the east and turn to the west,
Turn to the one that you love best!"
The spring bird clung to the swaying bough,
Leaning and listening as birds know how.
And down in the hollow did Sally rise,
Carefully wiping her big blue eyes:
Turned to the east and turned to the west,
As if in doubt whom she loved the best.

Oh, the dismay in the echoing cries,
And in one hopeless bosom the thrill of surprise!
For little Sally Ann chose the scamp of the town,
Her bad little brother, so dimpled and brown;
Opened her arms to him, called him by name,
Called him thrice over ere ever he came,
And down in the hollow the little bird stirred,
And his cry was a welcome in one fluted word;
And under the alders for a moment a hush,
Then a sweep of the glory, of ripples a rush.

Oh, the joy of the sunshine, the peace of the day!
The gladness about him, the blossoming way!
Oh, that dance of the ripples! that breath of the breeze!
That sudden uplifting! that righteous ease!
That undefined longing to let the world see
How he wasn't quite worthless whatever he be—
And the dust of road grew in volume more thick
Around the gay whistle, the hop and the kick—
She loved him! she loved him! the impudent frown
Was chased from the face of the scamp of the town.

WHENCE THE MISTLETOE.

The legend of the mistletoe, according to Harper's Weekly, is an inheritance from the religion of the Druids. The cathedral arches under which the Celts worshipped were the spreading branches of the oak, the roof a dense foliage of greenery, and the mistletoe, the mystical parasite of the tree, was a symbol full of meaning, for it was believed to renew its life by some agency differing from that which propagated all other plants, and to exist by a divine power. Here, under the oak, the favorite tree of the Celtic sun-god, at the period of the winter-solstice, priests and people sacrificed white bulls and human victims. The mistletoe was gathered and dispensed in small sprays, to be hung by the worshippers over their doors as amulets against evil and propitiation to the sylvan deities.

The mistletoe continues to be specially cultivated in England for the sale which is always large at Christmas tide, but the apple tree has taken the place of the oak, as the soil on which the plant feeds the most generously. The kissing privilege connected with the mistletoe during the days of yule is probably the most familiar relic of its traditions. Both the yule-fire and the mistletoe were of old believed to have special virtue as safeguards against the powers of evil; yet when they became thoroughly embodied in the Christian legend, it was not so much this as their suggestion of the divine power which at Christmas kept the Prince of Darkness and his satellites in abject submission, that gave them their value. All readers of Shakespeare will remember the legend and its association with the crowing of the cock, as put in the mouth of Marcellus in Hamlet:

"It faded on the crowing of the cock.
Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes
Wherein our Savior's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long:
And then, they say, no spirit can walk abroad;
The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm,
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time."

HE CAME FROM THE WINDY WEST.

The man from Kansas was making a trip across the Atlantic, and during the passage the weather was extremely boisterous. One morning when it was blowing great guns the Kansan appeared on deck. Nobody was in sight except the captain.

"Go below there," he shouted.

The passenger looked around to see who he was talking to.

"You mean me?" he yelled back when he saw there was no one else in sight.

"Of course I do; go below, and the captain came alongside.

"Well, I guess not," protested the Kansan. "I'm up here to see how one of ycur 'mountain high' waves and 'terrific gales' compare with what we have in Kansas in the way of cyclones. This ain't a patching to what I've seen out our way."

Before the captain could offer further objection a big green wave came curling over the place where the passenger stood, and the next thing he knew he was swept off of his feet and carried aft over ropes and boats and all the paraphernalia of a ship's deck and landed in a heap in one corner, where he was saved from being washed overboard. When they got him out he had a broken leg, a twisted shoulder, a sprained wrist, his face looked as if it had been dragged backward through a briar patch, and he was unconscious. They carried him to the captain's room and after much effort restored him to consciousness. He gazed around a minute in bewilderment, and his eyes fell on the captain.

"By gravy, cap," he said feebly, "that reminded me of home, only it was a dern sight wetter."—Detroit Free Press.

"I CANNA PAIRT WI' MA DEIL."

In S. R. Crockett's last book there is given a discussion by some Galloway shepherds on the death of the devil. "The minister was sayin'," remarked one, "that the new moderates threep that there's nae deil at a'. He dee'd some time since!"

"They say," said John Scott, pulling meditatively at his dutty, "that the pooer is vested noo in a kind o' comy-tee!"

"I dinna haud wi' comy-tees mysel'," replied Meg, "it's juist haein' mony maisters, ilka yin mair cankersome and thrawn than anither!"

"Weel, gin this news be true, an' the auld deil's deed at last, there's a heap o' fowk in this parish should be mentioned in his wull," said Jock Gordon, significantly.

But the herd was a stanch Marrow man. He was not led away by any human criticism, nor yet by the theology.

"New licht here, new licht there," he said; "I canna' pairt wi' ma deil. Na, na, that's ower muckle to expect o' a man o' ma age!"

Here is a specimen of dramatic criticism as she is written in Chicago: "The first scene of the second act shows a forest of phosphorescent fungi, full of fascinating phantasmagorical fireflies, fitfully flitting fast and furiously." An argument alliterated artfully as above awakens esthetic appreciations.—Evening Sun.

A foreigner, not absolutely certain of all the shades of meaning in our English words, recently attended a reception at Vassar college, at which the young ladies of the institution were arrayed in all the bewildering beauty of evening toilets. Said he to the president, "I have before never seen so grand a sight as those young ladies in their nightgowns."—St. Albans Messenger.

The king of Dahomey frowned. "I don't care to be barbarous," he declared, "but if the enemy doesn't quit using poisoned bullets, I'll turn each of my Amazons loose with a horse and buggy." Those present who had seen women driving trembled, and hoped that the monarch might never put his threat into execution.—Detroit Tribune.

NO ROOM FOR HER HEART.—He watched her bitterly while she ate the double porter-house steak, with the usual side dishes.

"You have no heart," he observed, quietly, but with terrible earnestness.

"Sir," she exclaimed, her lip curling resentfully.

"Look," he said.

Making a rough estimate of the volume of what she had eaten, with a small allowance of room for lungs, he showed her that he must be right.—Detroit Tribune.

ONE VIEW OF FOOTBALL.—A long, loose jointed pilgrim, in a faded brown hat and venerable overcoat, strayed into one of the parks the other day where a hotly-contested game of football was in progress. He watched the players for some time in silence, says the Chicago Tribune, and at last asked a bystander—

"What d'ye reckon that thing they're fightin' over is wuth?"

"About $2.50, perhaps," replied the man to whom he had spoken.

"They're a pack o' durned fools!" exclaimed the pilgrim, stalking away in disgust.

No wonder a woman thinks herself good enough to eat when her complexion is flour and her diamonds paste.—Boston Transcript.

"My lord," said an overworked parson to his bishop, "I have not had a holiday for five years." "I am very sorry for your congregation," replied his lordship with a smile.—Tit Bits.

Love's Labor Lost. She—"George, all is lost." George—"Why?" She—"Papa has oiled those squeaky shoes you sold him yesterday."—Syracuse Post.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

A Bit of Christmas.

"Where are you going my pretty maid?"
"To gather some Christmas, sir," she said.

"And what is 'some Christmas,' my pretty maid?"
"Holly and Mistletoe, sir," she said.

"May I go with you my pretty maid?"
"Oh, yes, if you don't mind the snow, sir," she said.

"May I carry your 'Christmas,' my pretty maid?"
"Well, yes, I suppose, sir," she smiled and said.

But he carried the mistletoe over her head,
And soon like the holly her cheeks were red,

And as through the village they slyly sped,
"A fine bit o' 'Christmas,'" the gossips said.
—G. Weatherly, in Yule Tide.

BECAUSE HE WAS POOR.

She left him because he was poor. Of course, she wrote that she loved the other man—that their marriage had been a mistake—the folly of a boy and girl. But the fact remains she left him because he was poor, and he could not deceive himself about it.

He was the son of a rector in the shires. When his moustache appeared it found him with a fund of ambition and no means.

The rector died a broken hearted man, and Gerard went to London, unaware what he was going to do, but with an inward conviction that it was waiting for him.

Editors were unappreciative—the time would come when they should sue to him for manuscripts! Managers returned his plays unread, or omitted to return them at all—one day a drama from his pen should be the talk of the town.

Then he fell in love. She occupied a room in the same lodging house as he did. She was an actress. She talked a great deal of her provincial experience and the roles she had played in the country, but she had only six lines to speak at the Coliseum, and he shared her regret that it was not more.

When a young man with nothing falls in love, he always says he has "found an incentive." He generally says it proudly, as if he had done a really clever and remarkable thing. Gerard said he had "found an incentive."

He was earning sometimes $10 a week now. Delia's salary was $7.50. Combining their forces, he became persuaded at last, they might make each other happy and rise in their professions together.

Miss Delia Vibart became Mrs. Gerard Maynell. Two rooms in the lodging house were no longer required, and Gerard felt they had effected an economy to commence with. His prospects as a journalist improved as well.

From relying on outside contributions he obtained a permanent post on one of the minor journals. His income was not increased by the change, but it was assured. He drew his money regularly every Saturday morning.

The comedy in which his wife was playing a chambermaid had triumphantly registered its one hundredth night and the life matrimonial opened couleur de rose.

He had talent and so had she. In time he would certainly have succeeded as a literary man; Delia, with a chance in burlesque, which was her forte, would have set London crazy.

But he had chosen badly. The little lady had no taste for wedlock on such a limited income. The popularity of the comedy waned and she was not reëngaged for its successor.

Then she had an offer to go on a tour, and poverty, which creates more divorces than passion, compelled the young man's consent.

It was the beginning of the end, that division. It showed the man that the woman valued her ease more than she did his tenderness. It showed the woman she was jollier apart from the man than when they struggled together.

One day—it was long afterwards, but that does not matter—he received the letter that has been mentioned at the commencement. She had gone away from him again—this time for good, and not alone.

This is the story of a man who was not strong enough to live down his grief. From that night when Gerard Maynell learned o his wife's disappearance he never did anything more worth doing.

He worked in a fashion, of course—he had to work to live; but his ambition was gone, and his perseverance, and his sobriety.

The minor journal bore with him for a long time, for he had retained that post, and had been used to write his own stuff—the stuff that pleased him—in the evening at home. But there is a limit to all things, and to patience especially, and one morning Gerard issued from his office discharged.

He was 40 when he saw Delia next time. His cheeks were puffy and his eyes inclined to be blear. He was in New York, paying his board bill occasionally in the capacity of unattached reporter to a news agency, and Delia, who had been singing at a variety hall in Chicago, had just arrived in New York to die.

She was not notorious, but her name was known. Meynell was the reporter who was told to write a notice on her death, where she was to be buried, and what the hotelkeeper said, and what "floral offerings would rest upon the grave."

He shivered and touched her hand very gently. The dead and gone ambitions, the dead and gone love, seemed to be gibe the reporter who plied the boniface with questions, and jotted memoranda in his notebook for the public to read. The irony of the reunion stabbed him under his shabby coat.

His brain was fired, and on that death—the death of the girl he had married, the death of a music hall singer in a Third avenue hotel—Gerard Meynell wrote as he had not written since he lost her. Some of his earlier vigor came back to him, and when he returned to the agency he laid a column of "copy" on the manager's desk.

The "boss" was a practical man and know the value of space. He looked at the report with a surprised eye, and said he guessed it was somewhat lengthy.

Then he left her age, her married name, and "requiescat in pace," and jerked a blue pencil through the rest.—Black and White.

HIS NOVEL THEORY OF TIDES.

Uncle Alvah Dunning, the hermit of the Adirondacks, maintains that the earth is not round like a ball, but as flat as a pancake; or at best that it resembles a milk pan, with enough of an edge to it to keep the water from running away.

A number of guests at Charlie Bennett's "Antlers," on Raquette lake, were discussing the theory with Uncle Alvah one day during the present hunting season. One of them undertook the altogether hopeless task of convincing the old man of the error of his belief. Among other things he called attention to the tides.

"Uncle Alvah," he said, "you've heard of tides, haven't you?" How do you account for them if the world isn't round?"

The old man remained silent for a while and then drawled forth: "Wall, I hev some idee as to 'em."

"What is it, then?" asked the questioner, while all the sportsmen drew near to await the answer. Uncle Alvah was not to be hurried, and after another pause, he remarked:

"Did ye ever turn over in bed? I thinks more than likely."

"Yes, I've turned over in bed."

"Do ye sleep 'tween sheets?"

"Always," replied the questioner, laughingly. "What's that got to do with it?"

"It's got all to do with it in my opinion. When you went over didn't the bed clothes kind o' slip round, 'an didn't get there same time as you did?"

"Yes."

"Wall, that's my idee o' the tides. The old earth sort o' slips 'round under the water like a man under the bedclothes, or it teeters a bit, like you tip a milk pan. The water don't get there quite as fast as the land, an' that's what makes the tides."—New York Herald.

HAYNES & CO.

Thinking of Christmas and the Present you'll give Father, Brother or Son?
Where can you find anything so practical as at our store?

THE CHRISTMAS BELLS

Will soon be Ringing and the Gladsome Holiday Season will be with us in all its Grandeur and Glory, and naturally the mind turns to the selection of the present which is always given as a reminder of the "peace on earth, good will to men" spirit of the occasion. If you are thinking of something useful as well as beautiful do you know of any place where you can be better accommodated than at our store? There are hundreds of appropriate articles here. Underwear, neckwear, handkerchiefts, socks, hats, caps,—in fact everything you can mention that ought to be found in a first-class clothing store. And the beauty of it is that everything is sold at Haynes's peculiar prices, and that means a decided saving for you. Come here then when you are ready to select your Holiday Presents, with the assurance that whatever you purchase will serve a two-fold purpose.

Men's and Young Men's Suits.

Nothing short of an inspired pen could tell of the beauty and good qualities of our Winter Style Sack Suits for young men and men. Fine mixtures, steel mixed, gray and fancy worsted suits, single and double-breasted, cut in the latest styles, thoroughly made and trimmed — the product of the finest makers in the land — at $8, $10, $12, $14, $16, $18, $20. For business, pleasure, handsome appearance and durability, nothing finer than this line of Sack Suits has ever been made.

In Overcoats and Ulsters,

We continue to do the largest business of any establishment in Western Massachusetts, and this is only the just reward of honest merit. Certainly no other store has anything like the assortment, fine styles, excellent materials and low prices that are to be found here. We don't care what price you pay, we'll give you the finest garment for the money you ever saw in your life. At $8.50 you can have an excellent Overcoat, just as good as you'll get for $12 elsewhere. The same difference holds good all through the stock. No matter what your fancy runs to in the way of Overcoats or Ulsters, you will certainly find it here.

DON'T FORGET TO ASK FOR A COPY OF THE "LIFE AND WORK OF JAMES G. BLAINE" WITH EVERY CASH PURCHASE OF $10 OR OVER, EXCEPT IN THE CUSTOM DEPARTMENT.

Christmas.

The shepherds sing; and shall I silent be?
My God, no hymn for thee?
My soul's a shepherd too; a flock it feeds
Of thoughts and words and deeds.
The pasture is thy word; the streams thy grace,
Enriching all the place,
Shepherd and flock shall sing, and all my powers
Outsing the daylight hours.
Then we will chide the sun for letting night
Take up his place and sight;
We sing one common Lord; wherefore he should Himself the candle hold.
I will go searching till I find a sun
Shall stay till we have done;
A willing shiner that shall shine as gladly
As frost-nipped sun look sadly.
Then we will sing and shine all our own day,
And one another pay;
His beams shall cheer my breast, and both so twine,
Till even his beams sing, and my music shine.

Written for the PALMER JOURNAL.

THE ORIGINS OF SOME OF OUR COMMON CHRISTMAS CUSTOMS.

On Christmas Eve we hear the tinkle of the reindeers' bells, the chuckle of old Santa Claus, and hang our stockings in the chimney corner for the gifts which we get up before daylight to gloat over; we greet all our friends with a "Merry Christmas," and Christmas night we have an evergreen tree in the parlor and another in the church, hung with festoons of pop corn, with yellow oranges and bags of candies, and presents for everybody. Our hearts are full of the warmth of Christmas giving and the thankfulness of Christmas receiving, and year after year there grows in us the Christmas spirit which is the Christian spent of "good will to men."

This is well; and I have thought that for my little share in the JOURNAL'S Christmas gift this year to its readers, I could not do better than to make a brief study of the origin of our Christmas customs.

We celebrate the 25th of December as our most joyful and happiest holiday in honor of the birth of Christ, but we all know that we do not know that Christ was born on that day, as we know that Washington was born on the 22d of February, and that the Declaration of Independence was signed on the Fourth of July.

How the world came to celebrate that day and how the evergreen tree and the jolly Santa came to take the part they do in our Christmas festivties, I shall try to make plain to you.

You know that when "Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea" the Jewish nation was subject to the Roman Empire. The Roman Empire then comprised all the civilized nations of the world, which included all the nations in the southern part of Europe, western Asia, and the north of Africa. All of these nations were what we now call heathen, that is, they worshipped a great many gods; not by such forms as we worship God, but by means of feasts and festivals, and in many other heathen ways. The Jews, of whom Jesus was one, alone worshipped one God.

After the resurrection of Christ the disciples went throughout the world converting these heathen people to a knowledge of the one God and Jesus Christ the Savior, and churches were formed, some publicly, some privately, throughout the world. Before two hundred years had passed after Christ's birth these churches celebrated by religious services a sacred day in commemoration of His birthday. It is narrated that the Emperor Diocletian, at one time learning that the Christians were celebrating the birth of Jesus in Nicomedia, ordered the building in which they were assembled to be burned, and they all perished in the flames. In these early churches however, there was no uniformity with regard to the time of the celebrations, some celebrating in May, some in June, and others in January.

In the early part of the fourth century the Emperor Constantine became converted to Christianity and made the Christian religion the religion of the Empire. Of course he could not convert the people, but he said "We will be Christians now," and he replaced in the churches the figures of the heroes and gods of the old worship by the figures of the apostles. He appointed Christian priests instead of the heathen priests to perform Christian functions. In reality the change was more in name than in anything else, for the masses of the people were as heathen as before. In this way different heathen festivals came to be celebrated in different parts of the empire as the birthday of Christ, and early in the fifth century Pope Julius I ordered that religious services be celebrated on the 25th of December in honor of this day.

In Italy at about this time of the year,—that is from December 19 to New Year's—it had been the custom from time immemorial to celebrate a feast of Saturn called the "Saturnalia." This was at the winter solstice when the sun began to turn northward, and there was great gaiety and great license, even the slaves being allowed their freedom. So in Italy the Saturnalia was changed to a Christmas festival which began with religious services and ended in social gaiety, and the Infant in the cradle, surrounded by Mary and Joseph, bull's heads, cherubs, eastern magi and numerous ornaments were represented in the processions instead of the forms of the Saturnalia.

In the Romish church the festival still retains both its religious and its social features. Since the sixth century three masses have been held on Christmas day, one at midnight, one at early dawn and one in the morning. Christmas day is also celebrated as a religious festival in the Episcopal and Lutheran churches, and services are held in some of the other Protestent churches of Europe.

There were originally two classes of Protestants that came out from the Roman Catholic church in the time of the Reformation: One class, the Episcopalians in England and the Lutherans in Germany, aimed only to discard what doctrines they thought were untrue, and to reform and purify the practices of the church; the other class, the Calvinists in Germany and the Dissenters in England, believed in radical changes. So it came about that the Episcopalians and Lutherans have always had their sacred religious festivals at Christmas. All over Europe these churches begin their services on Christmas Eve, and continue them for two days. Every one goes to church at Christmas time, although he may not go again till the year rolls around again. There is fine music and fine preaching, such as is heard at no other time.

The Christmas festival has been celebrated by the Roman Catholics, the Episcopalians and the Lutherans wherever they have settled in this country; but the Pilgrims and the Puritans were Calvinists and antagoinstic to everything Romish. In Cromwell's time in England the Christmas celebrations were forbidden; in Massachusetts the keeping of Christmas day was early discountenanced, and it is not until a comparatively recent date that it has been a legal holiday. I am told that within fifty years many Presbyterians have looked upon Christmas festivals as almost blasphemous. So now all of our Protestant churches except the Episcopalians and Lutherans,—and some of those churches also,—so celebrate the day as a social rather than as a religious festival.

The social features of the English festival seem to be taken from the Saturnalia; their Christmas carols are interesting, but we have done nothing of the kind in this country except to borrow some of their songs.

The Christmas tree is of German origin. Just as the Italians and Romans renamed their gods and remodeled their festivals after Christian patterns, so the Germanic nations, when they became Christianized, still held to their old customs under Christian names. The chief God of the Germans was Odin; he was the sun-god, the dispenser of all blessings. When the sun arose it appeared to be like a tree; the rays of the sun were the branches, the clouds were the leaves, and so from the earliest times the universe was represented as a tree. "The most perfect and elevated picture of the sun-tree is painted for us by the Edda," says one authority. "The 'world-ash' was an evergreen tree, (signifying its immortality) which, with its branches, embraced alike the habitations of men and gods, of giants and dwarfs." "An Icelandic myth of the mountain ash, sacred to Thor, is as follows: 'This is called the sacred tree, and it is related that once, on Christmas night, all its branches were found thickly covered with glowing lights which even the winter wind could not extinguish, blew he never so lustily.' There remains no doubt that the celestial sun-tree is a prototype of our Christmas tree; the fir stands for the ash itself, the lights for the lightnings flashing overhead, the golden apples, the nuts and the balls point us to the sun, the moon and the stars, or to the gods whom those represent." So says the German, and we are English and the English were Anglo-Saxon, and the Angles and Saxons were Germans. So ancient is this "world-ash" or "tree-of-heaven" conception, that having gone back with our remotest ancestors to their original home in Western Asia, it takes but little imagination to go back a cycle further to the garden of Eden, wherein is the "tree of life." There are lapses in the genealogy, but to my mind the Christmas tree is as directly a descendant from the tree of Paradise as I am from Mother Eve.

The pop corn, the oranges, the candy and the presents are American substitutes for the German decorations, for in Germany the presents are around but not on the tree. Santa Claus also is of German origin. He is called the "Christmas Man," and in England he is "Father Christmas." We use the names Santa Claus, St. Nicholas, Kris Kringle, and sometimes Old Nick. Kris Kringle is from the German "Christ Kinde," and means the Christ Child. It is inappropriately applied to our Santa Claus or St. Nicholas, and should be used only when referring to the Infant or Child Christ. It is, or should be, associated with our higher feelings and the sacred religious ceremonies, rather than the merely social features of our Christmas. Old Nick is another personage altogether, representing always evil, never good, so let us have nothing to do with Old Nick.

The name Santa Claus (or Klaus) is the Dutch for St. Nicholas, but the original idea was not the same. Just as the sun-tree represented the god Odin and his universe, so the beneficent god as himself was represented by the early German nations a man who is now the German "Christmas Man." He is portrayed with flowing gray mantle and a long white beard, with a large hat drawn down about the face and over the forehead, and her ides a magnificent white horse.

St. Nicholas is one of the calendar saints of the Romish church. He was an early bishop of Myra, but at just what time legend and documentary evidence do not agree. He is represented as a holy child and a holy man, who bestowed his wealth upon the poor and showered favors upon the helpless. Hence as a saint he is regarded as the patron of the weak and the defenseless, and especially of boys and children. There are innumerable legends of the favors bestowed by this saint upon people in distress; it would take a book to hold them all. It is said he is one of the most popular saints in Europe of the Greek, as well as of the Romish church, and there are more shrines erected to him than to any other saints.

When Germany became Catholic, Nicholas was substituted by the church for the Odinman. I can conceive of two reasons which led to this selection: The character of St. Nicholas closely resembled that of the Odinman, and his day is Dec. 6th, while the feast of Odin were celebrated at the time of the winter solstice. The Protestants of Germany however, do not identify the two, but choose the heathen Odin rather than the Catholic St. Nicholas for their Christmas gift-giver. The German children make a list of the gifts they would receive from him, and in some parts of Germany this is put out of the window with a bundle of hay for his horse. It is interesting to note that in the morning the children find the presents and the hay has disappeared. In some parts of Germany the children set their shoes or hang their stockings in the chimney corner, but this custom is dying out, as it is with us.

In some parts of Italy, where St. Nicholas day is celebrated on the 6th of December, the children set their shoes out of doors for the saint to fill.

In France, the gift-giver is St. Nicholas in name, but he wears the dress of the Odinman of Germany, and it is on New Year's day that he fills the shoes or the stockings which the children put for him in the chimney corner.

The religious services are celebrated in France by all the churches on Christmas day. The Christmas tree is hung with ornaments and representations associated with Christ. Often the tree is kept until New Year's, for New Year's day is the gift time and the time for social gaiety and mirth.

And now I have come to a chapter in my tale which for the present I must leave a blank. You will recognize our Santa Claus in the German "Christmas Man." He appears in England as "Father Christmas," and in France as St. Nicholas. In England too the children hang up their stockings at the fireplace to be filled. But where Santa Claus stables his white horse and leaves his white mantle, gets into his knee breeches and high boots, puts on his fur coat, fills his sleigh and pulls the ribbons over the backs of his reindeer, I cannot find out! I have sought curiously for the reindeer tracks, but they are as hard to find in literature as they were when I searched for them in my childhood upon the house roof. Our German professor is surprised to find a Christmas man who drives reindeer! Our French teacher thinks St. Nicholas appears; he certainly has no reindeer! My English girl never heard of such a thing! In Sweden? But no; our Swede woman says, "No, I haive no Sainta Clause weeth no reindeer in Sweeden." I cannot go to Icelandto find out for you to-day if that is his hotel exchange, but I ask the American girl, and the girl from the far west, and the girl from the east; even the girl from the Sunny South knows no Santa Claus without his reindeer team. Is our Santa our very own and not another's? Can it be that—

"It was the night before Christmas and all through the house
Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse," is the porch of the hotel from which he has dashed through America these many years? In other words, do you suppose the author of that poem invented our Santa himself? With all the intensity of my childhood, I wish I knew!

The greeting, "Merry Christmas," I have not followed up so carefully, but the German, the French and English give it as we do. Merry Christmas on Christmas morning,—which I anticipate, and wish you now,

"To all a Merry Christmas."

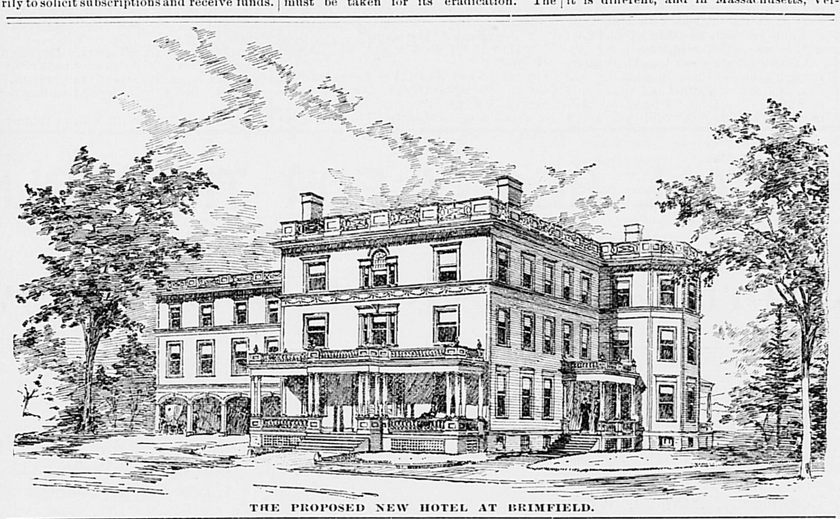
BRIMFIELD'S POSSIBLE NEW HOTEL.

Proposed New Structure to Replace the One Burned Four Years Ago.

A Handsome Building Which it is Hoped Will be Put Up.

Since the burning of the old hotel at Brimfield about four years ago there has been no public place of entertainment for man and beast in this old town, but it is possible that a change is near at hand. The cut below gives a fair idea of the building which it is now proposed to erect on the site of the old hotel. It much resembles the old hotel, but there will be rooms above the hall, increasing the number of guest rooms, and the dining room will be enlarged and placed on the east end of the building. A ladies' entrance will also be on the east side of the building. The construction and equipment will be of the most thorough kind, the most complete sanitary plumbing will be used, and ventilation and ample stairways will be provided.

It will cost about $15,000, and the proposition is to form a hotel association and choose a board of trustees, who shall act temporarily to solicit subscriptions and receive funds.



THE PROPOSED NEW HOTEL AT BRIMFIELD.

Wealthy people who formerly resided in Brimfield have expressed a willingness to take stock in the enterprise, and subscription papers will soon be circulated among the townspeople and others. As soon as the required amount is subscribed the association will secure a charter and erect the building, and it is thought little trouble will be experienced in securing the funds. The plans for the structure were drawn by Gardner, Pyne & Gardner of Springfield.

The old hotel was built in 1809, and was kept for many years by Marquis Converse. About 1860 it was purchased by Silas C. Herring, of Herring safe fame, and remodeled, something like $20,000 being spent on it. In 1869 Amos Munroe bought it and conducted it until about seven years ago, when it was bought by J. L. Bacon. Under Mr. Munroe's management it attained a wide reputation, and was the scene of many a jolly party, both summer and winter.

TUBERCULOSIS AMONG CATTLE.

What the Disease is and What is Being Done to Prevent It.

Owners of Cattle Should Look Carefully After Their Herds.

Probably many readers of the JOURNAL will think that all this talk and action in the matter of tuberculosis among cattle is unwarranted and unnecessary, that it has no doubt existed for years among cattle in this section, and that the milk from many has been such consumed for a greater or less time, and some infected animals killed and eaten for beef without any knowledge of their having the disease, and no one is the worse. That the former is true there is no doubt, but of the latter there may be considerable question.

What is tuberculosis among cattle? It is nothing more nor less than that which is consumption among human beings, and medical authorities are beginning to recognize that tuberculosis among cattle is responsible for many cases of consumption among humans, and that summary measures must be taken for its eradication. The theory that many diseases, among them tuberculosis, were the result of myriads of microscopic germs of bacteria, was ridiculed when it was first advanced, but is now fully accepted. Tuberculosis in cattle is caused by the same micro-organism which causes consumption in man, the tubercle-bacillus, about 1-3000 of an inch long and shaped like a little rod. From it comes the name "tuber-culosis," which is commonly thought to mean disease of the lungs only. It really includes all forms of disease caused by the tubercle-bacillus, and in men causes diseases of the joints, scrofula, local tuberculosis of the hands and face, as well as diseases of the lungs. It is exactly so with cattle. The germs attack the glands throughout the body, and affect not only the lungs of a cow, but her intestines, her udder, her stomach or any portion of the mucous membrane. The symptoms of the disease are very hard to detect. An animal attacked by it may live for years and be thought healthy as any of the herd, but it will eventually die of it. It is often that the fattest and best of the herd are suffering from the disease—animals that the casual observer would say were in the best of condition. Many times the first animals to be attacked are the finest and choicest bred, most valuable for milk or breeding. This is accounted for by the breeding together of the fancy strains so much that while consumption is not hereditary, their constitutions become very susceptible to consumptive influences. The sturdier breeds of cattle with mixed blood are much freer from the disease than the registered cattle. This is seen from the fact that in the West the cattle are almost free from it. This may be because they are bred very widely, and is largely, probably, because they have to shift for themselves a great deal and thus develop sturdy constitutions. Then, also, they are killed off young. With the fine cattle, particularly in the East, it is different, and in Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire and New York the disease is most prevalent. Some fine dairy cows never go out of the barn during the winter, and though finely housed, do not take their heads out of the stanchions for four months at a time, so it is easy to see that their constitutions are not the strongest. And it is hard to tell where to look for the disease. No one community has a monopoly of it. It is everywhere. Cattle seldom give evidence of the disease till it is far advanced. Thus it is that there is a great outcry among bystanders when a fine-appearing but tuberculosis cow is killed by the inspector, but this is quickly quieted by the post-mortem examination, which is always made when an animal is killed by order of the cattle commissioners. To find out when a cow has tuberculosis except in the last stages, is very difficult. The general health of the animal must be considered, a cough listened for, the breath examined for wheezing and ausculation must be practiced. But it was left for Dr. Robert Koch to discover a test, which even the United States government now admits to be decisive, and which the agents in Massachusetts as well as in other states are now using. This is called tuberculine. It is the glycerine extract of pure tubercle bacilli, which have been captured and brought up on gelatine or a mixture of blood-serum and beef-tea. This product is first forced through an unglazed porcelain plate to remove as many bacilli as possible. Then it is boiled and then treated with antiseptics till it is absolutely free from bacilli. It is then sealed up carefully and is ready for use. About half a teaspoonful of the liquid, which costs $10 a spoonful, is injected with a hypodermic syringe into some part of the animal suspected of the disease, usually the back of the shoulder. This is usually done at night when the animal is lying quietly. If tuberculosis is there the temperature will rise, and if the animal is healthy it will remain unchanged. The temperature is taken in two hours and at intervals for 24 hours, when the heat would be normal. The usual temperature of a cow is 100 degrees, but if afflicted with tuberculosis and injected with Koch's tuberculine the temperature will rise to as high as 108, though usually only to about 104. If the injection is made at night the test can be made in the morning, when the temperature will be the highest. Tuberculosis is as contagious between man and beast as between man and man. The animal may catch it by eating hay in which sputa from a consumptive's throat has fallen. This sputa is virulent even after it is several months old, and when converted into dust spreads easily. Man contracts the disease from cattle by eating infected meat and drinking infected milk, although there is no more reason for boycotting the butcher or the milkman than there has been for years.

So much practical knowledge of the disease has been gained recently that more active measures than ever are being taken to prevent the spread of tuberculosis and to stamp out the disease. A law went into effect November 15th providing for the quarantine of cattle in Massachusetts, and no animal is now allowed to come into the state until it has first been quarantined and proved to be free from the disease. The state board of cattle commissioners and the local boards of health have been given greatly increased powers, and are looking sharply after suspected cattle. Many have been killed in various parts of the state, and the percentage of the animals affected is found to be much larger than most people suppose.

In Palmer so far six herds have been suspected, five animals in one herd, three in another, and one in each of four others being ordered quarantined by the cattle inspectors. Of these twelve animals two have been killed and found to be badly affected. The others are awaiting the visit of the state board of cattle commissioners, who have been notified. When the inspector has reason to believe that an animal has tuberculosis, he orders the animal separated from the rest of the herd, and gives a copy of his order to the local board of health and also to the state board of cattle commissioners. Other animals besides cattle may have the disease, and dogs, cats, and even fowls may be afflicted. A Palmer man recently bought a chicken at one of the local markets, and when he came to cut it up for cooking noticed something peculiar about the looks of the intestines. He took it to a physician, who found that the bird had been badly affected with tuberculosis. The marketman was in no wise to blame, as he had bought the fowl already dressed of a Brimfield farmer, and could not know its condition unless it was cut up. From this same Brimfield farm a cow was recently sold to a Palmer man, but after a day or two it was noticed the animal was not right, and it was determined that she had tuberculosis. She accordingly returned.

On another page will be found the rules laid down by the state board of cattle commissioners regarding the treatment of suspected animals, and every farmer or owner of neat cattle will do well to make himself familiar with them, not only for his own protection but for the good of the community at large. That the government is dealing with the matter in earnest is shown by that section of the law passed by the Legislature last summer, which provides that any person "who has knowledge of, or has good reason to suspect the existence of any contagious disease' among any domestic animals in the state shall immediately give written notice to the board of health in the city where the affected animal is, "and for failure to do so shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year."

RULES OF HEALTH.

The following rules for good living were given by Dr. N. W. Rand at a recent talk on "Physiology" before the teachers of the Monson schools. They certainly are simple enough to allow their adoption by everyone:

Eat plenty of plain nutritious food, slowly and at regular hours, three times a day.

Drink little or nothing with meals; at other times drink freely of pure water. It constitutes the bulk of our bodies, and, next to air, is the greatest necessity of life.

People under 10 should eat no confectionery, nor rich pastry.

People under 20 should drink no tea nor coffee.

People under 60 should drink no fermented or spirituous liquors of any kind.

People under 100 should use no tobacco, opium, distilled liquors nor drugs of any description unless needed as medicines.

Go to bed and rise at regular hours; take plenty of time for sleep, and in a well ventilated room. 'T is better to sleep this side the grave than the other.

Take regular daily exercise in the open air.

Dress comfortably. Wear nothing that obstructs the circulation or prevents the free expansion of the chest.

Keep clean—both in body and mind, in thought and act. Impurity within or without is a deadly poison.

Follow faithfully some useful and agreeable vocation.

Remember that moderation, regularity of habits, purity of life, self-forgetfulness and a hopeful heart will do more to provote health and happiness than all the drugs of the doctors.

SIT UP STRAIGHT.

Nothing is more abominable in a young person than the habit of stooping, and, except when caused by malformation or actual weakness, nothing is more inexcusable. A slouchy, stooping habit of carriage always suggests laziness, and often stealth and dishonesty.

Carry your head erect, expand your chest, throw back your shoulders, or you will never possess grace or a commanding presence.

The Creator "made man upright." Round shouldered and bow-shaped spines may be avoided by watchfulness during youth and retained in maturity without an effort.

If you bend over too much in your studies get a lower seat. Saw the legs off an old chair and then sit down so low that your chin will come just above the table; make the hind legs a little shorter than the fore legs, and then read and write with your arms on the table and it will take some of the crook from your back.

One mother, whose daughter was getting the habit of stooping, used to have her lie flat on her back, without a pillow, for an hour each day, while she read to her out of some interesting book. In a little while she was as straight as need be, and a picture of health and strength.

In some countries the women carry pails, tubs and heavy loads on their heads—this keeps them erect. Throwing back the arms is another means of keeping straight. Remember you may add years to your life by standing up straight, and you may not only have a longer life but a stronger, broader, deeper, happier and more useful life if you go about with head erect and chest expanded and lungs well developed, with rosy cheeks and fresh complexion, than if you go about bent over, cramped up, stooping, flat-shouldered, sallow, nervous and miserable. —The Advance.

A traveller stopped for the night at a cabin in the Georgia woods. "I am very hungry," he said to the host, "have you anyththing to eat?"

"Nothin' but 'possum."

The traveller winced, but watching patiently for the repast.

After the lapse of a half-hour the host came in, accompanied by three hound dogs, and holding a lightwood torch aloft.

"Here," he said, to his almost starving guest, "take this rabbit foot and rub my shoulder with it."

"What is that for?" asked the guest.

"Well, ding it all! ain't I got to go out an' ketch a 'possum fer yer supper?"—Atlanta Constitution.

PAT'S CONCLUSION.—A native of the Emerald Isle chanced to meet a fellow workman who was once his boon companion in a powder factory where a terrible explosion had occurred.

"Are you glad you left the arsenal, Pat?"

"Bedad, I am, Micky. If I had been working there now, I would have been dead a year ago!"—London Tit-Bits.

Agitator O'Rafferty—"The land, me fri'nds has belonged to the paple since the days of Adam." "Yis," replied a voice in the crowd; "and wasn't he evicted from the Garden of Eden without compinsation? Don't sphake of him."—Texas Siftings.

TALE OF A MILL.

The story of Charles and Claire is a very simple one. They lived honestly and loved each other with all their hearts. He was 35 years of age. She was 30. They lived in Paris and had no children.

Claire was employed in the Bank of France, and Charles worked in the Credit Foncier. Their combined salaries amounted to 400 francs a month and made possible certain luxuries—Theatre des Batignolles, excursions to Saint-Ouen, fried fish suppers at Auteuil. Sometimes they went for picnics into the department Seine-et Oise.

One day they climbed up the heights of Montmartre, and from the summit they caught sight of the peaks of Chaumont. Then they went into ecstasies over the beauties of nature.

"The real mountains must be wonderful," declared the husband.

Said his wife: "What if one day we were to go and see the Pyrenees? Your family came from there, you know, and you have an aunt at Pau."

Charles soon remembered his aunt there, even recalled her name, Adele Beyries. He wrote to her to say they would go to spend a week at Pau during their next vacation. They at once began to make preparations for the trip. In order to live well in the Pyrenees they deprived themselves of many things in Paris.

At length the month of August came round. Charles and Claire had their vacations at the same time, and they left Paris on a Saturday night.

They arrived in Pau 24 hours later and found the aunt without difficulty. She was selling bonbons and photographs of Henry IV before the gateway of the castle. She gave her nephew the name of a good hotel.

It was raining when they arrived, and the mountains were not visible. The next day the sky was still overcast, and the great mountains were shrouded in heavy mists.

"Never mind," said Charles, "let us go for a walk. The mists are sure to rise before long."

Unfortunately instead of going in a southerly direction, where the Pyrenees were, they turned their faces toward the north, where lay the flat lands of Pont Long. They walked for two hours with confidence. Suddenly on their left the land began to rise in low hills.

"There they are!" cried Charles, and his awestruck eyes began to search for a sign of the everlasting snows.

"You think those are the real Pyrenees?" said Claire doubtfully.

"Why, of course," was his confident reply.

They attacked the hills bravely, and the sky began to grow clear, the clouds to break up. Patches of deep blue began to show themselves through the mist masses. Presently the sun itself shone out, and before his fierce arrows the vapors rolled to one side and fled away like an army of ghost and specters in rout.

The two Parisians continued to climb. Suddenly they saw before them a windmill, an old windmill whose arms were slowly turning in the wind on the summit of the hill. Charles was somewhat surprised.

Did they have windmills on the highest peaks of the chain? he thought. Perhaps the people have dancing there as they did at Montmartre.

"Peuh! The Pyrenees don't amount to much, you know," said Claire, with a shrug of her shapely shoulders.

Still they kept on climbing, and in a quarter of an hour found themselves at the foot of the mill. There was not a cloud in the sky. Claire turned round suddenly and uttered a loud cry.

"Oh, Charles, look over there!"

Charles turned at his wife's words and stood in amazement. The real Pyrenees rose up in the distance with such indescribable grandeur that Charles and Claire were overcome with emotion.

They stretched away in long blue ranges, rising higher and higher into the sky, ever more and more indistinct and blue. And over all were the great slopes of everlasting snows standing out white and grand against the deep blue skies. Claire and Charles had never seen such a sight before, and their eyes filled with the tears of enthusiasm.

They waited there several hours, and the next day they came again. And the day after they came again. How they longed to see those mountains close! But they were not rich enough. Perhaps next year. This time they must be content with looking at them from a distance. They bought plans, photographs and a guidebook and looked up the names of the peaks with eagerness that was almost passionate.

Charles and Claire enjoyed themselves more and more as the time passed, and when the day came for them to leave they were almost in tears. Oh, the lovely country they were going to leave! Why were they not born there? Oh, to live in the open air, away from the madding crowd, face to face with the big mountains, and never to hear the street venders crying their ware!

Charles especially was sad.

He was a child of the Pyrenees, because his parents had lived there and died there. It seemed as if their dust was calling to him, the exile in a great city, to return to his true home and live again in the pure air of the mountains and forests.

The last day, when he was making his adieu to the mountains, Charles saw the miller come out of the old windmill, and an extravagant idea came into his head.

"Good morning, my good fellow," he said to him.

"Good morning, sir."

"To whom does this mill belong?"

"To me."

"Do you have any land round it?"

"Eight hectares."

"Are you willing to sell?"

"Well, that depends," replied the miller, eying his interlocutor from head to foot.

"How much do you want?"

"How much do I want? Oh, 15,000 francs!"

"Oh, you would let it go for 10,000?"

"No, by my soul, no! I could not go lower than 12,000."

And the miller went into his mill again to prove that he would go no lower.

But seeing that the strangers were going away he ran after them, caught up with them and said:

"You might leave your address, though. Sometimes, you know, one has need of money, and—even for 10,000 francs perhaps! Well, 10,000 francs are always 10,000 francs."

Charles gave his address and walked away with his wife in a state of high glee.

"But you must be crazy," declared Claire.

"Why?"

"You think of buying that mill? You?"

"Yes, me—that is, I"—

"And the money?"

"We shall have it. You'll see. We'll work day and night and economize. In four years we will have our mill, in four years—perhaps three. And when once we have got it we will retire and become millers. Then we shall be able to see the mountains every day and enjoy them! Oh, how happy we shall be! Kiss me, kiss me, Mrs. Miller!"

And Charles embraced his pretty young wife as if he was holding the entire range of the Pyrenees to his breast.

* * * * * * *

They went back to Paris and worked with enthusiasm. In order to realize their dream they economized in every direction, lodgings, clothes and even food. Claire succeeded in obtaining copying work, and Charles kept books for a small storekeeper. In this way they were able to set aside 200 francs a month.

At the end of the first year Charles showed his wife a roll of bills

"There is one of the arms of our windmill," he said, and together they sang the well known air, "The Pyrenees Mountains."

So they worked on, and in the evenings, when the pen fell from their tired fingers, they looked at the photographs of the Pyrenees.

Another year passed, and Charles again showed his wife a large roll of bank notes.

"Here is another arm of our windmill," he said, kissing his wife and calling her "Mrs. Miller."

They had both grown a little thinner.

FANCY DRY GOODS AND NOVELTIES,

Corner Main and Bridge Streets, - - - - Springfield, Mass.

He was even a trifle bent, and she had a cough. But still they worked on, their eyes dazzled by the dream of the future. As the end drew nearer their impatience and earnestness increased. The tenderness they would have lavished on a child was directed toward the promised land for their old age. All their dreams and thoughts were of the mountains—those distant blue mountains with their majestic feats and white eternal snows.

When the third arm of the windmill was gained, Claire fell ill, and the doctor forbade her to return to the bank. Charles found out that she had consumption. Then he wavered.

"Wretch," he said to himself, "it is I who am the cause of all this. I allowed you to work too hard, and I have not given you proper food. God is punishing me!"

He felt he was going mad. She was then going to die! She whom he called my Lady Miller! To die even before she got her mill! Oh, it was too bitter!

"Don't fear anything," he said to his wife. "You will not have your mill, but you will live."

Charles sent her to Pau, where she passed the whole winter. She refused to go at first and was unwilling to give up their dream and spend on a doctor the money they had so painfully saved.

She said she could get well in Paris, in spite of the cold and the fog. She said this in a feeble voice, holding her husband's head in her hands and shutting her eyes tightly to prevent the tears coming out.

But Charles was firm. He went with her to Pau, and together they went up to see the old mill.

Claire spent the winter with Adele Beyries, her husband's old aunt. He received two letters a week from her, and Claire assured him she was getting better.

He sent her 300 francs a month for the doctor's bills and her living expenses, while she wrote loving letters, saying she did not need so much money and urging him to put it away in the savings bank.

But Charles urged her to take good care of herself and continued to send the money. One after another the arms of the old windmill disappeared, and he had nearly had them all in his grasp! If his wife had not fallen ill, they might have owned the whole mill by this time.

But what good was there in thinking of such things at all?

* * * * * * *

In the month of May he received a telegram from Claire.

"Come at once. Bring all the money."

Charles turned pale. He left on the same day. His wife met him at Pau. How thin she was, how white, how hollow her cheeks! He wept as he kissed her.

"Oh, Claire, you did not tell me the truth when you said you were growing better!"

"Yes," she said, "I told you the truth. I am better, I assure you! Ah! I am not very strong nor very fat—that will come—but, oh! Charles, you do not know yet what I have to tell you. It belongs to us now—it is ours!"

"What is ours?" he asked in amazement.

"The mill."

"What—you say"—

"Yes. See here are the bank notes you sent me! Two thousand seven hundred francs! And here is some more I earned myself," pulling 450 francs out of another pocket.

"You know," she explained, "I did not stay in the hotel, because I felt just as ill there as I did in Paris. So I got work as a governess in an English family. Not only have I not spent our three arms of the mill, but I have saved a large portion of the fourth. "But I had to leave because I was too ill. Anyhow here are 3,150 francs. With the 7,000 you have we can buy our mill at once. Kiss me, dear, again—and again!"

And Claire fainted away.

"Poor girl, you have killed yourself," said Charles, taking her in his arms to a carriage. They went to a druggist, and Claire came back to consciousness. She was able with great difficulty to stand upright.

Thus far she had deceived herself, but now that her dream was about to be realized, and she was with her husband again, she knew and recognized the gravity of her position. She knew that she was going to die.

They carried her into a hotel and put her to bed and sent for a doctor. All they could do for her, however, was useless.

She grew daily weaker and weaker.

One evening, feeling her life slipping away from her, she took her husband's face in her hands, which were already growing cold.

"Adieu, Charles," she murmured. "Do not cry. I shall die just the same. You know, it is impossible to cure consumption. Do not cry."

"Do you see the mountains yonder? How beautiful they are tonight! Take me nearer to the window so that I can see the snow and the great precipices and the forests and waterfalls.

"Charles," she added in a voice that grew feebler every second, "I must be buried in this beautiful country in the shadow of those mountains, and you—you must buy the mill"—her voice almost failed her—"and live there always, and in the evenings you must gaze on the great mountains and think—think of me. Won't you, Charles?"

So Claire died, and in the far distance the lights of the sunset touched the big shoulders of the Pyrenees and shone on their slopes of everlasting snow.—From the French.

Man at Birth Not Free.

Man at his birth is not free in any sense. He can squall and squirm, but he is absolutely at the disposal of his mother or of whoever else is in charge of him. It may be said that he becomes free, but that is equally ridiculous. He is not free to choose his language, his habits, his standard of right and wrong. All these are imposed upon him by his surroundings. To call men equal at their births or afterward is a similar falsification of facts. The maxim does not mean that at birth men are equal in the total lack of freedom. Therefore it means nothing at all as regards men at the moments of their births. It is obviously inapplicable to their conditions in after life, in every stage of which the innate inequalities of capacity and their results become more and more marked.—Quarterly Review.

Huck-muck, Rhyming Words.

In the south they have a very expressive phrase for one indifferently well—"frobly-mobly"—and to be in "mubble-fubble" signifies low spirits. In Leeds, when a person is overpowered with astonishment, he is said to be "much struck," a phrase forcible, but scarcely polite. "Huck-muck" is an expression of like character, meaning foul, miry, and in Devonshire a bedraggled, besmirched person is said to be "muckson up to the huckson."

In Gloucestershire a wavering, unstable or worthless man is called a "meckle-keckle fellow," and it is worthy of remark that in Derbyshire poor ore is called "keckle-meckle." An awkward simpleton is called "hauvey-gauvey" in the neighborhood of Leeds. In Warwickshire they style such a one as "hob-gob," which may be a corruption of "hobgoblin," or else it is from "hob," a lout, and "bog," a lump. "Gobbinshire" is the abode—"that never was writ in the traveler's chart"—of uncouth folk. They say of a slovenly loafer in South Cheshire:

Gobbinshire, Gobbinshire, of Gobbinshire Green,
The ronkest owd beggor as ever was seen.

WELL MADE, STYLISH CLOTHES.

It is truly remarked that "Fine feathers do not make fine birds," neither do "Fine clothes make a man," but fine clothes make men look much better than poorly cut and ill-fitting garments. Good clothes cost no more than poor ones—often-times not so much. I make none but the best, and guarantee to fit and please you.

PASKOLA.
(Trade Mark.)
A FLESH FORMING FOOD.
(Artificially Digested.)

For pale, thin people. The tired and weary feeling which accompanies all wasting diseases will be relieved at once, the wasting will be arrested and new healthy tissue will be formed so that they will become plump and strong. An increase in weight will be noticed at once. It is stimulating although it contains no alcohol. It is assimilated without digestive effort. Paskola supercedes Cod Liver Oil, but has not its repulsive taste. You can buy it at any drug store. Send your name to The Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade St., New York, and get their interesting pamphlet.

O. P. ALLEN, Palmer, Mass.

A GOOD INDICATION.

Medical practitioners of prominence are prescribing for the cure of diseases springing from derangement of the digestive organs, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. This professional endorsement is justified by the fact that no other preparation has been found so efficacious in that class of disorders, even in the most advanced and severe cases. It has cured gravel in the kidneys, stone in the bladder and inflammation of the kidneys, where all other medicines had failed. It can be purchased of any druggist. A book is wrapped about each bottle, explaining its use.

$15. $15.

For LYNCH'S Fine $20, $22, $25 and $28 Ulsters, and for LYNCH'S Fine $20, $22 and $25 Tailor Made and Perfect Fitting Suits.

LYNCH'S Grand Special Holiday Sale is booming. It has started people thinking, talking. "Why," say they, "Why such a sale at this time?" That's it. That's it. Why sacrifice goods at a time when every merchant in and around Springfield is doing a driving business, piling on all the profit the law allows? Why? Why?

The answer is simple enough. LYNCH'S shelves are heavy with piles of fine goods that might have to be carried over to another season. That's not LYNCH'S style. Clean shelves for new goods is the order of the day with CHARLES E. LYNCH. So out they go, profit or no profit, regardless of cost, of everything. It matters not. They have got to go. They will go, if great values count for anything.

THE YEAR'S BUILDING RECORD.

What Has Been Done in Palmer, Monson, and Other Towns Near By.

The Record Not a Large One, but the Growth Substantial.

PALMER.

The principal building event of the year in Palmer has been the new block of H. P. Holden's, erected to take the place of the opera house, burned in January. It is now nearly completed, and is the handsomest of the business blocks in town. It is about 100 feet on Main street by 85 on Central, two stories, built of red brick laid in red mortar, and contains five stores on Main street and one on Central. Besides these, on the second floor are the handsome rooms of the Palmer Business and Social Club, just fitted up by the club at an expense of over $1000, and two tenements, the entrance to one being from Main street and the other from Central. The stores are the finest in town, being plastered with adamant and finished in natural woods, with large plate glass windows. The work was done by day labor, and the cost was about $20,000. C. N. Ellithorpe had charge of the carpenter work on the building. Next in order is the Odd Fellows' new block, begun only a few days ago, which is to contain an opera house and rooms for the order. It is of red brick, and will cost about $12,000. E. H. Truesdell has built a barn and carriage house at a cost of about $1000; The Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society has erected a new building costing $200 on its ground for the exhibition of poultry. F. D. Barton has made alterations and improvements in his recently-purchased Bostock house costing $750; J. H. Davis has built a new carriage house and stable at a cost of $550; the Palmer Carpet Co. has spent $500 in repairs at its plant; W. H. Hitchcock has added a piazza to his house on Squier street and made other changes costing about $450; L. H. Conant has made repairs on his property at an expense of $340; H. T. Huntington has made repairs costing $300; and D. F. Holden's new carriage house at $200 completes the list.

On the site of the barn burned at the state primary school last August now stands a new barn erected this year under the management of Supt. Wheeler and H. C. Davis at a cost to the state of $10,000. With the exception of the new barn at the Amherst Agricultural College this barn may claim the honor of being the model barn in the state. It is divided into two sections, the cow stable, and the main or hay barn. The cow stable is 103 feet long by 38 feet wide, and has accommodations for 58 head of cattle, 29 on each side, the space between being 12 feet wide. The feed troughs are made of asphalt, and are connected with water pipes so the stock can be watered in the barn, an accommodation which all farmers will appreciate. The interior is plastered with a new plaster called adamant, the work being done by M. J. Dillon of Palmer. The main or hay room is 104 feet long by 42 feet wide, 35 feet to the ridgepole. There are 15 bins, each 10 by 14 feet, capable of holding 100 tons of hay. At the extremity of the barn on the right, furthest from the chief entrance, are three silos, each 16 feet long by 14 feet wide and 24 feet deep. Opposite the silos are two grain rooms capable of holding about 10 tons. On the lower floor is the root cellar, 60 feet long by 14 feet wide. Opposite the root cellar are five pens, each 10 by 14 feet, for the accommodation of the young stock. At the further end of these pens is the milk room, in which all the milk is weighed and put on record. There is also a small engine on this floor, which is used in cutting the corn for the silo. All the floors are double, and are laid with southern pine. The barn is covered with Brownville slate, furnished and put on by Mr. McCleary of Springfield, three car loads or 130 squares, being required to slate both sections. The exterior of the barn will be treated to a coat of yellow paint, with white trimming. Over the entrance can be seen in large gold leaf letters, 1894.

At Thorndike the Thorndike Co. has built a new storehouse at the No. 2 mill, and work is now progressing on a new chimney and boiler house at the same mill. The old house occupied by the agent has been moved and made into two new houses. James Loftus has built a new store costing $600, and Mrs. Dennis Crowley a house costing $700, both being done by Charles Ruggles of Three Rivers. Mrs. John Molloy has improved her residence at a cost of $700, Marcy of Palmer doing the work. J. W. Miller has new coal sheds costing about $500, and William Lawton's building on Commercial street and Harvey avenue is still unfinished.

At Bondsville the record is: New barn of the Boston Duck Co., $2500; new house for Mrs. Kate Breen, $1000; storehouse for Maurice Moriarty, $600; Jerry Sullivan, new barn, $350; Robert Lusty, repairs on house, $350; Josiah Gates, repairs on house, $350; P. O. Briun, repairs on house, $300; James Ash, new L on house, $300; Daniel Shea, new L on house, $250; T. D. Potter, repairs on house, $150. This work was all done by T. D. Potter & Co., in addition to which they made repairs for the West Ware Paper Co. at West Ware costing $500, built a new house for Thomas Ferrity costing $1000, and a new house for Austin Davis at Glendale, the cost of which was $1200.

At Three Rivers the most important building has been J. W. Cheney's new houses, which cost about $4000. Next comes the dwelling of Porter Jenks at $1300. Shaw Bros. have also built a small building for the post office, costing about $200. About $700 has been spent on new sewers, T. D. Potter has expended some $300 in improving his system of water works, and F. A. Ruggles has paid out about $200 for the same cause. Horace Paine and C. S. Ruggles have made repairs costing about $50 each.

MONSON.

The carpenters have not been idle this year, although the town does not seem to grow very rapidly. Julius N. Graves reports general jobbing and repairs to the amount of $3500; Heman Osborne has employed three men all the time, and James H. Duncan has built four hen houses, extended four buildings, built one barn and one shed, and repaired three houses besides those specified below.

The improvements in the Center cemetery extension will, when finished, add much to the general appearance of the place, and the commissioners deserve much credit for the interest they have manifested the past season in keeping "God's Acre" in such excellent condition. The flowers and the plant designs have been very beautiful, and the walks have been kept trimmed out.

It cannot be said that the general appearance of the village has been improved by the putting in of the water pipes. The streets have been left in bad shape, the ditch where the pipes have been laid being piled with dirt and loose stones without being puddled, leaving ridges which in many places, where the roads are narrow, makes it also impossible for teams to pass. One man has broken two carriage springs on this account. However, when the system is in working order these discomforts will be things of the past, and Monson will congratulate herself on having protection against fire.

W. N. Flynt is constantly devising some way in which he can beautify his park and add to the convenience and pleasure of those visiting it. The past season has noted many marked improvements, among them being the opening of the north exit, and the handsome drinking fountain.

The Park Avenue Land Association has opened up streets and avenues and placed sixteen or eighteen building lots on the market; of these several have already been sold, and the prospect is that another spring will see a number of dwellings erected thereon. The little park in the center of the plot of ground should be taken by the town and beautified.

The new buildings and important repairs for the year are:

Herbert C. Norcross's residence on Cushman street, which was completed in April, is the most expensive of the dwellings built this year. Its exterior effect is most charming, while its interior is large and well arranged. It has ten rooms besides basement, halls and closets, and has all modern improvements. F. E. Baker of Springfield was the builder. W. H. Hitchcock of Palmer did the plumbing and heating, and it is considered one of the best jobs of the kind in town. Mr. Norcross's barn, which stood for many years near the spot where his house was built, has been moved back and nearly rebuilt at a probably cost of $400. The work was done by Heman Osborne. Mr. Osborne has built temporary sheds, and is now erecting a large barn for George E. Tucker & Son, to replace the one destroyed by fire last summer. He also built a large barn for Henry Butler, and a large addition to the house owned by Wilson M. Tucker and his father, George E. Tucker. There are in the new part five rooms, one of which is a model kitchen. He has also remodeled Dr. Soule's house on Main street, the south L being moved back and used for a carriage house, and a barn 14 by 25 built.

William G. Meacham has built for Mrs. A. O. White a cosey, convenient cottage, and is now engaged upon one which when completed will be the property of Amos Anderson. The latter is situated on Harrison avenue.

J. N. Graves built, early in the season, on the site of the L of the old boarding house, a block which is occupied by the Monson Clothing House, and George L. Keeney, druggist. Later an addition was made for Frank A. Bills, jeweler. The cost was about $1700. The main part of the boarding house, which was nearly destroyed by fire, has been repaired and is used by Heimann & Lichten as a store house. The "Hotel Italy," for the men employed on the water works, was built by Mr. Graves and cost $250. He has also made into a two-tenement house the dwelling on Depot street recently purchased by Mrs. Maria L. Bradway, and repaired the house of S. F. Cushman, Jr., which was damaged in the Central Block fire.

John P. Herlihy, Jr., will have, when completed, a comfortable and well-arranged home on Pearl street. The house is two stories, contains eight rooms and has all modern improvements, cost $1600. Thomas J. Mills, contractor. He has also built for Dennis Purcell a pleasant eight-room cottage on High street at a cost of $1400, a house for Michael Cunningham, added two rooms and made other repairs to the house owned by the W. N. Flynt Granite Co. and occupied by Michael McDonald, besides remodeling L. G. Cushman's horse barn at his farm.

George L. Keeney has erected a building on Main street which he occupied for several months as a store. George A. Harvey, contractor. C. J. Leary's new stove and tin store, to take the place of the one burned, was also built by Mr. Harvey.

J. W. Lambert's block, corner of Park avenue and Main street, which was designed originally to have three stories and basement, will probably have four stories and basement, the extra story to be made into halls for the Grange and for the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

The house erected for Carlton Stebbins in the west part of the town is the largest of this year's construction, and although plain, is most substantial and comfortable. It was finished in the early autumn. Everett Robbins has built a six-room house on a cross road between the upper and lower Stafford roads. Frank Thompson's eight or nine-room two-story house on the Wales road, built by Myron Pike, is tasteful in design and is pleasantly situated; cost, about $1500. Alfred Mumford has a pretty cottage on Harrison avenue nearly completed, which will cost about $1200. His brother, Joseph Mumford, is the contractor. William Underwood is putting in the cellar for a house on Park avenue. Frank E. Handy has remodeled his house near the branch mill, and built a barn. Elliot H. Brown has enlarged his house at south Monson at a cost of $125. Marble Bacon's house on Flynt avenue has been enlarged and much improved. Deacon Edward P. Keep has built a barn, James H. Duncan, contractor. The home of Morris Hitchcock has been thoroughly repaired from top to bottom, Mr. Duncan doing the work. A. D. Norcross' residence has lately been repaired, also his barn. D. W. Ellis & son have made extensive repairs on their mill at South Monson, and put in a tank for automatic sprinklers. R. M. & Theodore Reynolds have put in tanks for automatic sprinklers at their mills. R. M. Reynolds has built at his straw works a boiler house and set a new boiler, and put in automatic sprinklers. S. F. Cushman has built a large addition to his branch mill and put in automatic sprinklers. Mrs. Elizabeth Coburn has built an addition to her barn. The interior of Edward F. Morris' residence has been much beautified. Mr. Brandt, who purchased the old Colton property, has thoroughly repaired the house and will occupy it as a summer residence. Henry M. Barlow has a new barn which cost $560. Frank Moore has erected a barn. Frank M. King is to erect a barn. Edward Sisson's barn, which was built by Chester Blanchard, is 20feet by 24 feet. St. Patrick's parish is improving the parochial residence and making some repairs on the church. The barn which stood on the grounds has been torn down, which improves the looks of the place greatly, and a railing has been placed on either side of the stone steps leading from Main street to the church.

Business at the Quarries.

Business at the granite quarries in the town has been unusually good this year, and a large number of men have been given employment. The Monson Granite Company's contracts, while not so numerous as in 1893, were of a decidedly better quality. In the spring the company entered a design in competition and secured the contract for the Wilbraham soldier's monument, every part of which was executed at their own works. Then they secured the contract and got out the whole of the cut granite used in the construction of a large Congregational church at Gloversville, N. Y., which was followed by the granite for a residence at Middletown, Ct. They also furnished all the granite used in the erection of extensive additions to the foundry of the Chapman Valve Mfg Co. at Indian Orchard. They also contracted for and supplied the town of Ware, Mass., with street curbing, and have now in process of construction a large and handsome drinking fountain which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Brockton is to present to the city. It will be ten feet high and have four drinking bowls for pubic use. The structure is circular in form, and will be surmounted by an ornate canopy supported by four polished red granite columns. All the stock used in the fountain, with the exception of the columns, is of dark Monson granite from the company's own quarries, and executed from its own designs. Besides the foregoing the company has on hand quite a number of monumental orders, which it will get out this winter. It has also the contract to construct the basement of J. W. Lambert's new block on Main street in Monson.

The past season has been one of the busiest in the history of the W. N. Flynt Granite Company, and never before has there been so large a number of men employed as this year. This was partially due to the buying of the famous George E. Lyons quarry at West Dummerston, Vt., early in the year. That branch of the business has been conducted from the Monson office. A little idea of the magnitude of the business done can be seen from the fact that up to the present time there have been shipped by the company 30,516 tons of stone, equal to 3051 cars at 10 tons to the car. The greater part of this enormous output has been of cut stone, for either ornamental or a rougher class of work, such as bridge work, curbing, etc. The amount of curbing shipped this season has been much larger than usual, 32,000 feet, or nearly six miles. Paving for cities and towns has entered largely into the company's business this season, 206,000 blocks having been shipped. The company considers that it has a very valuable mountain of trap rock, and has worked it sufficiently this fall to prove that it is of excellent quality and easily got out. This branch of the business will be pushed next season, orders having already been secured for a large amount. The following is a list of some of the contracts finished in 1894: Car shops for the B. and A. railroad at West Springfield; United States armory, residence for W. H. McKnight, drinking fountain in Forest Park, Worthy block, and parish house, Springfield; church at Brooklyn, N. Y.; parish house at Waterbury, Ct.; church at Ansonia, Ct.; library at Montpelier, Vt.; dam for the city of Northampton; telephone exchange at Worcester; paving blocks for Albany, N. Y. and Hartford, Ct.; high school at Stamford, Ct.; bridges on the lines of the B. and A., N. Y. N. H., and H. and N. L. N. railroads; fountain at Stafford Springs, Ct.; Nathan Hale monument for the state of Connecticut. Besides these there are many small orders, ranging from $100 to $1000. The company announces that it proposes to furnish special inducements another year to Palmer and Monson people who wish to use its stone for building purposes.

WILBRAHAM.

A soldier's monument was presented the town by Mrs. Stebbins Foskit, in memory of her husband, Dr. S. Foskit, and it was erected on the town hall site and dedicated July 4th. Chas. Pease has erected a new house on Springfield street at a cost of about $2000, which he has since sold to Miss L. Bosworth. The Misses Peck of Monson, Maine, have also completed and are now occupying a large house on the same street. Edward Jones of Maple street has built a new barn for farming tools and machinery, and repainted and otherwise improved his barn on the east side of the street. Hiram Clark of Main street has been improving the Dea. Adams homestead by tearing down parts of the old barn and sheds, and adding a new piazza on the house. James Merrick has made extensive improvements on his barn at his present residence, erected new sheds, built a large addition with windows on the east and south sides, raised the ell of the house one story and added several new rooms, repainted and otherwise improved the interior. He has removed the ell from the house on the old Merrick homestead and the barn, and torn down the log cabin on the Plains Mr. Ritchie has built a new barn and sheds, thus greatly improving his Plain property. Albert Pease has built a new hen house, with other improvements. H. T. Bolles, Charles Hubbard and Mrs. Gillett have erected large windmills for water power on their premises. C. C. Beebe has newly painted his house, and renovated and somewhat improved the interior. Marshall Wade has removed the fence surrounding his house; built new arbors, cut down the hedge on the front lawn and in many ways beautified his home. Dr. H. G. Webber has erected a new carriage house and sheds, removed the fence from the lawn and renovated parts of the interior of his house. Monroe Pease has newly painted his house on Main street and erected a new house on his farm on Maple street, to replace the one destroyed by fire last year. Elijah Munsell has built a new porch on the front of his residence, enlarged, reshingled and repainted the house and fence. Charles Hubbard's store, occupied by Frank Gurney, has been thoroughly repaired and repainted. Ira G. Potter has laid concrete walks about the lawn of his fine new residence, erected last winter on Main street. Rev. Mr. Miller somewhat altered his house to accommodate the post office, and removed the fence at the front. The fence has been removed from the lawns of Principal Wm. Newhall's residence and new walks and curbings made. New walks have been laid about Rich Hall premises, and the fence repainted. The fence has been removed in front of Prof. Benj. Gill's house, occupied by Mr. Royce, the piazza repaired, the house reshingled and repainted. Chas. Hubbard has removed the boundary fence and high hedge between his lawn and the Academy campus, and replaced it by a neat wire one and improved his lawn. Calvin Robbins has built a large greenhouse extension on the south of his house. H. Niles, who recently purchased the Harris estate, has built a new henhouse, made extensive alterations in the interior of the house, put in new two-paned windows, and repainted.

LUDLOW.

The Ludlow Mfg. Co. has built an iron railroad trestle on the north side of the canal, doing away with the old wooden bridge across the canal. Cutting & Bardwell of Worcester are building for the company a new machine and carpenter shop on East street, and a new mill on the site of the old stone mill near the bridge. Noe Pellesier has built a small house in "Little Canada," and Eugene Clark has finished a house at Ludlow Center.

WARREN.

There has been little building in Warren this year, contrary to the usual record. Mr. Nevins has built four new houses, a very pretty and commodious parsonage for the Methodist pastor, a house for himself, one for Martin Lynch and one for Mr. Fenton. A tenement has been built on the Brookfield road for parties in Wales, the work being done by Mr. Williams.

COMMON SAYINGS.

"He was as mad as a batter" is a phrase often used to indicate that a person has been very angry, says the Indianapolis Journal. But why should a batter be more addicted to anger than the tailor or the shoemaker? No one can tell, and consequently the phrase has no intelligent meaning if taken as it reads. The original phrase was "Mad as an atter," the last word being the Saxon for "adder," which gave it sense, as the adder is supposed to be always mad and ready to sting.

"Mad as a March hare" is another much used phrase. The hare is not reputed to be ferocious at any time. Those who have given information respecting the hare assert that in March the animal is particularly wild and shy. Consequently the phrase can have no meaning unless as a sarcastic allusion to one's lack of spirit and courage.

One often hears, "He's as dead as a door nail," yet it is probable that most of those who use the phrase cannot tell why a door nail should be deader than any other nail that is made of metal. It is explained, however, that the door nail in earlier times was the plate on the door upon which the old-fashioned and now unused "knocker" struck to arouse the inmates of the house. As the plate or nail was struck many more times than any other nail it was assumed to be deader than a nail struck only when driven into wood.

"I acknowledge the corn," meaning to retract or take back, has a number of explanations, the most plausible of which is that in 1828 one Stewart of Ohio made a speech in congress in which he declared that "Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky sent their haystacks and cornfields to New York and Philadelphia for a market." Wickliffe of Kentucky questioned the correctness of the statement. "What do they send?" asked Stewart. "Why, horses, mules, cattle and hogs." "What makes your horses, mules, cattle and hogs?" continued the Ohio man; "you feed $100 worth of hay to a horse; you just animate and get on top of your haystack and ride off to market. How is it with your cattle? You make one of them carry $50 worth of hay and grass to the Eastern market. How much corn does it take at thirty-three cents a bushel to fatten a hog? Why, thirty bushels. Then you put thirty bushels in the shape of a hog and make it walk off to the Eastern market." "I acknowledge the corn," shouted the Kentucky member.

"All talk and no cider" is an adage which is said to have originated in Bucks county, Pa. A party was assembled to drink a barrel of superior cider, but the elders of the assemblage engaged in a political discussion, which lasted so long that some who were less interested in politics than cider, withdrew on the plea that the invitation was a trap to get them to listen to a political talk rather than to drink cider. One of them said, "It was all talk and no cider."

"To take the cake" had its origin in the cake walk in which colored couples participate, the prize being a cake. Hence any one who does a thing conspicuously well, or sarcastically and more usually, one who fails, is said "to take the cake."

"A little bird told me," is an almost universal adage based upon the idea that this ubiquitous wanderer from the vantage of the upper air spies out all strange and secret things and tells them to those who can understand. Thus is Ecclesiastes x : 20: "Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bed chamber; for the bird of the air will carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter."

"Let us return to our mutton," meaning let us return to the subject matter from which we have wandered. The phrase comes from an old French play in which a draper who had been cheated by a lawyer of six ells of cloth appears in court to defend a shepherd who had stolen twenty-eight sheep of the draper. The pretense of the thievish lawyer causes the draper to wander from the sheep thief to his swindling lawyer, confusing the two misdemeanors, which caused the judge to frequently exclaim: "Let us return to our mutton" (sheep).

"Not worth a tinker's damn" is really not profane in itself, as the last word should be spelled without an "n." A tinker's dam is a wall of dough or clay raised around a spot which the plumber is repairing, just as he desires it fixed with solder. The material can be used but once; consequently, after being used is worthless. Hence the force of the adage for the comparison of worthless things.

"Everything is lovely and the goose hangs high" is a much-used expression, but why the hanging of the goose high should have anything to do with making everything lovely is not clear unless, as is explained, hangs is a misapprehension of the word "honks," the cry of the wild goose as it flies. On clear days wild geese fly high, hence, they "honk" high. Consequently, the adage means everything is lovely and the weather is fair.

"I'll put a spoke in his wheel" has very little meaning as the word spoke is now used, and instead of being a threat, might be considered as a pledge to assist. It had its origin many years ago when wheels were solid except three holes to receive a "spoke" or pin when going down hill which acted as a brake. In 1689 in a memorial, two measures designed to interfere with the arbitrary government of James II are spoken of "as such spokes in their chariot wheels that made them drive much heavier."—New York World.

Mark was growing old and had seen a great deal of the world. The result was that he was rather given to relating stories of his vast experience that were courteously doubted by the younger men. One night a young fellow told a story that was especially wonderful, and some one turned to the old man with this query: "Doesn't that remind you of your younger days, Uncle Mark?" "Well," said the old man, "it does remind me of a story I heard when I was a boy." "What was it?" asked the other. Uncle Mark looked solemn. "It was a darned lie," he said.—Boston Budget.

Mrs. Newrich—Justin. "I intend to pay some calls this afternoon. Won't you send around to the stable and tell them to send up a cart-de-visit, with a driver."—Truth.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 21, 1894.

THE famous Fayerweather will contest has finally been ended, and Amherst College will receive the $100,000 left it by the terms of the will.

ONLY 15,000 immigrants landed in this country in November, at the rate of 200,000 a year, little more than half the smallest number for any year in the past 15.

EX-PRESIDENT Harrison announces officially that he will not be a candidate for the presidency again, which will relieve Reid, McKinley, Allison and some others of some anxiety.

THE war between China and Japan is practically ended, Chinese commissioners having been sent to Japan with full power to arrange the terms of peace. Japan will practically get all she cares to ask for.

THERE is likely to be more trouble than ever with the labor organizations next year, the meeting of the American Federation of Labor at Denver having elected McBride president over Gompers, who has been too conservative to suit the majority. McBride is supposed to be more on the fight, and so more disturbances at an early date may be looked for.

IT is said that the Massachusetts highway commission will ask the next Legislature for $1,000,000 for state roads, and will petition to have it appropriated in February, so that it may be available early in the year. The friends and opponents of the scheme will in a large measure depend on whether or not the towns in which they live are likely to get a slice of the work done next season.

WOMEN'S votes come high, or at least are held at a high figure in Indiana, where Mrs. Helen M. Gouger has brought suit for $10,000 damages for being refused an opportunity to vote at the November state election. She went to the polls at Lafayette, but was not allowed to vote because she was a woman; she then offered to prove her citizenship, but was again refused. She claims that women are allowed to practice law in the state, and for that and other reasons are entitled to the rights of suffrage.

THE superiority of American armor for vessels is recognized by Russia, which has placed a contract with the Bethlehem Iron Company at Bethlehem, Pa., for armor for her two new war vessels. There will be 12,000 tons of it, and keep the works going for a full year. When it is remembered that we can also make guns which no vessel can carry armor thick enough to resist, it will be seen that we rather have the bulge on the other fellows if necessity ever compels any demonstration in that line.

SPRINGFIELD loses a citizen she can ill afford to spare in the death of Joseph L. Shipley, which happened Sunday night of heart disease. Mr. Shipley made a record for himself throughout Massachusetts as the editor of the Union, not because he was a particularly brilliant writer, but because he stood for the best in all things and believed what he wrote, and made other people believe it. His influence for good in the state and in Springfield has been great, and his loss will be deeply mourned.

GOVERNOR Flower of New York is to be asked to pardon "Bat" Shea, under sentence of death at Albany for the murder of Robert Ross at the polls in the spring election. He'll make the greatest mistake of his life if he does, and that's saying a good deal. Though perhaps, as he goes out of office in a few days, he may not care for that. The murder of Ross was one of the most cold-blooded ever known, committed simply because he stood against corruption at the ballot box, and should be punished as it deserves.

THE first trial of Connecticut's new gallows, whereby the condemned man hangs himself, was made Monday and was very successful. As the prisoner steps on a platform raised slightly above the floor his weight moves a lever in such a way as to start a small steam of shot running from a cylinder. When this has run for a few seconds the lessened weight of the shot cylinder releases a heavy weight which is attached to a rope, the other end of which is about the neck of the condemned. His body is jerked about six feet in the air and then drops to within two feet of the floor, his neck being instantly broken.

THIS is the last week of the Lexow committee's investigation in New York, which will be regretted by all except those who have come or are likely to come under its searchlight. The investigation began at the bottom and worked up along, until the last few days has brought down some pretty big game. One captain has confessed that he paid $15,000 to secure his appointment to the position, and others are more than suspected. Even Inspector Williams is under suspicion of having tried to bribe Parkhurst's men. It is said to be the intention of the committee to place the police commissioners and Superintendent Byrnes on the stand before adjournment.

IT was pure carelessness which caused the death of Andrew Bowen last Friday night in his prize fight with Lavigne at New Orleans. The floor of the ring wasn't padded. Bowen knew it, but agreed to go into the fight without its being done. He got a blow which knocked him senseless, and in falling struck his head heavily enough on the unpadded floor to cause concussion of the brain, from which he never recovered consciousness. His death was the result of carelessness in not padding the floor, the coronor announces, so of course the manly art is purged of any opprobrium which might attach itself thereto, and remains as legitimate and harmless as ever.

AN extraordinary case of youthful depravity has been unearthed at Lynnfield, where it has been discovered that two lads of 13 were the ones who attempted some weeks ago to wreck a train on the Boston and Maine road. Several pieces of iron were wedged between the rails in such a manner that it would have been impossible for a train to have passed over them in safety, and only the discovery of the obstructions prevented serious accident and loss of life. The boys' reason was that they had been whipped in school and wanted to get even with the teacher. The teacher who did the whipping had no rawhide of her own and borrowed from another teacher in the building, and this was the one whom the boys hoped to kill in the smashup. Evidently the home training of these lads had not been of the best.

MANY protests are being heard in various parts of the state against the law which gives the owner of cattle killed because of tuberculosis only one-half what the animals are worth for beef or milk as a compensation for his loss. Yesterday a meeting of farmers interested in the matter was held at Belchertown, and delegations were present from Palmer, Granby, Amherst, Enfield and Ludlow, the general feeling being that the loser of an animal should receive its full value. Among other statements was one that the farmer not only loses half the value of a cow and the income from her milk, but must help pay the half he does get, the argument being that if the puplic, including the professional men, are benefitted by the slaughter of diseased animals, it should help pay for them, a thought which has much of reason in it.

PALMER NEWS.

TWO YOUNG BURGLARS CAPTURED.

A Creaking Floor Board Places Two Much-Wanted Young Crooks in Limbo.

About 8 o'clock Tuesday morning, D. G. Fuller, one of the proprietors of the New Weeks House, who was in his room on the second floor, heard a board in the hall floor creak suspiciously, and as he had heard no footsteps in the hall he looked through the keyhole of the door, which happens to command a view of the entire hall, and saw a young fellow who had engaged a room the night before and afterward brought a companion in with him, with his hand on the knob of the door at one of the regular boarders' room, though whether the fellow had been in the room or not he could not tell. He said nothing, but quietly sent for Officer Northrop, and when the fellows came down to pay their bill a little later they were told that the suspicious circumstance had been seen and that it would be necessary to search them; if they would submit quietly all right, but if they resisted they would be arrested on suspicion and searched anyway. They said they had nothing to fear, and a search was made which was most thorough, but nothing taken from the house could be discovered. The officer found, however, a loaded bulldog revolver on each, a bunch of skeleton keys, several razors, a half dozen silver knives on one and the same number of silver forks on the other, and locked them up on suspicion. They gave their names as Alfred C. Brownell and Bert Fred Williams, and on being questioned by Judge Robinson of the district court told a pretty straight story, having evidently agreed on the details. Brownell, who is about 18 years old, claimed to have been staying with his uncle in West Springfield, where he has also a sister, and a brother in Springfield. He had worked in numerous places, and some weeks ago became acquainted with Williams, the two going to Boston together, where they secured odd jobs, including the clearing out of several cellars, and in breaking up some boxes they found the keys and the razors, giving their employer a dollar for the latter. The knives and forks they claimed to have found in the road near Springfield Sunday. Their story was not wholly believed, however, and they were held until the officers of the near-by cities could be notified, and it was found that the young fellows were wanted in Springfield, where for several days they had been working the boarding houses, their plan being to engage a room and get their meals elsewhere, then while the other occupants of the house where they roomed were at their meals or out, ransacking their rooms, having secured a haul in several places. Although nothing taken from the Weeks House could be found on them, the boarder at whose room door Brownell was seen has missed a ring and four studs, and no trace of them can be found. The young fellows were taken to Springfield Tuesday afternoon, and Wednesday confessed their guilt, being sent to the Massachusetts reformatory. After their sentence in Springfield they were questioned about the studs, and stated that the officer failed to find them in his search, so when they crossed the railroad bridge on their way to the lockup the one who had them gave them a throw down on the railroad track. Dilligent search has failed to recover them, though it is possible that some of the many railroad men who pass that way every day may have found them.

Christmas Week at the Churches.

Next Sunday will be Christmas Sunday at the churches, and next week will be Christmas week, with all which that means to the children, both at home and in the Sunday schools. All of the church choirs have been rehearsing special Christmas music for next Sunday, and in the evening there will be at least two concerts, while the usual entertainments have been arranged for the children of the Sunday school on Christmas Eve.

At St. Paul's Universalist church Sunday morning Rev. Mr. Moulton will preach on "The Birth of the Savior, or What Absolution is there from Sin?" The choir will render the following music:

Organ Voluntary ..... Handel
Anthem. "Brightest and Best of the Sons of the Morning" ..... Schwecker
With soprano and tenor solos.
Anthem "Faint From the Skies" ..... Schwecker
With alto and base solos.
Offertory ..... "The Watchful Shepherd"
Soprano solo.
Christmas Hymn .....
Choir and congregation.

The evening service will be in charge of the Y. P. C. U., "Christmas—Good Tidings." Monday evening there will be a Christmas tree for the Sunday school in the parlors of the church.

The regular choir at the Congregational church will be assisted next Sunday morning by Mrs. Jennie Slater Robinson of Springfield, soprano, Miss Rogers, alto, C. F. Orcutt of Monson, bass, J. B. Atwood of Palmer, tenor, making a double quartette. Rev. Mr. Jenkins will preach on "The Victory of Christ," and this special music will be rendered:

Prelude, "Antilene Pastorale" ..... Ashmall
"Behold, I Bring You Good Tidings" ..... Truett
"While Shepherds Watched" ..... Homel
"Now When Jesus Was Born" ..... Hatton
"Christmas" ..... Shelley
Postlude, "Christmas March" ..... Tenney

In the evening the cantata of "Samuel" will be presented, in which the double quartette, a large chorus from the Sunday school, the organ and piano will take part. Monday evening the children of the Sunday school will be given a supper and entertainment in the vestry of the church, to which all attendants at the school are cordially invited.

At the Baptist church Rev. J. H. MacDonald will preach in the morning, and the choir will present this musical programme:

"Hark, the Herald Angels Sing" ..... Pleyel
"The Star of Bethlehem" ..... Emerson
"My God and Father, While I Stay" ..... Marston
Alto Solo. Miss Fuller.

In the evening there will be a concert by the Sunday school, and on Monday evening there will be a Christmas tree in the church vestry.

There will be no special service at St. Thomas's Catholic church Sunday, but on Tuesday, Christmas day, there will be low mass at 8 a. m., high mass at 11, and vespers at 7.30 p. m. The musical programme will be:

MORNING.

Kyrie Eleison ..... Stearns
Gloria ..... Stearns
Credo ..... Stearns
Immaculata Conceptio ..... Alexis
Agnus Dei ..... Stearns
Adeste Fideles ..... Stearns

EVENING.

Vespers ..... Fiske
Alma ..... Fiske
Salva Maria ..... Mercadante
O Salutaris Hostia ..... Mercadante
Tantum Ergo ..... Rossi

Love and Pistols.

Clam Bondzio boards with Madam Baranosky at North Monson. So does Peter Slovickowski. The house of Baranosky is also composed of two comely daughters, Eva and Mary. With Eva Clam fell in love. Ditto Peter. But with a singleness of purpose not always found in others of her sex, the fair Eva declined to divide her affections, and lavished all the warmth of her young love—she is 20—on Clam. He it was who escorted her back to the farm where she worked on evenings when she visited the paternal residence, and as time went on Peter's failure to win her from her chosen one rankled deeper and deeper in his heart, and he breathed forth all sorts of threatenings and slaughter toward Clam. Now Clam is not the inanimate which his name might lead one to suppose, and although he has not yet completely mastered the language of his adopted country he knows something of its laws, so he brought the fair Eva with him and made complaint to the court of Peter's actions. His lady love is quite an accomplished conversationalist in the United States language, and how much Clam's move may have been influenced by her does not appear. The case came to trial this morning, with the aid of an interpreter for Peter, Clam and the head of the house of Baranosky, whose appearance indicated that her boarders did not suffer for the necessaries of life, taking it for granted of course that she partook of the same bill of fare. In the trial it came out that Clam was really the offender, and that Peter had drawn his pistol to protect himself from Clam, although as there is an R in the month bivalves are supposed to be in season. The defendant was discharged, much to the satisfaction of Baranosky the elder, who preferred him for a son-in-law instead of Clam. Peter was admonished by the court however to dessist from interference in the courtship of Clam and Eva, provided Eva still evinced a preference for that individual.

The Boy Lied.

A pathetic "tale of woe," which involved the death of a lad's parents and the inability of a grandmother to more than keep life alive, was "knocked into a cocked hat" yesterday forenoon by a little use of the telephone wires. A lad of 15 years, large for his age, appeared in town Wednesday evening and requested lodgings for the night. His clothes were thin and ragged, exposing his person in places to the biting cold, and he was extremely dirty. Fatherly hearts and fathers' hearts, and the hearts of some who were not fathers felt pity for the lad, which was only increased when he told his little "tale of woe" with a straight face. His home was in Belchertown, where his father had died two years ago and his mother about a month ago. His mother had paid the expenses of the nurse during her sickness, and his grandmother on his mother's side had paid the funeral expenses, but had little left and could do nothing for him. His paternal grandfather lived in South Boston and was well off, and if he could get to him he thought he would be all right. He had started to walk from Belchertown, but had only got as far as Palmer. His clothing was in no condition for him to continue his trip afoot, and if his story was true it would be good policy for the Belchertown overseers of the poor to pay his railroad fare to South Boston. Probation Officer Merriam, who has become a pretty shrewd judge of character since on account of his dealings with all classes of humanity, did not believe the boy's story, and a telephone to the overseers of the poor of Belchertown proved that his opinion was correct. The boy's parents are both alive and are well-to-do, and his father, who was away from home yesterday, came for him this morning. Little was said about the matter, but from a remark which was dropped it is surmised that all does not go smoothly between the lad and his parents.

Mrs. J. A. Rogers has been spending the week with friends in Boston.

A. E. Fitch is to be the janitor of the rooms of the Business and Social Club.

The warrant for the annual meeting of the Baptist church, December 31st, has been posted.

Elder Eben Francis of Sing Sing, N. Y., will preach in the People's church next Sunday.

All the schools of the town closed this noon for the Christmas vacation, and will not open again until Wednesday, Jan. 2d.

The Ladies' Tuesday Social Club will not hold a meeting next week, but will meet the week after with Mrs. E. P. Ball.

Miss Eloise Stone took part in a piano recital given in Springfield last Friday evening by the pupils of Mrs. Severn.

Joel Downey and John McBride opened a new barber shop last Saturday afternoon in the Central street room in Holden's new block.

Palmer lodge of Odd Fellows nominated a list of officers at the meeting Wednesday which will be voted on next Wednesday evening.

W. A. Barnes and W. E. Stone have been drawn as jurors for the term of the superior court which convenes in Springfield January 7th.

The Y. P. C. U. of St. Paul's Universalist church will have an acquaintance and business meeting in the parlors of the church this evening at 7.30.

Next Sunday is the fourth Sunday of Advent at St. Thomas's Catholic church, with mass at 9 a. m., Sunday school at 3 p. m. and vespers at 7.30.

The Converse House will serve a special Christmas dinner next Tuesday, and patrons of its dining rooms may expect something unusually fine on that day.

As next Monday evening will be Christmas Eve, the French class which meets at Mrs. G. H. Wilkins's Monday evenings will be postponed for one week.

Fred Farrar of Ware is to take a position with E. A. Buck & Co. He will be employed in the store for the present, but will go on the road for the firm in the spring.

The stores have kept open Tuesday and Thursday evenings of this week on account of the holiday trade, and will probably keep open the same evenings next week.

Mrs. D. S. Davis is clerking for Sager & Co. during the holidays, Miss Lillian Huntington for S. H. Hellyar & Co., and Miss A. J. Wallis for D. L. Bodfish.

J. K. Barker, who has been engaged in Caribou, B. C., this summer as superintendent for a mining company, has arrived in town to spend the winter with his sister, Mrs. Walter Winter.

Eight members of the Congregational Sunday school attended the convention of the Ware River Valley Union at Gilbertville Wednesday, Rev. F. E. Jenkins of Palmer being president of the association.

A. S. Campbell commenced Wednesday evening the opening of his house for a "believer's" meeting, the object being the gathering of believers for the study of the Bible. Meetings will be held every Wednesday evening.

The will of Anna M. Colton, late of Palmer, sister of Mrs. J. S. Loomis, has been filed for probate. The estate is left to relatives. A bequest of $200 was originally left to the Home Missionary Society, but it was revoked in a codicil.

J. K. Knox has filed a voluntary petition in insolvency, with liabilities of about $7000, and assets consisting of cash in the Palmer Savings Bank, cash in the hands of a trustee, and 26 acres of land in Palmer. The creditors are mostly Palmer people.

Matthew Kelliher, about 65, employed at the Rogers-Osgood Hat Works, was taken with a fit a little before noon yesterday, and was removed to his home on Water street, where he has since remained in an unconscious condition, and his recovery is improbable.

Porter Plympton has bought the Weeks farm again, situated near the Cooley Crossing bridge on the road to Brimfield, this making the third time Mr. Plympton has owned the property. Mr. Allen, to whom the farm was sold this summer, will return to New York.

Home from school for the holidays: Miss Alice Brown from Mt. Holyoke, J. E. Breckenridge from Yale, E. S. Gardner from Amherst, H. W. Holbrook from Tufts, Arthur Holbrook from Worcester Military school, Calvin Hastings and Harold Shaw from Worcester Academy.

In the building record on the third page one omission was made which was not discovered until after that page had been printed. The list should have included the large addition to the residence of E. Goodes on Pine street, which with alterations and other improvements cost him about $2500.

Last evening John Murray of Ware, who was up for drunkenness the 8th and was released on bail until the 10th, but failed to appear, was brought in by Officer Studley, but by reason of much pleading and many promises on the part of a sister for his future good behavior he was let off with a fine of $3, which he paid.

The last of the special trains to the other villages, which have been run under the auspices of the merchants of this place, will be run to-morrow evening, to Thorndike and the Town House crossing, to Monson and Three Rivers. The train last Saturday evening to Monson and Three Rivers was well patronized, about 100 returning on it.

The quarterly meeting of the trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank was held Monday afternoon and a 2 per cent dividend declared, payable January 1st. The bank has an excellent showing for the past six months, having gained $40,000 in deposits during that time, which is unusually good considering the times. It has also carried $1500 to the guarantee fund.

Hampden Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, elected these officers Monday evening: H. P., J. B. Shaw; K., C. F. Grosvenor; S., George Robinson; treasurer, F. A. Royce; secretary, Dr. G. H. Wilkins; trustee for three years, Andrew Pinney; for two years, F. N. Carpenter; for one year, C. E. Fish. The remainder of the list will be appointed, and all will be installed at the next meeting.

L. L. Merrick post, G. A. R., elected these officers at the adjourned meeting Monday evening: Commander, J. H. Davis; S. V. C., E. Ryther; J. V. C., Henry Hobson; surgeon, Dr. William Holbrook; quartermaster, E. G. Hastings; adjutant, C. W. Cross; chaplain, H. E. W. Clark; O. D., William O'Regan; O. G., W. S. Thornhill; delegate to the department convention, to be held in Springfield Feb. 13th and 14th, Dr. William Holbrook.

At the special town meeting Monday afternoon there were about 50 voters present, and it was voted to borrow a sum not exceeding $8000 to pay the various judgments against the town, and the expenses incurred in changing the grade crossings at Blanchardville and Tenneyville. The sum of $250 was also appropriated for half of a bridge over the Swift river at Duckville. The matter of additional money to pay for the recent repairs on the engine house was indefinitely postponed.

Names of pupils in the Palmer High School who were perfect in attendance during the last term, 16 weeks: Harold W. Brainerd, Gavin Bruce, John Crowley, Fred M. Gegenheimer, Ernest E. Hobson, William Holden, John E. Learned, William J. Morin, John F. Roche, John Sharatt, Robert E. Stebbins, Walter E. Tuthill, Marion N. Andrews, Kate L. Buck, Lizzie G. Clifford, Anna Collis, Bertha M. Cross, Bertha A. Hastings, Elizabeth Henighan, Effie G. King, Ola M. Northrop, Bertha D. Royce, Jessie Whiting.

The Central Vermont railroad, of which the New London Northern is a division, offers some unusually low rates for the holidays. Special round-trip tickets will be sold at two cents a mile each way, with a minimum of 15 cents and a maximum of $1 for distances under 34 miles. For distances of 34 miles or over the round-trip rate will be fare one way, or 1½ cents a mile each way. The Christmas tickets will be good going Dec. 24th and 25th, and the New Year's tickets December 31st and January 1st, all being good for the return trip until January 5th, inclusive.

There was a wedding at Silver Street on Thursday evening of last week, and although the contracting parties neglected to ask permission of their friends, no one is inclined to censure the happy couple, and "all is forgiven." The bride was Mrs. Hardin Hunt, who was experienced 82 New England summers and the same number of winters, and the groom was Alexander Maxwell, whose bonnie bride goes him only one better in point of experience with Father Time's visits. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride, and later a reception was given to friends of the newly-married couple.

These civil cases were entered in the district court last Saturday: J. W. Lambert of Monson against E. W. French of Palmer; James O. Hamilton against J. K. Knox; E. Goodes against James H. Clark; W. J. Teagan of West Warren against C. R. Shaw of Palmer; C. O. Moore against Emma F. Whitney. In the criminal court Monday Albert Dean of Monson was probated until the 29th for drunkenness; Albert Gwuse of Thorndike paid $10 for assaulting Cornelius Healey. On Wednesday Leon H. Smith of Holyoke and William Lewis of Monson paid $10 each for druukenness. Yesterday morning John Harold of Bridgeton, Me., paid $3 for drunkenness.

State Primary School Notes.

Miss Mabel G. Moore is taking a two-weeks' vacation.

Rev. E. B. Blanchard of Thorndike spoke to the children last Sunday.

All the boys are looking eagerly forward to Christmas, when "Santa Claus" will visit the school again.

Four of the largest boys ran away last Saturday, but after a little trouble one was captured in Holyoke, two near Hartford, and the fourth returned himself. They all are now wearing a suit of girls' clothes in memory of the occasion.

PALMER CENTER.

Mrs. Parker of Wales is visiting her sister, Mrs. Brown.

Miss Estella Trumble spent Sunday in Chicopee, the guest of her mother.

A gentleman from Springfield is starting a singing class, to meet at Mr. Newman's house.

D. J. Mahoney has disposed of his restaurant in Springfield and returned home, where he will give his time to photography for the present.

A correspondent writes that "Long in darkness we have waited for the coming of light; electric, we mean. There has not been any light since the first of December. It seems as if the person who has charge of the lights is very slack, to say the least. Turn on the light! And when you are about it, connect the schoolhouse."

BONDSVILLE.

Miss Ora Parent is home from Smith College for the holidays.

Miss Barney will spend her vacation at her home in Hadley.

Leon Russell is home from college in Maine for the holidays.

Mrs. Margaret Russell, mother of Thomas and Richard Russell, is quite feeble.

Miss Thayer of the first primary will visit her home in Hingham during vacation.

Miss Edith Hobson is home from the training school in Springfield for a vacation.

Mrs. Henry Canterbury, who has been quite sick with pneumonia, is slowly on the gain.

Rev. F. J. Hale attended the Sabbath school convention held at Gilbertville Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. King of Randolph are spending a few weeks with their daughter, Mrs. F. J. Hale.

Miss Cleveland, principal of the grammar school, will spend her vacation in Boston and vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Russell will spend Christmas with their daughter, Mrs. J. B. Paige, at Amherst.

The young folks of the Sabbath school of the M. E. church are rehearsing for a Christmas concert for Christmas Eve.

Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Parent attended the fifteenth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Charles O. Walker at West Warren Tuesday.

A group of the Epworth League will hold a convention in the M. E. church here Dec. 28. All are invited to attend. There will be interesting speakers day and evening. Lunch will be served at noon and 5 o'clock p. m.

THORNDIKE.

Jeremiah Crowley and Michael McKelligett are home for the holidays.

Henry Hobbs has recovered from his illness, so as to be about again.

Those who go to Palmer to-morrow night can have another free ride home.

The Thorndike Co. is to put in two new water wheels next week at the No. 2 mill.

Miss Agnes Bramdey of Chicopee Falls is visiting with friends here until after Christmas.

The cap for the new brick chimney at the No. 2 mill arrived this week, and has been put in place.

Next Tuesday is Christmas, and the post office hours will be from 6.45 a. m. to 12 m., and from 3 to 7.45 p. m.

The children in the schools are preparing for Christmas, and will deliver a programme of singing, speaking, etc.

Next Tuesday evening being Christmas night, the regular meeting of the Foresters has been changed to Wednesday.

A new window is being placed in the front of Union Hall block, which will give more light to the lower rooms in the basement.

Nathan W. Bond is brightening the appearance of his house with a new coat of paint. A. A. Houghton is doing the work.

There is a movement on foot to try and secure a night school for the French people in town, instead of walking to Three Rivers.

Joseph Brothers, who was kicked by a horse one day last week, is getting along well, and it is thought nothing serious will result from the accident.

Mrs. Belaire, who had the misfortune to lose her pocket book one day last week with quite a sum of money, has found the same, with the contents undisturbed.

The 40-hours-devotion which closed this week at St. Mary's church was attended by several hundred people. Several out of town clergymen assisted at the service.

The merchants are reporting a good Christmas trade, and if one can judge from the large line which our merchants are displaying in their store windows, there is not much need of going outside for Christmas goods.

Miller & Topliffe of Palmer have started an oil supply route, and will deliver oil or gasoline to anyone at their home in quantities to suit. They deliver the oil in 3 and 5 gallon automatic cans, giving the use of the can free as long as the oil is bought of them.

The King's Daughters gave a supper and entertainment on Tuesday evening, which was well attended and a success in every particular. Miss Emma Gibbs of Orange, Mass., a pupil at the Emerson School of Oratory at Boston, gave several readings which were well received. Miss Gibbs is a promising young artist, and bids fair to soon reach the top of the ladder of fame.

THREE RIVERS.

Don't forget! M. L. Johnson & Co. have a choice line of Xmas goods at lowest prices. Call and see for yourselves.

Fred Hillman has been quite ill this week.

Mrs. Hanley is recovering from a severe illness.

Miss Mary Martin visited friends in Chicopee Tuesday.

Miss Blanche Upham is suffering from a severe cold this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Good of Waltham are to be Mr. and Mrs. Needham's guests Christmas day.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Brown and daughter Lillian spent Sunday in Springfield, with relatives.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the home of Mrs. James Trickett next Friday at 2.30 in the afternoon.

Herbert Barker's friends will be glad to hear that he is slowly recovering from his serious illness.

Miss Etta Ruggles of Northfield Seminary is expected to spend the Christmas holidays at her home in this place.

Mrs. Philip Holland has returned to Brooklyn, N. Y., after an extended visit with Miss Hanley of this place.

Harry Newell expects Miss Grace Cushman of Agawam to spend a part of next week at his home in this place.

Mrs. S. H. Barnes is slowly recovering from a severe illness, and her sister, Mrs. Nutting of Springfield, is taking care of her.

John Connors, an old resident of this place, had an apoplectic shock Tuesday, but has recovered sufficiently to be out of doors again.

A Bible reading on the Lord's second coming will be given in the vestry of the Baptist church on Christmas day, at 3 p. m. by John J. Scruby of London, England.

J. B. Sikes's cows have been examined by the state officers this week, and several of them proved to be affected with tuberculosis; two of them will have to be killed.

Preparations are being made for the concert in the Union church next Sunday evening, and it is expected that a chorus of 23 voices, assisted by several musical instruments, will render some fine music.

Mr. and Mrs. Conroy and family of Woburn spent a few days at the Riverside Hotel this week, while on their way to Ludlow, where Mr. Conroy is to take charge of the Springfield Water Company's gate house.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the Christmas tree party, which is to be held at the vestry of the Union church next Tuesday evening. Everybody interested in the arrangements is working hard, in order that an enjoyable evening may be spent by those who will be present.

The Union church Sunday school held a business meeting Tuesday evening, at which the following officers were reelected: Superintendent, F. A. Upham; assistant superintendent, James Trickett; secretary and treasurer, P. C. Story; assistant secretary, Willie E. Squires; librarian, F. L. Forte; assistant librarian, F. H. White.

One of the most pleasing features of the entertainment given last week under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E., and reported in the JOURNAL, was omitted. Mr. Thomas McWhorter gave an address on "Temperance," presenting many facts worthy of careful consideration, and illustrating his points by several good stories. The address was especially well received by the members of the W. C. T. U., who appreciate all the help that can be secured along that line.

Everybody on East Main street is wondering where the chicken thief is concealing himself. Several coops have been plundered within a short time, but the two last thefts were the most daring of any. Early last Friday night Mrs. Barchand was deprived of ten full grown chickens, and Nicholas Coleman lost twelve fine fowls Monday night. In Mrs. Burchand's case Officer Manning searched two suspected places, but found no evidence of the stolen property, which fact leads some to think that the rogue has accomplices who live out of town and dispose of the booty.

TOWN OF PALMER.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—BOARD OF CATTLE COMMISSIONERS,
52 VILLAGE ST., BOSTON, Nov. 5, 1894.

To the Boards of Health and all Owners of Neat Cattle in the Counties of Nantucket, Dukes and Barnstable.

First. All the states and territories of the United States, the District of Columbia, Canada, Great Britain, and all other localities without the limits of this Commonwealth, are hereby declared infected districts.

Second. It is hereby ordered that all neat cattle brought within the limits of this Commonwealth from any of said localities on or after November 20, 1894, are hereby made subject to quarantine until they have been inspected and released by this Board or one of its members thereto duly authorized.

Third. Except as hereinafter provided no such neat cattle shall be unloaded, except in case of accident, for any purpose whatsoever within this Commonwealth, at any place or places other than at such quarantine stations as are herein designated, or which may hereafter from time to time be designated, by this Board, unless upon written permit signed by the Board of Cattle Commissioners or one of its members.

Fourth. The Union stock yards at Watertown: the Boston & Albany stock yards at Brighton and the premises of the New England Dressed Beef and Wool Company in Somerville, are hereby designated as quarantine stations.

Fifth. All neat cattle entered at any quarantine station, except as hereinafter provided, are hereby declared quarantined, and shall so remain, at the expense of the owner or consignee, for a period of not less than twenty-four hours, or until they are released by the Board of Cattle Commissioners, or one of its members, during which time they shall be subjected to the tuberculin test. This test shall be made only by the Board of Cattle Commissioners or one of its members, or a duly authorized agent thereof, and without expense to the owner.

Sixth. Every such animal which, in the opinion of this Board or any of its members, is affected with tuberculosis, will be condemned and slaughtered as provided in Sections 45 and 53 of said Chapter 491 of the Acts of 1894.

Seventh. All animals which upon such inspection shall be adjudged free from tuberculosis and other contagious disease shall be branded with the seal of the commission. This brand will be placed upon the right hip.

Eighth. All neat cattle passing through this Commonwealth, consigned from points without its limits, for exportation from this State will not be examined as herein provided, but such animals shall remain in quarantine until transported without the limits of the Commonwealth.

Ninth. All neat cattle brought within this Commonwealth consigned directly to the Brighton Abattoir for slaughter shall be confined by themselves for identification, and shall not be released except after an examination as above provided, or for immediate slaughter.

Tenth. It shall be the duty of every person or persons, corporation or corporations, desiring to drive or cause to be driven any neat cattle into this State from any point without its limits, to notify in writing the Board of Cattle Commissioners of his, their or its intention so to do, which notice shall state the town or city within this Commonwealth through which it is the intention to enter, and the time when the drove will arrive within such city or town. After crossing the border all such cattle are hereby declared quarantined upon premises which shall be defined in the permit, within the limits of such city or town, at the expense of the owner or consignee, and shall there remain until they have been examined and branded, or destroyed, as hereinbefore provided. No neat cattle shall be driven within this State from any point without its limits, except as herein provided.

Eleventh. All neat cattle branded as herein provided shall be free to all markets in this Commonwealth.

Twelfth. No person shall sell or offer for sale, or have in his possession, except under quarantine, within the stock yards in Brighton, Watertown or Somerville, any neat cattle which are not branded as provided for in section 7, except as provided in sections 8 and 9 of this order.

Thirteenth. It is further ordered that a copy of this order shall be sent to each city and town throughout the Commonwealth, and that every town shall cause a copy thereof to be posted in two or more conspicuous places within its limits, and shall cause a copy of the same to be published once a week for three successive weeks in a newspaper published therein, or if no newspaper be published within the limits of said town, then in a newspaper published within said county; and that each such city shall cause a copy of the same to be published twice a week for three successive weeks in a newspaper published within its limits.

Fourteenth. This order shall take effect upon November 20, 1894.

Souvenir silver and china are the specialties at Gage's, and come in for their share of attention. M. & M. Gavin display in one window their regular line of millinery, and in the other fancy articles and pretty materials for decorative art. Babbitt's windows, show mufflers, umbrellas, etc., arranged in an attractive manner. Fuller, the shoeist, has attractive windows; against a background of orange and white drapery in one window, and violet and white in the other, there are shown slippers and skates in great variety, and to each purchaser of any of these articles he gives a half pound box of fine candy. One of Keeney's show windows is filled with toys and games of all kinds, and receives much attention from the children; the other window is filled with fancy goods, including a number of pieces of pretty china. Probably the windows of the Boston Store represent more labor on the part of the proprietor than any of the others; one window holds a profusion of handkerchiefs and fancy articles, and the other represents an old-fashioned kitchen with the fireplace, a spinning wheel on one side and dolls representing children watching for Santa Claus on the other. Flynt's store windows have in them a large assortment of articles, ranging from handsome banquet lamps, prettily dressed dolls, fancy and toilet articles in one window, to toys, china, canned goods, etc., in the other. Grout and Bills show some fine clocks and silver. Mrs. Chapin and Charles Merrick have toys and games for young and old. Pendergast's fruit and nuts are arranged to present an attractive appearance, and all seem pleased with the trade they are having.

Death of an Aged Resident.

Another of Monson's aged residents has passed away. Mrs. Sophia F. Jones, 88, whose death occurred early Tuesday morning, was a native of the town, and her entire life was spent here. She was a daughter of the late Benjamin Fuller, and was born September 2, 1806. She married in 1828 Charles B. Jones, who died in 1878. Mrs. Harriet S. Nelson, her only child, survives her. Mrs. Jones has been feeble for a long time, having had a shock, but about three weeks ago she took cold and congestion of the kidneys developed, and to this her death was due. The funeral, at which Rev. F. S. Hatch officiated, took place yesterday.

MONSON, - - MASS.

Father Lee visited friends in town this week.

Mrs. Arthur D. Norcross is visiting in Rochdale.

Dennis Murphy is clerking in Gage's store during holidays.

The pupils in Miss Cantwell's school had a Christmas tree to-day.

Rev. and Mrs. A. L. Squier are spending two weeks at Bondsville.

The Windsor Club give a whist party to their lady friends this evening.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Mason on Cushman street have the measles.

Mrs. William A. Needham entertained a company at whist Monday evening.

"Peck's Bad Boy" gave a fair show to a fair sized audience Monday evening.

Harry T. Chapin is home for the holidays from the Boston School of Pharamacy.

The telephone exchange has begun operations, and will have many subscribers.

Robert Parke and Charles Ricketts are home for the holidays from Tufts College.

Arthur D. King is home for the holidays from the Worcester School of Technology.

The Young People's meeting at the Universalist church will be omitted Sunday.

Monday being Christmas eve, the Normal class for Bible study will be deferred one week.

Mrs. F. Wesley Grout and son have been spending the week with Mrs. Frank Breard in Orange.

Frank E. Thompson was married last Saturday evening to Mrs. Nellie Hamilton of Springfield.

Mrs. Green, mother of Mrs. Lewis Rogers, and probably Monson's oldest resident, is ill with bronchitis.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin B. Merchant attended the wedding of their niece at Waterbury, Ct., Wednesday.

R. S. Pritchard of Greenfield was the guest of his sister, Mrs. Lyman Miller, Tuesday and Wednesday.

The friends of Miss Maria Shields will be glad to know that she is able to be out after a three-weeks' illness.

Miss Hermoyne Whiting, employed in the family of R. Clifford Millar, fell down stairs and sprained her ankle.

Archibald Merchant of the Worcester School of Technology is spending the holidays at his home here.

The Dorcas sale and tenth anniversary celebration was a success socially and financially. About $60 were taken in.

Miss J. V. Cantwell, teacher of music in Monson schools, is studying with Miss L. O. Stearns, supervisor of music in Springfield.

Miss Florence Converse, teacher of the State street school, has been ill a part of the week, and Rufus Stebbins has substituted for her.

Edward P. Donovan and William B. Meacham are to serve as jurors at the January term of the superior court in Springfield.

Clarence Wing of Palmer has presented the menagerie at Flynt Park with three fine possums, captured by him on his late trip to Georgia.

A horse owned by Warren L. Shaw was driven into the wa er pipe ditch on Main street Sunday evening by Albert Dean. The man was uninjured.

N. W. Rand read a paper on "Diabetes" at a meeting of the Homeopathic Medical Association of Western Massachusetts in Springfield Wednesday.

Rev. A. B. Bassett of Ware, one of the ablest ministers in this vicinity, preached a most interesting sermon in the Congregational church last Sunday.

Herbert M. Shaw and Andrew Coleman are home from the Philadelphia Dental College, for the holidays. Mr. Shaw is assisting in the post office during his vacation.

One of the pupils at No. 8 was recently sent to another room to borrow an arithmetic. Upon her knock at the door being answered, she timidly said: "My teacher wants to take your a-rheumatism."

Prof. Croy's pupils are soon to present a drama, entitled, "A Hundred Years Ago." It will be given two evenings, and will be followed one night by the farce, "A Box of Monkeys," and the other night by "Seeing the Elephant."

A County Board of King's Daughters for Hampden county has recently been formed in Springfield, and Mrs. Susan E. Thrall has been chosen one of the managers and has accepted the office. The dates of the meetings are the second Wednesday in May and October.

A very pleasant social was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Tupper on Moulton Hill last Saturday evening. There being about fifty friends present. Dancing was indulged in, music being furnished by Bond & Squier's orchestra. Will Shaw of Wales was prompter.

Did you see those two men, one slightly in advance of the other, limping through the street a week ago Sunday morning, and did you wonder what had happened to them? Well, the fact was, each had a gun carefully stowed away in his trousers' leg which prevented him from bending his knee as he walked.

A class in physical culture and elocution has been formed with twenty members, Miss Margaret J. MacNamara of the Boston School of Oratory, teacher. The Delsarte system is taught. The class meets Thursday evenings at 7.30 in the Monson House parlors, and anyone wishing to join an afternoon class is invited to meet Miss MacNamara at that time and place next Thursday.

The young people of the Universalist society have formed an organization for the purpose of assisting the Ladies' Circle in its entertainments. A name will be decided upon at the next meeting. These are the officers: President, George H. Seymour; vice president, William L. Rickets; secretary, Alice Parke; treasurer, Miss Myrtis Perrin. The standing committee is composed of the officers and Adelbert C. Page.

Friends of Mrs. Eleanor G. Longworth will be pained to learn of her death, which occurred December 1st at her home in Hull, England. Mr. and Mrs. Longworth left town about eight years ago, after a residence here of nearly two years, during which time they made many friends. Mr. Longworth died in 1887. Mrs. Longworth visited here a year ago last March. Her death was due to lack of strength to rally from an operation which she recently underwent.

Pipe laying for the water works is nearly finished, only a short section on Granite street remaining to be done. Pearl, Bank, and part of Main street, and Harrison avenue have been completed this week. Work at the well is progressing rapidly, and a better bottom is found at the new depth than at the old one. A number of the Italians have left, and several of the overseers will leave soon. Contractor Eglee and Engineer Fuller have been here this week.

The fourth Demorest silver medal contest takes place this evening with the following programme: Music; prayer; music; reading, Prof. F. C. Croy; contest selections, "The Saloon Arraigned," "Brave for the Right," "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union," music, "A Contest for Truth," "Prohibition and Liberty," "License a Failure;" reading by Prof. Croy; music; decision of judges. Contestants, F. L. Moores, Miss Mabel L. Watson, E. J. Duncan, Miss Rebecca Kennedy, Miss Annie L. Rathburn.

On Tuesday evening Prof. Treadway gave the last dancing lesson, open to visitors, of the series, and too much cannot be said in praise of him and his pupils. He is a faithful, earnest, up-to-date teacher, and the large class, which numbered but six who could dance round dances at the beginning of the school, are all dancing well. Among the prettiest of the new dances given Tuesday evening was the Harvard gavotte, Carlyle, and polka mazurka. The concert and ball Jan. 8th closes the series. Brigham's Orchestra of Marlboro, ten pieces, has been engaged, and it will be the only chance Monson people will have to hear their favorite orchestra. There will be, on the programme, dances for everybody, about eleven fancy dances to thirteen or fourteen square. It is quite probable that another series of lessons will be given after the ball.

WEST WARREN.

Miss Minnie Brooks of Webster is visiting her cousin, Mrs. L. J. Rodman.

Miss Nellie Tracy died Saturday of typhoid fever, having been sick three weeks.

The choir of the M. E. church is rehearsing some fine music for Christmas Sunday.

The Epworth League is putting in a new Estey organ from the Springfield agency.

Misses Alice and Clara Gilbert are expected home from the French American College at Springfield for the Christmas holidays.

Several of our people have attended the union revival services at Warren during the week. They report over a hundred converts as the result of the work conducted by Rev. J. H. Weber of Preston, Ohio.

BRIMFIELD.

The High School, together with the town's schools, closed to-day for a week's vacation.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the First church held a social at W. L. Daniels's last Friday evening.

The digging of the reservoir and ditch for the water supply of the fountain has commenced in earnest. The good supply of tramps has facilitated the work, but fears are entertained lest the supply of work may diminish the supply of tramps.

The Brimfield Social Club gave the second of a series of hops at the Town Hall last Friday evening. About forty couples were present. Ryan of Springfield prompted, and a Warren orchestra furnished music. Lunch was served. Another pleasant time is promised in four weeks.

WARREN.

Miss Alice Buck is home from Boston.

Miss Alice Demond is spending the holidays at home.

Rev. Harris Hale and wife will spend Christmas in Salem.

Miss Sylvester, who is teaching in Indian Orchard, is home for a few days.

Miss Blodgett, from her school in Springfield, is spending her vacation at home.

Mr. Cleaves has taken a position at the milk car, and will move his family to town.

C. E. Hubbard has opened a store for the sale of groceries and fruits in the old hotel block.

The Ladies' Home Missionary society met with Mrs. Joseph Hitchcock Wednesday afternoon.

The schools closed to-day for a vacation of a week. Miss Florence Holman had to resign before the close of her school on account of ill health, and a substitute was obtained for a week.

The Universalist society will have their Christmas tree and supper for the children Monday evening in Brigham's Hall. The Congregational society hold theirs in the parlors of the church Saturday evening for the Sabbath school children.

WALES.

Look out for weddings soon, as widowers court fast.

Eight families have moved away in the last two weeks.

H. W. Needham has been drawn as one of the grand jurors.

O. C. Switzer has sold a large lot of apples to Warren parties for $1.50 per barrel.

Both churches are to have Christmas concerts next Sunday evening, and trees Tuesday evening.

Business is lively at the blacksmith shop of James A. George since the burning of W. I. Whitlock's shop.

A consultation of doctors were held Monday in the case of W. A. Lyon, who is in a very critical condition.

The venerable R. L. Boyington, who has been confined to his bed for several weeks, is now on the mend and is able to get about his room.

Auctioneer McFarland sold the personal property Thursday of Charles Back of Holland, who has bought a farm in Florence, where he will move soon.

It looks as if all Wales were going to Warren. Three families have gone and more are to follow. Frank Hill and Fred Patnode with their families moved Wednesday.

BELCHERTOWN.

Mrs. Frank Bridguan is failing rapidly.

H. W. Griffin has lately taken charge of the store on Federal street.

Principal C. L. Randall and wife of Barre are at the homes of their parents, L. Randall and E. Smith.

Landlord Dillon is in New York disposing of his fifteen hundred barrels of apples, which he bought in the fall.

Principal C. L. Randall and wife of the Barre high school are spending a three weeks' vacation at their home in town.

The afternoon services at the Congregational church were omitted last Sunday, owing to the sudden illness of the pastor.

A meeting will be held at the town hall to-morrow afternoon, for boys between the ages of 8 and 16 years, for the purpose of forming a boy's brigade.

Vernon lodge of Masons elected the following officers: W. M., W. H. Bridgman; S. W., D. C. Nutting; J. W., H. A. Payne; treasurer, W. E. Bridgman; secretary, J. W. Jackson.

The house on the Daniel Packard place, owned by Henry Ann, was burned Monday night. Mr. Ann was away at the time of the fire, and his wife and two children were alone in the house. An effort was made by some of the neighbors to put out the fire, but without success. The fire was thought to have started from a defective chimney. The building and contents were partly insured.

Jerome L. Draper died of bronchitis last week, at the age of 48 years. He leaves a wife and one son, George H. Draper. Mr. Draper was a soldier in the late war, being a member of the 31st regiment. He was also a member of E. J. Griggs post. The funeral was held last Saturday afternoon, Rev. V. C. Harrington officiating. A delegation from E. J. Griggs post attended, and nearly all of the Granby post, besides other veterans.

The Y. P. S. C. E. held a business meeting in the chapel Tuesday night for the election of officers. After the meeting a social was held. These officers were chosen for the ensuing term: President, Julia B. Smith; vice president, W. R. Blackmer; treasurer, F. L. Stebbins; corresponding secretary, Luella Hawks; recording secretary, Alice Smith; chairman of committees—Missionary, Mabel E. Kendall; Sunday-school, W. R. Blackmer; lookout, J. A. Lynn; prayer meeting, Grace Towne; temperance, F. L. Stebbins; welcome and visiting, Luella Hawks; music, Mrs. G. L. King; social, Mrs. H. R. Gould; superintendent of Junior Endeavor, Edith Towne; assistants, Luella Hawks and Susie Haskell.

WARE.

The last of the Methodist lecture course was the lecture by Rev. N. T. Whittaker, D. D., of Lynn, on Wednesday evening. The course has been successful, netting quite a neat sum to the society.

Charles E. Lynch of Springfield has startled the community by inaugurating a grand clearance sale in December. Lynch is surely a shrewd merchant. Too much stock! Too much stock! What's the remedy? Simple enough. When every merchant is selling goods freely at a handsome profit Lynch puts the knife to his elegant goods. $25 suits drop to $15. $25 ulsters for $15. Boys' $5 suits to $2.25, and so on all along the line. "Lynch is crazy," say some. "Lynch is foolish," think others. There's method though in Lynch's madness. Lynch gives the people bargains when they most need them. Lynch loses, the public gains. Moral—go to Lynch of Springfield for holiday clothing.

Black Rings

under the eyes and a sallow complexion show biliousness. This is one of the most disagreeable of stomach disorders and if allowed to have its own way will result in great harm. Cure biliousness by using Ripans Tabules. One tabule gives relief.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Wouldn't a salary come handy? See advertisement of a "Chance to earn money," on sixth page, if you want a position.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria

For that tired feeling resulting from a sluggish system, drop coffee and use Ayer's Hygienic. Grocers sell it.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. Dangerous to have around—all the imitations of Pearline. Whenever one of these is bought, the purchaser is sold. Pearline hurts nothing. It saves work and time in washing and in house cleaning; it does away with scouring and scrubbing, and saves money by saving wear. You may do without much, in housework, but you can't do without Pearline.

Beware of imitations. 254 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

Interlined "Celluloid" Collars and Cuffs turn water like a duck's back and show neither spot nor soil. They are not effected by perspiration, and always look as if right out of the box. When they get soiled you can clean them in a minute by simply wiping off with a wet cloth. These are but a few of the advantages of wearing the "Celluloid" Collars and Cuffs. There are many others that you will readily discover the first time you wear one.

They are the only waterproof interlined collars and cuffs made. Be sure to get the genuine with this trade mark

A BARE SAVING.—Van Cortland Park—I have just bought my wife a diamond ring for $250.

Murray Hill—I had no idea you were so extravagant.

"Extravagant! My dear fellow, I will save lots of money. That's why I bought it."

"I don't catch on."

"Why, man alive! I'll save $500 on kid gloves!"—Texas Siftings.

"Don't be hard on the boy, James," said the young profligate's mother. "I know he's been wild, but he gives promise now of doing better in the future." "Yes," groaned the father, "and I'm paying 6 per cent interest on most of his promises."—Chicago Record.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. Va. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure.

Any one who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope, and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cent bottles.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

Jes' 'fore Christmas.

Father calls me William, sister calls me Will,
Mother calls me Willie—but the fellers call me Bill!
Mighty glad I ain't a girl—ruther be a boy
Without them sashes, curls an' things that's worn by Fauntleroy!
Love to chawnk green apples an' go swimmin' in the lake—
Hate to take the castor ile they give f'r belly ache!
Most all the time the hull year roun' there ain't no flies on me,
But jes' 'fore Christmas I'm as good as I kin be!

Got a yaller dog named Sport—sick 'im on the cat!
Fust thing she knows she doesn't know where she is at!
Got a clipper-sled, an' when us boys goes out to slide
'Long comes the grocery cart an' we all hook a ride!
But, sometimes, when the grocery man is worrited and cross,
He reaches at me with his whip, and larrups up his horse;
An' then I laff and holler: "Oh, you never tecked me!"
But jes' 'fore Christmas I'm as good as I kin be!

Gran'ma says she hopes that when I get to be a man
I'll be a missionerer like her oldes' brother Dan,
As was et up by the cannib'ls that lives in Ceylon's isle,
Where every prospeck pleases an' only man is vile!
But gran'ma she had never been to see a Wild West show,
Or read the life uv Daniel Boone, or else I guess she'd know
That Buffalo Bill an' cowboys is good enough f'r me—
Excep' jest 'fore Christmas, when I'm good as I kin be!

Then ol' Sport he hangs around, so sollum like an's ill—
His eyes they seem a-sayin: "What's er matter, little Bill?"
The cat she sneaks down off her perch, a-wonderin' what's become
Uv them two enemies uv hern that use ter make things hum!
But I am so perlite and stick so earnestlike to biz,
That mother says to father: "How improved our Willie is!"
But father, havin' been a boy hisself, suspicions me,
When jes' 'fore Christmas I'm as good as I kin be!

For Christmas, with its lots an' lots uv candies, cakes an' toys,
Wuz made, they say, f'r proper kids, and not f'r naughty boys!
So wash yer face, and bresh yer hair, an mind yer p's an' q's,
An' don't bust out yer pantaloons, an' don't wear out yer shoes;
Say yessum to the ladies, an' yessir to the men,
An' when they's company don't pass yer plate f'r pie again;
But thinkin' uv the things you'd like to see upon that tree,
Jes' 'fore Christmas be as good as you kin be!—

Fashion Insists Upon Coffee Being Served Twice a Day at Least.

The latest in the world of fashion is that coffee must be served twice a day at the very least. It must appear at the first meal of the day, and must never be missing after dinner. In this way fashion agrees with the hard-working laborer, who finds he can do his work with two instalments of coffee during the day.

COST OF EUROPEAN TRAVEL BY RAIL.

The European center of travel, as of art and fashion, is Paris, and from the French capital diverge the most important lines. From London to Paris, the finest and fastest train is the famous Club train, leaving Victoria station at 3 p. m and arriving at the Gard du Nord, Paris, at 10.47 p. m., traversing a total distance of 287 miles. This train is composed exclusively of first-class carriages, and the passenger is required to pay, in addition to the regular first-class fare of 72.30f, an excess fare of 18.75f, a total of 91.05f, or $18.20—a much higher rate than is charged upon any American train.

One of the principal fast express trains from Paris is the Sud express, which connects with the Club train from London, and makes the run of 902 miles to Madrid in 28 hours, and the 1316 miles to Lisbon in 44 hours, the usual time by other trains being 35 and 59 hours respectively. The railroad fare from Paris to Madrid is 164.65f, first-class. The sleeping-car fare is 82.50f to Madrid and 107.30f to Lisbon.

To compare with American trunk lines, the distance from New York to Chicago by the New York Central line is 976 miles, 74 more than from Paris to Madrid. The fare is $20, $12.43 less than the European first-class, and $3.33 less than the second-class for the shorter distance. The excess fare on the North Shore limited is but $3, and the sleeping-car fare but $5, or less than one-third of that from Paris to Madrid. The Mediterranean express is another fast train, which runs twice a week during the winter seasons, between Paris and the Riviera, via Marseilles, Nice, and Monte Carlo—Vintimille being the terminus of the sleeping-car line. It is 535 miles from Paris to Marseilles and 716 miles to Vintimille, the sleeping-car fare to these points being, respectively, 45 francs and 60.50 francs. The distance from Paris to Marseilles is just about that from Chicago to Buffalo, and this train de luxe makes about the same time as the fast trains of the Michigan Central and Lake Shore, but the railroad fare is much higher in France, and the sleeping-car fare is just three times as much.

The sleeping-car fare from Chicago to Utica—738 miles—is $4, less than one-third that from Paris to Vintimille. So on, examples might be multiplied to demonstrate that in Europe, where the cost of living is in almost all things much cheaper than in this country, travelers are obliged to pay from 20 to 60 per cent higher for accommodations on the railroads.

For closer comparison, the charges of the sleeping-car lines may be tabulated as follows:—

	Miles.	Sleeping-car Fare.
Paris to Marseilles,	535	$9.00
Chicago to Buffalo,	536	3.00
Paris to Vintimille,	716	12.00
Chicago to Utica,	738	4.00
Paris to Vienna,	871	7.00
Paris to Rome,	901	15.50
Paris to Madrid,	992	14.46
New York to Chicago,	926	5.00
Boston to Chicago,	1,045	5.50
Paris to Lisbon,	1,316	21.46
Paris to Brindisi,	1,361	17.00
St. Louis to Portland,	1,352	7.00

The comparisons, it will be observed, are very much in favor of the American railroads.—New York Times.

A NOVEL PASSWORD.

During a campaign, the pickets of a certain regiment found considerable difficulty in preventing the men absenting themselves without leave.

One particularly sultry evening, while the sentinels were pacing their beasts with their tongues fairly hanging out of their mouths with heat, one of the guards observed a private approaching, who was staggering along under the load of an enormous watermelon under each arm.

"Who goes there?"

"Friend," responded the truant.

"Advance, friend, and give the countersign."

"Hain't got no countersign," amiably replied the private; "but I'll give yer-er-a-warmelin."

Pretty soon the officer of the day came around, and said to the sentinel, who was absorbed in munching a huge piece of watermelon stuck on the end of his bayonet:

"Did Perkins pass you just now?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did he give you the countersign?" inquired the lieutenant, taking a bite as the man presented arms.

"Well, no," said the sentinel, confidently. "The password was 'Cholera,' but he said 'Watermelon,' so I passed him, and put the other half in your tent."

"Did, eh?" mused the officer. "Hum! Watermelon, eh? Well, I suppose that was near enough."—Ex.

HAMLET DIDN'T STAY.

A sad looking gentleman, like a sort of very much retired Hamlet, with a painful expression of face, entered the office room of a country hotel the other day, holding in his hand a small canister.

"Look at this, gentlemen," he said sorrowfully. "I went into a gunsmith's shop to get something to eat, and the man handed me this can of powder. He said I could go and blow myself up. Professional actors were not wanted now—there's so many fine amateurs. I pledge you my word," said the tramp, holding the can within an inch of the grate in which a fire was burning, "I'm so miserable I've a mind to follow his advice."

"Dare you do to it," said a bystander, winking at the crowd.

The wretched party gave a sad, theatrical, lingering look and tossed the can into the fire.

The company yelled and rushed out of the place in all directions.

When they filed in about 10 minutes later, the empty can was sitting harmlessly on the fire. Not so the glasses. Four were empty and several luncheon plates also.

Hamlet was gone.—Lippincott's.

AN OBLIGING HEAD WAITER.

He had been particularly fortunate in his business and felt in the mood for tipping the waiters at his hotel rather liberally. As a result every time he entered the dining-room half a dozen willing waiters rushed for him like football players in a big match. This came to be annoying after a while, so he called the head waiter to him and said:

"Now, see here, I don't want all the waiters in the place bothering me every time I get something to eat. Settle on one man and let him attend to my wants."

Then his eye roamed around at the assembled attendants and without any particular reason he said:

"There, let that fellow with a wart on his nose look out for me."

So it was settled, and for some time the designated waiter was on hand. One day, however, the man with money found another attendant at his table. He motioned to the head waiter.

"Didn't I tell you to let me have the waiter with a wart on his nose?" he demanded.

"Yes, sah; but this one will be better, sah. He has two warts on his nose."—Philadelphia Press.

A FAMILIAR CRY.

When the day is gone, and the stars come out,
and the barber's shop is full,
When low and clear you frequently hear the faint "Does the razor pull?"
There comes with a rush the man who is late,
no matter how late it be,
Who opens the door to look in and roar, "How many ahead of me?"

He sees a patient in every chair, and all
around the room
Wherever a man can sit or stand, in silence
like the tomb,
The bristly faces and tousled heads are counting the "nexts" that be.
But this tardy elf only thinks of himself—"How many ahead of me?"

From shop to shop, from door to door he makes his anxious round.
He never will rest from his eager quest while an open place is found.
Bearded and restless the same old crowd in every room he'll see,
But he rings the chime on the same old rhyme
—"How many ahead of me?"

WEATHER FORECAST BY THE TEETH.

Dentists Can Prognosticate by Keeping Count of Their Customers.

"What's the use of a man in my line keeping a barometer around?" said a dentist the other day. "I can tell when storms are coming and when we are apt to have long spells of good sunny weather as accurately as any barometer or weather indicator ever made, if not more so, and that, too, without budging a step out of my office, without consulting any kind of scientific instrument and without even so much as glancing out of my window. And if you will ask any other dentist in town about it I'll wager that he'll tell you the same thing.

"It's a very simple matter. Human beings are the greatest barometers in the world, and there is no part of the human system which is so quickly affected by damp weather as the teeth. Of course the degree in which a man is affected by the weather depends entirely on the condition of his teeth, but how many people have perfect teeth? Very few, I can assure you. Now, during the week of fine weather which preceded the last rainy spell I had over 30 people, two-thirds of them strangers to me, come in with aching teeth. Most of it was neuralgia, but I knew the sign and said to myself, 'We'll have some rainy weather now surely.' It was a sure indication, and I knew there could be no mistake when, as the end of the week drew nearer, they began to come in faster and faster. In the stormy weather they keep coming in, and then all of a sudden they'll stop, and although it may rain for two or three days after that I know that fine weather is at hand. When toothache patients are few, I know that we are in for a lot of good weather, and though the people would exult at the prospect the dentist groans, for while it is not so pleasant the work of pulling teeth, treating neuralgia and curing toothaches is far more lucrative than filling teeth. I can attend to ten such cases in less time than it takes to fill one tooth. It all proves, however, that the human body is the best barometer in the world, and if you would have weather forecasts of an accurate nature consult your dentist."—New York Sun.

Beyond Dispute.

It is said that Mr. Tyler from the time of his election to the vice presidency until the death of General Harrison kept no carriage, owing to the insufficiency of his salary. When, however, he found himself elevated to the chief magistracy of the country, the financial difficulty being removed, he determined to set up an equipage.

He bought a fine pair of horses, engaged an Irish coachman and proceeded to look about for a vehicle to suit his taste. He heard of one which was for sale by a gentleman residing in Washington and went to look at it.

It had been driven only a few times and was in excellent condition, so that the president after a careful examination felt satisfied with it. Before finally deciding the matter he had his Hibernian coachman take a look at the carriage and give his opinion of it.

"It's jist the thing fer your honor," reported that accomplished person.

"But," queried Mr. Tyler whimsically, "do you think it would be altogether proper for the president of the United States to drive a secondhand carriage, Pat?"

"And why not?" asked Pat, with a shrewd twinkle in his eye. "Shure, an begyin your pardon, ain't it yerself that's a secondhand president?"—Youth's Companion.

Mr. Nojoy—"The elections always come in the spring and fall, don't they?

MARINE GRAVEYARD.

SAWYER'S BEND, NEAR ST. LOUIS, AND ITS HIDDEN WEALTH.

The Fatal Locality In the Mississippi Where Some of the World's Finest Boats Went Down—Millions of Dollars' Worth Buried In the Sand.

"The recent discovery of a sunken raft by Mayor Walbridge in the channel of the river above the Chain of Rocks," said Street Commissioner M. J. Murphy, "will bring to the minds of many of our old steamboatmen the disasters that befell the marine craft of this city in that portion of the river now included in the harbor of St. Louis. The charter harbor of the city includes that stretch of the Mississippi river between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Meramec. That portion of the harbor under the care and control of the harbor and wharf commissioner lies between the Chain of Rocks and the Rives des Peres. From the upper mouth of the Missouri to the foot of North Market street there are now lying under the silt and sands the wrecks of over 60 boats and barges. Many of these steamboats were the largest, best equipped and speediest that ever walked the navigable waterways of the country. They were in reality marine palaces, such as this generation has not seen. Sawyer's bend was the fatal locality where nearly all these splendid crafts foundered and settled under the shifting sands of the treacherous channel. Among the boats that were lost many now living will recall the following: York State, Southerner, Mary Blain, Highland Mary, Grace Darling, Alleghany, Federal Arch, C. Buln, Yuba, Baltimore, John B. Carson, Philadelphia, Edinburg, Challenge, Moderator, Nebraska, Sioux City, White Cloud, Omaha, New Admiral, Geneva, Warsaw, Empire City, Governor Sharkey, Submarine No. 13, Saranac No. 2, War Eagle, Ben Jonson, Gerard B. Allen, Fanny Scott, Henry Adkins, Columbia, Silver Bow, R. J. Lockwood, Wild Duck, Nile, Victoria, Champion, Blue Lodge, Calhoun, Alma, Central City, Raven, Salvor, J. W. Garrett, Hudson, Beaver, John P. Keiser, Pacific, Lulu Worth, Cornelia, Badger State.

"The above were sunk between the years 1855 and 1888. In addition to these, there were 29 barges lost north of Bissell's point within the same years. No record was kept of the sawyer or cut lumber rafts that were lost south of Aiton, but it has been estimated that the aggregate value was over $1,000,000. Only two of the above named boats, the Calhoun and Alma, were raised. The bones of all the others lie many feet beneath the sands, petrifying under the action of the waters. The actual loss in marine property to the merchants of St. Louis by the sinking of these boats was over $5,000,000. Many of the owners in the loss of this property lost not only all they had, but also lost courage because of the increasing dangers to the marine commerce of the immediate harbor of St. Louis. To add to the pathetic story of these disasters, many of them fatal to life, it might be stated in passing that during the period named above 55 splendid steamers were destroyed by fire within the charter harbor of the city. The hulls of many of them lie just outside of the present water line and form the retaining dike for the granite wharf. Many of the grandfathers and grandmothers of today will remember with varying emotions their bridal trips on the James Howard, the Leviathan, the Bismarck, the Grand Republic, the Carrie V. Kountz and others equally grand. It will be noted above that I used the term 'the upper mouth of the Missouri.' I did this advisedly, because of the fact that within the past 40 years that river, where it empties into the Mississippi, has changed its location four or five times, and its present mouth is several miles south of the one that existed a few years ago. Opposite these various mouths, and for one mile southward, many of the disasters named above occurred. The outpouring of the Missouri waters was swift, the eddies and current were treacherous, and the snags and other obstructions so numerous at that point that unusual care was necessary in order to avoid the fatal places.

"The conditions that existed in Sawyer's bend 40 years ago exist practically today and are still a serious menace to the marine commerce of the city, with the added dangers to the important municipal and railroad interests that have grown with the requirements of the water supply and the transportation demands of a great metropolis.

"In 1837, when Robert E. Lee, afterward the great Confederate general, was assigned by the war department to the work of improving the harbor of St. Louis, he outlined to congress what should be done for its permanent fixation. These plans involved the securing of regular and parallel shores on the Missouri and Illinois sides of the river and the regulation of the bed of the river above the city so as to deflect the water in a direct line into the channel under favorable conditions. If he had been allowed to carry out his plans, there would be no marine graveyard in Sawyer's bend today, and it is difficult to estimate now what would have been the marine destiny of this city if President Polk had not persistently vetoed every bill that was passed for our harbor improvements and for the improvement of the inland seas of the west. I had occasion in 1887 to make a survey of the charter harbor of St. Louis for the rivers and harbors committee, and I found north of the city the same obstructions that were noted on a map prepared by Lieutenant Lee and filed with the war department in 1837. If the proper and necessary improvements were made in Sawyer's bend now, I estimate that 3,000 acres of solid land could be reclaimed to the riparian owners, worth at the present valuation $2,000,000. Putting entirely aside the question of re-establishing the former shore line, the present rapid erosion must be stopped, or great damage will result to the railway terminals now being constructed there. The water department, too, may be confronted in time with the serious problem of retarding the encroachments of the mouth of the Missouri on the immediate site of the new waterworks, and the erosion of the banks along which the conduits are constructed. If the waters in Sawyer's bend could be rolled backward, as the waters of the Red sea once were, the sands cleared away and the skeletons of our former palatial steamers photographed, what a terrible object lesson would be conveyed from a spot that is now the most thickly settled marine graveyard in the world!"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SHOPPING IN EUROPE.

Women the Managers of Most of the Notion and Specialty Stores.

Outside of the large European shops of national fame a stranger hardly knows where to ask for his or her wants. The small shops include everything, but what things in what shops is the puzzle. In a small German town, when mosquito netting was asked for at a general dry goods store, the inquirer was directed to a small notion, or what the English term a "thread and needle," shop for it. When found, it was wrapped in a newspaper, and a large pin served in the place of twine. This sounds primitive, but no one would think of complaining of the parcel's appearance, except those particular Americans," one of whom did protest most energetically against it.

The gloveshops are very small, but also well fitted up with one or two counters, comfortable seats, a decorated window and mirrors. Why is it that so many shops show mirrors directly opposite a customer, when she does not require the aid of one in her purchase, unless the idea is to keep her in a good humor! In London one of the best glovers sells hosiery down stairs and gloves and fans above. They also show glove boxes, stretchers and powder shakers in the same cases with gloves. Men sell the gloves here and only try them on when requested to. Only warranted gloves are exchanged if they rip or tear when first putting them on, and only the best qualities are warranted.

In Paris much of the same custom prevails, though the chief shops are larger, one on the Boulevard des Italiens having two windows. No better gloves can be found than are sold at the Bon Marche and Louvre, where the glove trade is immense, but the small shops have also an excellent trade. Many of the costume houses sell gloves to match each dress, which takes trade that may be called high class and higher priced. While the salespeople do not offer to try on gloves, they will do it when requested to, and all first class gloves are exchangeable under the conditions prevailing here.

Berlin abounds in gloveshops, also Vienna, Hamburg, Dresden, and Munich has at least two neat ones, selling a prominent make manufactured in the outskirts of that city. Women are the clerks here and are very prominent in the mercantile circles of Europe, especially in France, where they seem born with a business tact and faculty unknown to other nations. In Berlin the display of dark red pique gloves in a pretty window was marked "New York style." Europe did not take kindly at first to large buttons, but now they are pronounced very chic. The fashion of keeping gloves of all sizes loose in a large package that was noticed in several German shops does not favorably impress an American accustomed to the neatly wrapped and boxed gloves shown in this country.

What we call notions—needles, thread, dress stays, pins, bindings, etc.—are considered small wares and haberdashery in Europe, the latter term being common in London. Threadneedle street in London probably received its name from the small wares or "thread and needle" shops that were there in bygone days. Such shops are universally carried on by women, and often the owner does dressmaking or plain sewing.—Dry Goods Economist.

New England People,

Whether they live in the land of their birth, or in other parts of the Union, are apt to know the value of a good newspaper. Most of us read at least one daily paper regularly, and those who cannot see a daily read a weekly. To keep up with the news is now considered a necessity. He is a wise man who selects for himself and family

A First-Class Newspaper,

One that he can rely on to give him not only a careful report of the daily happenings in his own neighborhood, but an intelligent and comprehensive review of all important movements and events in the state, the nation and the world. With the newspaper as with everything else the best article that one can command is the cheapest in the end. Superior quality counts in nothing more than in the public journal which you keep in touch with the world.

The Springfield Republican

Is recognized as a superior newspaper, one of the leaders of the American press. It has been in successful operation for over 70 years, but it is thoroughly progressive and modern. Its mechanical plant has been entirely renewed within the past year, the second time within a dozen years. Its facilities for publishing a great newspaper are now unsurpassed. The volume of reading matter in its daily issue has been increased by 40 per cent, and it has thus been possible to notably enrich and strengthen the quality of the paper.

News, Politics, Literature.

In all these departments of a newspaper the policy of The Republican is broad, independent and fair. It is alert and enterprising in the service of its constituency. It seeks to enlighten the minds and brighten the lives of its readers by laying before them day by day all that is best and richest and most interesting in current affairs, both at home and abroad. It publishes fully and fairly the information which enables its readers to form their own opinions on public questions. It samples literally the best literature of the times.

The Sunday Republican

Is unique among Sunday newspapers. It is large enough to afford its readers a rich assortment of entertaining and instructive literature in addition to the news, but it does not swamp them in an ocean of printed words, in which good matter and the worthless are indiscriminately mixed. It aims first at excellence, and in quantity is reasonable.

The Weekly Republican

Is an invaluable journal for all who cannot keep pace with the crowding reports of current events in the daily press, and as well for New Englanders away from their early homes who desire to keep informed of events and of public sentiment in Yankee land. It is edited with great care and presents each week the best editorial and literary matter from the seven daily issues, in addition to a compact and comprehensive review of the news. It also devotes special attention to farming interests.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

A SWEEPING REDUCTION IN

SUITS, ULSTERS AND BOYS' AND YOUNG MEN'S CLOTHING.

To-day marks the beginning of the Annual Clearance Sale here. The first items that should interest the purchasing public are

About 300 Single and Double-breasted Men's Sack Suits in fine Cheviots and Scotch Mixtures; were $10 and $12, the price now is $7.85.

About 250 Ulsters—ten styles—Shetlands, Chinchillas, etc., cut long. These are extra warm. The colors are Black, Blues, Browns, Light and Dark Grays and Oxford Mixtures. These have been $12, $15 and $18. We have divided them into three lots and marked them at $7.50, $8.50 and $9.85.

The man who hasn't bought his Overcoat or Ulster as yet can put dollars in his pocket here. He will be amply repaid for his patience in waiting.

It is the same story with Boys' and Young Men's Clothing—everything has felt the swing of the price-cutting axe. For instance:

Boys' $12 and $13.50 three-piece suits are now $9.75; $5, $6, $6.50 and $7.50 grades are now $4.98.
Boys' long pant suits, ages 14 to 19, $18 and $20 grades now $15.75.
$15, 16 and 17 grades are now $13.75. Eight styles of these.

And so it goes all through the store. Handkerchiefs, Neckwear, Hosiery, Collars, Cuffs, Shirts, Umbrellas, Smoking and House Jackets, Bath Robes and everything you can think of for Christmas presents, all at our peculiar prices.

Over 1400 copies of the "Life and Works of James G. Blaine" have gone out of here and the edition is nearly exhausted. Get a copy with every cash purchase of $10 or over while they last.

CHARLES E. LYNCH.

On the same theory that men make the world what it is, merchants certainly make the city. The thrift and enterprise of Springfield's merchants are subject of comment everywhere. This is due in no small degree to the young blood which with a hustling activity is pushing itself to the front rank of successful caterers for public favor and patronage. A little over four years ago Charles E. Lynch of Springfield started a business which some predicted would end in disaster. Mr. Lynch has not only succeeded, but he has accomplished in four years what it ordinarily takes 40 years to do. Mr. Lynch's aim was to lift "ready-made clothing" out of the rut into which it had sunk. Other lines have profited by the progress of the times. He argued, Why not clothing? Mr. Lynch's theory was right. The goods sold by him are made with all the care that the custom tailor bestows. There is the great saving in the labor. There is the great difference between wholesale and retail prices of materials, trimmings, etc. In other respects Mr. Lynch's goods are the same. Trifling changes may be necessary in the articles sold, but these are soon made by experienced and skilled tailors, and the "ready-made" suit or overcoat by a little snipping, taking in or letting out, emerges, as Mr. Lynch advertises, "equal to custom clothes." Mr. Lynch is aided in his success by the Stein-Bloch company of Rochester, N. Y., a firm with a world-wide reputation. It is an evidence of Mr. Lynch's success that the firm confines the sale of their products exclusively to him in these parts.

Overcoats are a necessity for winter wear. Charles E. Lynch shows some elegant garments. The favorite materials are Kerseys and Meltons, while Beavers and Montagnacs are in demand. The style is fullness in all their parts. The linings are rich and elegant. Wide velvet collars and deep lapels serve to give a very dressy effect. The lengths vary from 46 to 54 inches. The popular coat is the box coat. Then comes a surtout or paletot, which may be described as a Prince Albert overcoat. Ulsters are popular as storm coats, but for fine trade Mr. Lynch exhibits an English top coat made in friezes and Oxford mixtures.

For a dress suit the dove-tail frock or regent is the correct thing. and Mr. Lynch is well provided with them. Fine cassimeres, worsteds and exceedingly neat, fancy patterns are prominent. The coat is not so long as it was, and fits the figure more closely. It is symmetrical, and as represented in the illustration, is certainly refined and stylish. The peculiar features of Lynch's suits is a softness to the touch. This is not produced by any padding or tailor's manipulation; it is the result of fine workmanship and the choice quality of material. The lapels of Lynch's fine coats roll back with a graceful curve that cannot be attained by inferior makes.

The cutaway sack is a combination of the formerly ungainly sack and the cutaway. As represented here it has four buttons, and gracefully rounds from the last button. For a common sense, every-day suit it is unequalled. The favorite fabrics are cheviots and worsteds. Mr. Lynch has a choice children's department. The same excellence of make and material characterize Mr. Lynch's display of goods for the little ones. Mr. Lynch's establishment is replete with everything that is necessary in a man's outfit and the knick-knacks of attire. Mackintoshes with capes and velvet collars are being bought as presents for the men. Mr. Lynch has also a fine display of smoking-jackets and house coats, of canes and umbrellas, elegantly trimmed with silver mount, novelties in neckwear, suspenders, gloves, handkerchiefs, underwear, shirts, collars and cuffs, hats and the rest, all useful and desirable gifts at Christmas time. Women will find at Mr Lynch's establishment just what the men wish.—From the Springfield Republican.]

Indian Bargains.

Indian travel is full of surprises, pleasant and otherwise. A gentleman, wishing to purchase some of the beautiful cashmere shawls which are made not far from Delhi, went to one of the largest establishments in the city. The merchant showed him a book in which were written recommendations of his goods by General Grant and his son as well as by many others.

Among the recommendations was this one in German: "I have bought shawls of this man and think I got them cheap, but do not offer him a third of what he asks."

The gentleman selected two very beautiful shawls and asked the price. The merchant, after a little consultation with his clerks, said:

"I have not sold a shawl to your party. I sell you very, very cheap. You may have these beautiful shawls for 1,400 rupees."

"Absurd! Let us go!" said the gentleman, having in mind the German's advice, and he started for the door.

"Don't go," said the merchant. "Make me an offer."

"I will give you 400 rupees for both shawls."

To his astonishment, the merchant replied:

"Take them. I will send them to your hotel."

At Jaipur the same traveler lodged in a hotel conducted by a native, but owned by the rajah. He found the following amusing notices posted in various places:

"If visitors are not satisfied with the food or cooking, they can deduct from the bill what they consider fair."

"Guests are requested not to strike the servants."

"Guests wishing ice are requested to give a day's notice and name how much they require."—Youth's Companion.

Are Sailors Safer Than Landsmen?

Judging from the number of people who are annually killed in the streets of London, the Atlantic ocean is far safer than the bustling Strand or Cheapside. There are over 100 people killed every year from accidents in the streets of London, to say nothing of the number who are killed in the streets of other large towns. Over 5,000 persons are annually injured in London in connection with the traffic of the streets. The late Mr. Thomas Gray of the board of trade marine department stated some time ago that a man is safer at sea in a fairly good ship than anywhere else. "There are more lives lost," he said, "among miners from accident than among sailors and many more among railway employees."—London Tit-Bits.

POLLY MAKING TEA.

The china gleams in blue and white;
The twilight hour is swift approaching.
Entranced, I note with shy delight,
No other callers are encroaching.

A cup she designates as mine,
With motion of her dainty finger.
The kettle boils—oh, drink divine,
In mem'ry shall thy fragrance linger

Her kerchief's made in style of yore.
Some fairy surely put the hem on.
Held sugar such a charm before?
Was e'er such magic in a lemon?

She turns away with manner coy.
The firelight shows her beauty clearer.
Oh, why is teasing such a joy?
I wish she'd come a little nearer.

We sit and sip—the time flies fast.
My cup needs filling—project clever!
She comes, and I—grown bold at last—
Say, "Polly, make my tea forever!"
—Florence S. Brown in Good Housekeeping.

A FALSE MASCOT.

King was giving a dinner in honor of his promotion. He was a first lieutenant now and had a fair chance of paying off some of his debts. Not that he was a young man of particularly extravagant habits, but a second lieutenant, be he married or single, is always more or less in debt. He is expected and forced by an unwritten law to make quite as good a showing as his colonel and to keep up quite as much of an appearance.

The dinner was a little unique. All the officers were to leave at 1 o'clock that morning on a scout. They were in their field clothes, at King's request, and had already the rough, unshaven look of men able and willing to do or dare anything. In the hall of King's bachelor quarters their felt scouting hats hung on the rack. On the porches of their own houses their mess kits, ready packed, stood waiting to be strapped upon the mules. Their clothing and bedding, wrapped in shelter tents and ponchos, were beside the chests.

Here in the dining room—lighted by a lamp which King had admired while on leave and had gone a month into debt to buy, and another which, in a fit of economy, he had obtained from the quartermaster, and which hung in uncompromising ugliness over the table—sat a company of 12—women in evening gowns, strangely beautiful and modish in contrast to their surroundings, and men in uniforms very shiny at the seams, blue flannel shirts and top boots. They were cavalrymen and belonged to King's regiment. Their gayety was not that of prisoners just before execution, although there was the chance that any one, or possibly all of them, might never come back alive, but when one has become used to going off every spring and sometimes every autumn to chase—how often in vain!—the wily red man one ceases to consider the possibilities of the outcome, and besides it is not often that officers are killed in Indian fights. There is frequently a pretty animated exchange of bullets, but the death list is not heavy.

Howbeit, there are exceptions to the rule. So these men, each one under a possible sentence of death, and these women, each one perchance to say goodby forever to the man at her side, talked and laughed in utter carelessness, finding only an added zest in the rough clothing of the men and a little deeper interest in the plans they were laying for their camps and their discussions of the contents of the mess chests.

The dinner did not go off without a hitch. That was hardly to be expected in this faroff part of the world, a hundred or more miles from the nearest railroad, dependent on a commissary department and a sutler's for its supplies, but nothing mattered, and nothing was noticed.

After a time they all rose and went out on the porch, where the men smoked their cigars. They had not staid at the table and sent the women into the parlor this time. They were army officers and preferred their feminine friends to their tobacco, and each one was glad to ignore a custom which made it the proper thing to deprive himself of the women for even so short a time. They were glad of the excuse which the coming parting gave them of making the most of the few remaining hours.

The night was dully dark. The outlines of the foothills and the mountains beyond them could not be seen, but a flicker of light in the distance from some Indian signal fires told where they were. Coyotes were howling up by the graveyard; there was a sound of preparation in the barracks and occasionally the neigh of a horse at the stables.

The sergeant of the guard called out, "Ten o'clock," and the officers made a movement to get their hats. There was still much to be done before the night march commenced. King sat on the railing of the porch talking to a woman who leaned against a post. He could not see her, but knew that her beautiful face was there close to his.

That was enough. He was asking for a promise before he should start off into the heavy darkness across the plains, but the woman had no wish to promise. She enjoyed King's uncertainty far too much. It would have been commonplace to be engaged—she had discovered that on previous occasions—but to have him for a suitor would not be so bad. He was handsome, manly, brave and her abject slave. Besides, if she were to bind herself, she felt that this time, with this man, she would have to keep her word.

She laughed slowly as he continued to beg the promise. "I'll tell you what I'll do. I will give you the next best thing to me—a picture of myself. I am always a mascot. My picture will be more of one. I will give it to you when you start. Of course well all be there to see you off.

"Now, remember," she went on, waxing eloquent as the charm of her idea grew upon her and speaking with conviction—"remember that wherever you may go, in whatever peril you may be, whoever shall threaten or warn you, you need have no fear. If I were there in person, I would be exempt from danger, so my picture—my other me—will also be, and if it is with you no harm can come near."

And King had to be content. There was no time to say more, for the men were leaving and orderlies passing backward and forward.

Through the sightless darkness King walked home with the girl and caught no glimpse of the face he kissed so tenderly at parting. Out of the blackness a hand he could not see rested in his; up from the gulf of the night two lips were raised to his. Then he turned and walked back to his quarters, lit a cigar and gave his striker orders concerning the disposal of his scouting outfit.

In the silence of midnight the troops rode away. The tramp of their horses, the muffled clanking of their accouterments, could be heard, but not a thing seen save the burning points of light from the officers' cigarettes. The signal fires of the Indians flashed and went out on the mountains. There were no bugle calls, no loud orders even, for the enemy had its spies lurking behind every mesquite bush, gliding beside every trail.

In front of the commanding officer the officers halted before they started off. The women, still in their evening gowns, crowded around them to say goodby. They could recognize faces only when the light from the commandant's windows fell upon them. Beyond that all was dark.

King waited for the mascot that had been promised him and was despairing when he felt something hard slipped between his fingers and heard a voice which seemed to come out of the inky air murmur, "Adios."

"Adios," he answered and followed the sound of the hoofs of his captain's horse.

In the midst of the chaparral, trotting slowly along with the column, he struck a match and looked at the bit of pasteboard in his hand. The light was uncertain, but he could make out a head and neck, and the eyes seemed to glitter. Then a gust of wind blew out the match, and a coyote yelped near by.

The rations were almost out, and orders were to return to the post for fresh supplies. King was happy at the prospect naturally. He drew out his mascot from time to time and looked at the beautiful face thereon, the lips half parted, the eyes glancing from under heavy lids. It was only a head, with masses of fluffy hair fading into the shaded background, but it was beautiful, perfect.

The twilight came on. They had marched all the afternoon. They were weary of chasing phantoms, of following useless trails. They passed through a pine forest, and the darkness deepened.

A creek at the bottom of a gully flowed along in the shadow of the pines. The column went down to it, listening to the sound of the rippling water. All else was quiet. No one spoke. The black wings of the pines, like a shadow of doom, lay over the troops.

A crack, a hiss, a bullet striking through flesh, a startled murmur, orders ringing on the air in the midst of the shots. Then the soldiers returned the fire of their unseen foes. On all sides they were surrounded, but the gully was wide enough for a little maneuvering. The men got under the shelter of an abrupt rising of the bank and had only to defend themselves from three sides.

They were badly frightened—not as cowards, but as men who are fond of life and mean to sell it dearly. It was an ugly position, and not a few fell face downward in the dancing mountain stream. The only person who seemed completely to ignore the danger was King. A cigarette between his teeth, he strolled, with apparently utter carelessness, up and down under cover of the bullets of his men and in full range of the Indians hidden up above behind the tree trunks.

Some way the thought of the mascot under his coat gave him a sense of security. He heard again the sound of the voice which said to him from the darkness, "If my picture is with you, no harm can come near." He felt again the touch of the phantomlike hand, the warmth of the lips he could not see.

There was a sharp pain in his breast. He gave a little cry and fell, his head half buried in the pine needles.

The girl, when she heard of it from the dust stained courier, grew uneasy. She was afraid that her picture might be found on the body, and that the man she had promised to marry—the middle aged colonel, who had great ideas of her constancy—might hear of it.

But he did not. There was a photograph found in King's pocket, but the bullet had plowed right through the face, and it was so smeared with blood as to be unrecognizable. It was sent back east to his family. — Gwendolen Overton in San Francisco Argonaut.

MAKING HIM FEEL AT HOME.

How Many Crimes Are Committed In the Name of Hospitality.

How many mistakes are made in this world with the best intentions! How often we condole with each other when we should rejoice! How frequently a man urges a friend to take a drink, "just one more," under the impression that he is doing him a favor, when really the man is anxious to get home to his family! There is no mistake so hard to correct as that which is made with the best motives possible. The other day Buggins invited Muggins out to dinner. Muggins is rather shy, but he managed to scare up enough courage to accept. Mrs. Buggins and the three Misses Buggins held a council of war.

"What is Mr. Muggins fond of?" queried Mrs. Buggins.

"I'm blessed if I know," quoth he.

"Find out today if you can," was the edict. So Buggins went to a friend for advice.

"I don't remember. Let's see. He either despises or is very fond of coffee. I think he is fond of it. Yes; I'm pretty sure I remember his drinking eight cups in one night."

The truth of the matter is that Muggins hates coffee with a bitter, undying hatred that was inborn. If he ever drank eight mugs of anything, it surely was not coffee, but Buggins went home and told his family that as long as Muggins had a cup of good coffee he didn't care a row of pins about anything else.

The dinner came off.

"Have a cup of coffee, Mr. Muggins," said pretty Miss Buggins first. "I know you won't refuse." So Muggins took it. He gulped it down and tried to look calm. Then the second daughter of his hostess spied his cup empty. She rushed up for another. His shyness overpowered him, and he took it without a murmur. He swallowed that too. The eagle eye of the youngest Miss Buggins fell upon him. He quailed.

"Poor Mr. Muggins!" said she sympathetically. "Have they neglected you? Never mind; I'll take care of you. Here's a cup of coffee."

How could he refuse? He never has discovered how he emptied that cup. All he remembers after that is the hostess coming up with another cup of coffee on one side of him, and Buggins, with a genial smile, insisting upon giving him a fifth dose.

"I want to make you feel at home," said he.

"Well, then," said Muggins, recovering from his shyness, "don't give me any more coffee."

"Why not?"

"Because, when I'm home, I never drink coffee. In fact, I loathe coffee."—Philadelphia Press.

Can Birds Act?

A remarkable incident is related by a distinguished naturalist. His study window commanded a view of the courtyard, which was sheltered by high walls and remote from noise or disturbance of any kind. One day he saw a large robin engaged in dragging the apparently dead body of another robin round and round in a circle on the pavement.

It looked as though the live robin had fought a duel with the other, and having come off victorious was indulging in the cruel triumph of pulling the lifeless body of its vanquished rival over the stones. Suddenly, however, the live robin stopped and threw itself upon its back as though stark dead. Its wings were half extended and rigid and its legs upturned to the sky.

Never, to all seeming, had there been a robin more dead. Meanwhile the other robin went through an exactly converse transformation. It had only been "shamming dead" and now woke up into full and vigorous life. Seizing on his feathered playmate, it dragged the latter in its turn all round the same circle and repeated the process several times over. Finally both actors flew off together to a neighboring tree.—London Tit-Bits.

A Novel Experiment.

The death of Professor David Swing recalls an incident of his ready wit and quick adaptation to the spirit of the moment. It was on the occasion of a luncheon given in honor of Mrs. Elizabeth Custer, the widow of General George A. Custer, and at which Professor Swing was a guest. Mrs. Custer is a very bright, vivacious woman, a fluent and interesting talker and much given to story telling. The first course of the luncheon was served, but Mrs. Custer was in the full tide of recollection of some brilliant episodes of her eventful life, and everybody was listening as if spellbound. Professor Swing glanced at his cup of bouillon and waited, but as there seemed to be no place where an interruption was desirable he rose gravely, unfolded a large damask napkin, and turning to Mrs. Custer dropped it quietly over her head.

"There," he said. "When a bird sings too brilliantly, we cover up the cage," and amid the laughter of the company he resumed his seat.—Detroit Free Press.

Coins of Enormous Size.

When the area and square inches of surface are taken into consideration, the largest coins ever issued by any government on the globe were those put into circulation by Sweden during the sixteenth century. These mammoth pieces are neither round, square, oval nor octagonal in shape, but are great irregular slabs of copper described as "resembling pieces of a boiler after an explosion." The smallest piece issued under the law which authorized this gigantic coinage was an irregular rectangular slab of about 12 square inches of surface and about half an inch thick. It was worth 30 cents. The largest of the same series was about a foot square and had a face value of $4. Each of these copper slabs is stamped in several places on the face, the various inscriptions giving the date, denomination, etc. The $4 piece mentioned last above is nearly an inch in thickness and weighs four pounds, lacking a fraction.—St. Louis Republic.

Much of the pretended olive oil imported into this country is made up in large parts of peanut oil pressed from African and Indian peanuts. Peanut oil is not only very good to eat as a salad oil, but is an excellent base for fine soups and valuable for illuminating purposes.

PALE, THIN AND EMACIATED PEOPLE.

The country is full of them. They do not know what it is to feel well like other folks. Medicines of all kinds have been tried without good results. Cod Liver Oil and the preparations of Malt have all failed. What is the reason? These emaciated people cannot digest starchy foods. The fat of the body is produced with bread, potatoes, and other starchy food. If they will eat food that is artificially digested, they will grow fat, strong, plump and robust. They will commence gaining flesh at once. This Flesh Forming Food is called Paskola. You can buy it at any drug store. Send your name to The Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade St., New York, and get their interesting pamphlet.

A GOOD INDICATION.

Medical practitioners of prominence are prescribing for the cure of diseases springing from derangement of the digestive organs, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. This professional endorsement is justified by the fact that no other preparation has been found so efficacious in that class of disorders, even in the most advanced and severe cases. It has cured gravel in the kidneys, stone in the bladder and inflammation of the kidneys, where all other medicines had failed. It can be purchased of any druggist. A book is wrapped about each bottle, explaining its use.

The Death of the Old Year.

Full knee-deep lies the winter snow,
And the winter winds are wearily sighing!
Toll ye the church-bell sad and slow,
And tread softly and speak low,
For the old year lies a-dying.
Old year, you must not die;
You came to us so readily,
You lived with us so steadily;
Old year, you shall not die.

He lieth still; he doth not move;
He will not see the dawn of day,
He hath no other life above.
He gave me a friend and a true true-love,
And the new year will take 'em away.
Old year, you must not go;
So long as you have been with us,
Such joy as you have seen with us,
Old year, you shall not go.

He frothed his bumpers to the brim;
A jollier year we shall not see.
But though his eyes are waxing dim,
And though his foes speak ill of him,
He was a friend to me.
Old year, you shall not die;
We did so laugh and cry with you,
I've half a mind to die with you,
Old year, if you must die.

He was full of joke and jest,
But all his merry quips are o'er.
To see him die, across the waste
His son and heir doth ride post-haste,
But he'll be dead before.
Everyone for his own.
The night is starry and cold, my friend,
And the new year, blithe and bold, my friend,
Comes up to take his own.

How hard he breathes! Over the snow
I heard just now the crowing cock.
The shadows flicker to and fro;
The cricket chirps; the lights burn low;
'T is nearly twelve o'clock.
Shake hands before you die.
Old year, we'll dearly rue for you;
What is it we can do for you?
Speak out before you die.

His face is growing sharp and thin.
Alack! our friend is gone.
Close up his eyes; tie up his chin;
Step from the corpse, and let him in
That standeth there alone,
And waiteth at the door.
There's a new foot on the floor, my friend,
And a new face at the door, my friend,
A new face at the door.

—Tennyson.

A VICTIM OF TWINS.

Mr. and Mrs. Prescott stood on the piazza at the side of their cottage by the sea, watching the twins. Standing with their backs to their parents, these young gentlemen were proudly regarding a gigantic back-net at the end of their tennis court. Directly behind the net was a small grove of scrubby pines, which in the twilight showed merely as an irregular blotch of black.

Dressed alike in suits of white flannel, the twins appeared against this in bold relief, like white silhouettes.

The back-stop which the twins were so proudly regarding was, to tell the truth, rather shaky. They had somewhere found an old fish-net, which they had nailed to two poles. So much of the work had been easy; but the task of setting the poles upright in the ground had been long and difficult.

When the uprights were finally planted, and their bases abundantly bolstered with rocks, they appeared desirous to fall into each others arms, like long-lost brothers. A tennis ball driven swiftly and accurately into the centre of the net would undoubtedly have brought them together. But the twins thought their work perfect.

Mr. Prescott casually noticed that one of the boys had his hands in his pocket.

"Tell him," said he to his wife, "to take his hands out of his pockets."

"Is it Max or Mort?" asked the mother.

"Oh, I don't know!" said her husband.

"Neither do I," returned his wife. They both laughed a little.

"Why did you let them get those ridiculous white suits?" asked Mr. Prescott. "In that dress it is impossible to tell them apart."

"They've on different colored neckties," said his wife.

"Well, ask them to turn round."

"Oh, boys!" called Mrs. Prescott.

The twins turned with precision, and faced their parents expectantly. The one on the left wore a blue, the one on the right a red scarf. The one on the right was Mort, the one on the left was Max.

"Morton," said his mother, "take your hands from your pockets!"

Max tittered as Mort sheepishly obeyed. Then both came forward.

"Boys," continued their mother, "your father and I are going to drive over to the Blakes' this evening. Maggie is going out, too. Do you think you can go to bed quietly at the proper time?"

"Yes'm," said Max.

"Of course," said Mort.

A few minutes later, as she and her husband were driving out of the yard, Mrs. Prescott caught sight of the servant leaving the house.

"Be sure and be in by ten, Maggie," she called. "Mr. Prescott and I will not return until late."

"Yis, mum," said Maggie.

At the moment, a lank pedestrian was walking lazily along the road. By a certain added self-consciousness in his gait, a close observer might have guessed that brief dialogue was not without its interest to him. This was Styggles, a man whom an uncharitable father had without remorse christened Hodijah.

His father, Hodijah said, had taken a mean advantage of his youth. "I've hearn," he added, "of men with an elephant on their hands, and I guess they were sorter embarrassed; but I'm the only man I know of whose father made him a birthday present of two elephants. Seein' I've got to drive them two elephants—one of 'em Hodijah and the other Styggles—tandem all my life I guess I may be excused f'm doing anything else, ez the work is wearin'."

Consequently Hodijah was the most completely shiftless man in the not far distant village where he lived. When he could not avoid it, he did odd jobs about town; but for the most part he loafed.

On this particular evening, Hodijah was on his way to join some cronies who were going out in a boat, ostensibly to fish. Until Mr. and Mrs. Prescott had driven by him, he walked as if on his way to the bedside of a dying friend. Then he began to loiter as if it had suddenly occurred to him that his friend's name was Methuselah. And as he loitered he thought.

"That ere city chap that jest drove by," he said to himself, "was a mighty slick lookin' feller. Guess they hain't been sufferin' much up where he lives for a meal of victuals. Got so much on hand prob'ly they have to feed cold roast chicken and mince pie t' the' pigs ev'ry mornin'. Wouldn't be surprised a mite if that was so.

"Why, my soul and body, it's a sin and shame," his thoughts went, after some wandering; "there aint no sense in pampering pigs no sich a fashion nohow. I guess 'twould be doin' no harm if I sh'd kinder git ahead of that feller's pigs. 'T ain't likely they'd keer, not havin' no partic'lar pref'rence for roast chicken, so far as I knows on. I guess that city feller 'd jest as leves feed 'em on plain swill, jest for once. It 'ud be a pity for them pigs to have dispepsy; aint goin' to allow it, nuther!" concluded Hodijah, in a warm glow of philanthropy, as he thrust an enterprising leg over the fence.

As he landed on the other side he gave a startled "Ugh!" Then he laughed. The laugh came when he discovered that the white thing he had stepped on was nothing more harmful than a piece of linen, blown probably from the Prescotts' clothesline.

"I guess there ain't nothing white that wouldn' scare me all ter flinders in the dark," he reflected. "They do say there ain't no sich thing as ghosts nohow. Mebby there ain't. There ain't likely to be none in this here orchard, anyhow. Ghosts ain't constituted right for eatin' apples—not accordin' to what I've heard tell, though per cont'ry, green apples isn't likely to do 'em much hurt nuther. Anyhow, I resk it."

So saying, Hodijah slunk in among the trees of the Prescott orchard, there to await the proper moment for his contemplated attack upon the Prescott pantry.

The twins, like the good boys they were, went to bed at the hour of nine. Once in bed however, they thought it no sin to enjoy a vigorous if brief pillow fight. Then they lay quietly for a little while; but presently Max rolled over and whispered in Mort's ear:

"I'm awfully hungry."

"So'm I," said Mort.

"There's pie in the pantry," whispered Max.

"Go get it," said Mort.

"No—you get it," said Max.

"No, you get it," whispered Mort. "I got it last time."

Max, considering the argument valid, slipped out of bed, and encouraged by the softly spoken "Good for you!" of his brother, began feeling his cautious way down stairs.

It was intensely dark. Max, however, knowing the location of every article of furniture in it, made his way quickly, without noise or accident, to the door of the kitchen.

Here he began groping for the knob; but grasped instead something rough and woolly. The next instant he received a blow upon his head which first made him see a dozen rockets bursting in the air, and then have the sickening sensation of falling down, down, down. Then he lost consciousness.

Hodijah had given the blow. Pie in hand, he had started to leave the kitchen as Max had started to enter. Frightened by the sudden hand laid upon his coat, he had dropped his plunder and struck out fiercely in the dark. The blow, the sudden instinct of self-protection, had knocked Max senseless to the floor.

With the oppressive stillness that followed the noise of his unseen enemy's fall, a new terror entered the heart of Hodijah and held it still. Was he whom he had struck down in the dark, dead? Hodijah did not dare to stir. He felt himself held fast in the impalpable grip of that horror which walketh in darkness.

Then an overpowering curiosity invaded him to look upon the face of his victim. He felt it rise in his heart and spread itself through his rigid body until it fairly trembled in his finger tips.

Dominated by this morbid desire, and wholly against his will, he began to fumble in his pockets for a match. While he himself was filled with an insane hope that no match was there, this curiosity, like the alien will of a mesmerist, forced him to feel in one pocket after another until at last the match was found; and its will, not his, compelled him to strike the match and turn terrified eyes toward the face upon the floor.

It was the face of a young boy—and it was white and beautiful. In the brief space during which the match flamed up, every line of that still face was burned into Hodijah's memory as if with a brand. In a second more wild remorse filled his heart, mingled with fear. He arose and fled. He had entered the house by one of the long casement windows which opened from the sitting-room upon the piazza at the side. To reach the sitting-room he must pass through the front hall. Thither consequently he rushed, careless now what noise he made.

With an increase of panic, he perceived that a soft light pervaded the hall. Casting her eyes upward, he saw a sight which froze his blood.

There, on the landing at the elbow of the stairway, stood the double of him who lay white and still in the room beyond. One hand of the figure rested lightly on the stair-rail, the other held aloft a small candle, the pale light of which dwelt mysteriously in the folds of the long white robe that fell in straight lines from the youthful shoulders, gave strange glints of gold to the auburn hair that crowned the head like an aureole, and caused the dark eyes to shine with a brilliancy that seemed supernatural.

Indeed, under the soft flame of the candle Mort looked the angel of light which his mother thought him—sometimes. To the pitiable scamp, a prey to superstitious terror below, he was a visitor from another world, whose beauty made him the more appalling.

Hodijah, in fact, found meeting a ghost as discomposing as his fondest fancy had painted. He felt cold about the roots of his hair; his spine seemed ice, his blood a glacial stream. He had no strength in his knees. His eyes bulged out. His feet seemed fastened as with rivets to the floor, and he trembled.

The two stood there a moment gazing at each other. Naturally, Mort was the first to recover his self-possession. For him the encounter held little that was terrifying.

He was not, indeed, quite sure that what he saw before him was a gawky fellow who seemed badly scared, though in the dim light it seemed to be. Anyway, if the intruder was frightened, he reflected sagely, why should he himself be?

So to make sure, he put out one white foot, and with questioning eyes stepped down one stair.

The movement was too much for Hodijah. With a gurgled yell he sprang into the sitting-room, crashed through the window, cleared the piazza at a bound and sped toward the grove of pines at the rear of the house.

Mort, stopping to comprehend no more than that the enemy was in full flight, uttered a whoop of victory.

"Come on, Max, come on!" he shouted, and plunged after the flying Hodijah.

The candle went out. Mort flung it away. His long nightgown bothered him, but like a racer who girds up his loins, he gathered it about him and away! so excited he knew not what he was doing. Certainly in this moment he was an odd figure of a ghost.

The frightened Hodijah ran wildly on. Once he looked over his shoulder. There behind him followed the white figure, and seemed to his heated imagination fairly to fly over the ground. Indeed, Mort was close upon his heels.

With the energy of despair Hodijah redoubled his pace and ran for his life, where he cared not, until—ugh! what clinging horror was this in which he felt himself tripped and fallen and hideously enmeshed, as in some exaggerated spider's web?

Mort saw the burglar crash headlong into the tennis back-net—then poles, net, man, all came in one confused heap to earth. Whooping like an Indian, Mort circled about the sprawling and kicking man; then he darted upon him as a spider darts upon a fly, and in three seconds more had him so thoroughly wrapped up and enveloped in the net that escape was impossible.

Finally, to make assurance doubly sure, he sat down—a solid ghost!—plumply on Hodijah's neck. From this novel resting-place, to an accompaniment of gasps and gurgles from beneath, he began hollooing to his brother.

"Come on, Max," he called, "I've got him!"

Max, on recovering consciousness, was at first decidedly dazed. He did not know what had happened to him. He felt that the floor was hard and that his head ached; all else was a blank. For a minute he lay quiet. Then, feeling a little stronger, he raised himself upon his knees.

In doing so, his hand came in contact with the pie which Hodijah in his fright had dropped. At this he began to remember. He had come down stairs after a pie—yes, that was it—and had fallen, or run into something hard.

Then it occurred to him that his brother must be growing impatient, and he got up to go to him, pie in hand. As he did so he heard Mort shouting outside the house, and full of surprise, made his way to the piazza.

There he dimly made out a white figure sitting on a heap of something dark, and heard his brother's voice calling:

"Come on, Max! Help me hold this burglar!"

The word "burglar" cured Max at once of all his pains. In his excitement he no longer took count of so small an ill as a headache.

"I'm coming!" he shouted, "I'm coming!"

"Sit on his legs and stop his kicking," said Mort, breathlessly, when his brother arrived. "There, that's it! He's all right now, I guess. Just think, Max, we've caught a burglar! I guess father won't laugh at us any more now. My! won't he be surprised? I wish I had that pie, just the same."

"I've got it," said Max; and the boys began munching the pie, seated tranquilly on Hodijah's back.

As they ate, the boys talked.

"I'd like to know where you've been all the time, Max," said Mort.

"Why, I ran into a door, or something, and it just laid me flat. I didn't hear anything till you called. Say, where'd you find the burglar? Was he in our room? My, if I'd seen him!"

"I wan't in the room," said Mort. "I heard you tumble, but didn't think anything of it. Then you didn't come back, and I was afraid you were eating all the pie. And I met the burglar in the hall. You bet he was scared, though!"

Hodijah, who had been lying still for a few moments, collecting his scattered senses, now spoke.

"Be you fellers both alive?" he asked, doubtfully.

"Well, I rather guess we are!" said Mort.

"Wal," said Hodijah, "I'm mighty glad on it—you kin bet your bottom dollar on that without much resk, now I tell ye." He heaved a sigh of unutterable relief.

"What does he mean?" said Max to Mort.

"I'm sure I don't know!" said Mort.

"How comes it that you two fellers look so consarnedly alike?" asked Hodijah, after a pause.

"We're twins!" said Max.

"Oh, ye be, be ye?" muttered Mr. Styggles. "Say," he resumed after a moment's thought, "ye needn't be off'rin' me none of that pie, 'cause I don't want none."

Soon the moon, which rose late that evening, flooded the grounds with pale light. Mr. and Mrs. Prescott, driving into the yard, saw the two white figures in the tennis-court.

"Mercy on us!" said their mother.

"Boys," said their father, sharply, "what are you two doing there in your nightgowns?"

"Sitting on a burglar!" cried Max and Mort.—Youth's Companion.

AN IMPORTED FISH STORY.

It is the enterprising Harper's Young People which goes to Africa for a fish story.

"Domingo's nose took a Grecian turn; he scratched his head and uttered a few expressions in negro dialect. Then he made a bait with codfish; but alas, the little fishes didn't like salt cod.

"This time Domingo was at his wits' end. Corned beef, sardines, and codfish were everything that there was catable on board. He sat silent and dejected.

"'These little fishes would no doubt like fresh meat,' I said to Domingo.

"'I haven't any,' he said, sadly.

"'Make some fresh meat,' I said. And you may believe me or not, as you like, but he did. With his sharp knife, from the thick part of his heel, a little at one side where the hard flesh joins the tender, he proceeded to cut a little morsel with which he baited his hook. It was apparently exactly what the little fishes wanted, for they precipitated themselves upon it voraciously. The results were most satisfactory. And an hour later, in serving me a dish of fried fish, Domingo said, proudly:

"'Didn't I tell you they were good to eat?'

"'Excellent,' I answered."

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—Sometimes one finds it—veneration. In one of the fifth ward cars recently an old gentleman got into a crowded car. He was pretty tired and hung to one of the straps because he was incapable of standing up alone. There were several well-built men in the car but they seemed unusually absorbed in the advertisements that fresco the top sides of the car. Finally a young girl of about 12 years got up and said:

"Won't you take my seat? I am more able to stand than you are."

The old man stared at her in amazement.

"Why—why!" he stammered, "I don't want to rob you of your seat."

"That doesn't make any difference," she said determinedly. "You look more tired than I feel. Take my seat; please do."

The old man sat down and the girl took hold of the car straps.

The young men in the car suddenly found something interesting in the floor, for none of them raised their eyes toward the young girl who had voluntarily surrendered her seat to one who needed it more than she did. At least three of them wore huge chrysanthemums on their coats. There is no reason why social manners in a parlor should differ from those in a street car.—Syracuse Post.

TOO MUCH FOR BEANS.—"Haven't you got anything solid to eat?" asked a traveler, discontentedly eyeing the profusion of pies and small cakes on the counter of a restaurant at one of the way stations.

"Shall I give you some beans?" said the proprietor, with his most persuasive smile.

The traveler assented, and making short work of them, asked: "How much?"

"Twenty-five cents," was the bland response.

"What!" cried the traveler. "Twenty-five cents for a spoonful of cold beans?"

The proprietor continued firm in his price, the man paid it and departed.

But late that afternoon a telegram was handed to the restaurant keeper, for which he paid twenty-five cents. It ran thus:

"Don't you think your price a little high on beans?"—Boston Journal.

ANOTHER AVENUE OPENED.—Here is the latest profession wrenched from man. A woman in Maine has taken up spanking as a profession. She has her regular weekly and semi-weekly customers, and receives fifty cents for every spanking given—where there are several boys in one family she lumps them for $1. She is energetic, and can get through with from ten to twelve boys per day, thus earning a snug little sum each week.

COURTSHIP IN A FLAT.

It was at a meeting of the Young Woman's Progressive Political Association. They greeted each other with an explosive kiss.

"I haven't seen you for ages, you dear thing!" said the girl with the poppies in her hat. "I'm so glad you came to-day—this is to be a perfectly ideal meeting. Are you married yet?"

"No; and I'm not likely to be as long as I live in a flat," responded the girl with the ostrich boa. "I'd like to have 'Let all who enter here leave hope behind' carved over the entrance to our building."

"If you want a responsive shoulder to weep on here is mine. I, too, live in a flat, and when our landlord wanted a new name for the building I suggested Anti-Matrimonial—he declined it, though, said it might affect the popularity of 'em. I just hate a flat. O, yes, we have steam heat, gas, range—"

"Hardwood mantels, porcelain bath—"

"Tiled hearths, electric bells, and all modern conveniences," groaned the girl with the poppies. "Oh, don't; you make me ill!"

"Our flat has no doors at all, only portieres," moaned the girl with the feather boa, "and only the man who doesn't mean anything by it is bold enough to make love to a girl when a member of her family may be in ambush behind each curtain."

"I know. And the awful things that happen to one when one is temporarily isolated from one's best clothes. I was once caught in the bedroom which opens off the parlor with all my decent gowns in a wardrobe at the back of the flat, and a swell New Yorker, who only had one day in town, waiting in the parlor to see me. I don't know what would have happened if Minnie hadn't gone up to the flat above and lowered my tea gown out of a window in a basket."

"That's nothing. I had been washing my hair in the bathroom one day, and had left part of it there to dry. I fled to my room, which also opens off the parlor, at a sound of the door bell. It was Jim, and mamma had to bring me my hair in a hand satchel before I could go in."

"And I once dropped a hot curling iron down my back while Burt was waiting for me in the next room, and dared not scream lest he find out what I was doing."

"That comes of a man having no sister to familiarize—"

"Nothing of the sort. It is the fault of a flat."

"Well, maybe so. Alma has made her father move to the suburbs and take a whole house."

"Yes; and I hear she is going to be married."

"Quite likely. Did you hear how she lost Victor?"

"No; do tell me!"

"He was calling on her the very evening before she left on that trip to Kansas, and she had strong hopes that he would commit himself. Just about as it was time for him to go, a great hubbub of voices arose in the next room, and, under cover of it, he said: 'Ah, Miss Alma, could—could—could you—'"

"Yes, yes; go on!"

"Just then her father's voice rose loud and clear; 'I tell you now,' he was saying, 'this thing has got to stop! Alma's extravagance is enough to ruin any man! No wonder she is twenty-four and can't—' Her mother stopped him there, but it was too late. Alma asked Victor what he was going to say and he stammered out: 'Could—could you tell me what time it is?'"

"Poor Alma! And I know that by the time she got back from Kansas he was engaged to that little school teacher who makes over her dresses twice and puts her money in the bank."

"Yes, O, my goodness! They are all going and we haven't heard a word they said. They were going to discuss the most vital question of the day, and—"

"For my part, the question we have been discussing is vital enough for me," replied the girl with poppies in her hat, and there were tears in her eyes as she said it.—Chicago Tribune.

IF YOU WANT TO BE LOVED.

Don't find fault.

Don't contradict people, even if you are sure you are right.

Don't be inquisitive about the affairs of even your most intimate friends.

Don't underrate anything because you don't possess it.

Don't believe that everybody else in the world is happier than you.

Don't conclude that you have never had any opportunities in life.

Don't believe all the evil you hear.

Don't repeat gossip, even if it does interest a crowd.

Don't go untidy on the plea that everybody knows you.

Don't be rude to your inferiors in social position.

Don't express a positive opinion unless you perfectly understand what you are talking about.

Don't get in the habit of vulgarizing life by making light of the sentiment of it.

Don't jeer at everybody's religious beliefs.

Don't try to be anything else but a gentlewoman—and that means a woman who has consideration for the whole world and whose life is governed by the golden rule: "Do unto others as you would be done by."—Philadelphia Times.

ABOUT SHOES.

If you would have your shoes retain their pristine freshness longer than a week, do not treat them with polishes and dressings, each one of which claims to be the best and least injurious. As soon as you come in from a walk dust them carefully with a soft flannel kept for that purpose. Let them air, as you do your underclothes, and when they are dry stuff them with soft tissue paper; button or lace them over this. In this way they will keep their shape for a long time. When they are so worn that they must be brightened, rub them with a cloth and a little vaseline. Apply the grease carefully, not merely smearing it over the surface of the leather, but rubbing it in. When it is completely absorbed, rub briskly with fresh flannel. Do not wear your walking shoes in the house, and do not walk in your slippers. Keep a pair of shoes suitable for each occasion. In this way, though you may seem to have an extravagant supply, you will be really displaying an economical spirit. Shoes worn indoors and out not only soon lose their brightness and neatness, but last only about one-third as long as if they were occasionally relieved.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

"I took my boy to town the other day," said Wilkins. "We had lunch at the Delavin, and after that I took him to a matinée of 'Hamlet.'" "That's a good idea. There's education in that," said Hicks. "Was he impressed?" "Very much so," said Wilkins. "When we got home I said to him, 'Well, Willie, you've had a great day.' 'Yes,' said he. 'What did you think of "Hamlet?" said I. 'Don't know,' said he. 'But I say, pa,' he added, 'wasn't that a boss mince pie we had?'"—Harper's Bazar.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 28, 1894.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Mr. John L. Shaw will be pleased to show his Monson and Palmer friends his very attractive stock of clothing, which includes the productions of the best makers in the country. Just now a special sale of broken lines of ulsters and overcoats, with from four to six dollars off the regular selling price. George N. Norris, 325 Main street, Springfield, Mass.

W. R. Milligan, the shoe dealer, will give his customers the benefit of a few cases of ladies' rubbers at 25 cents a pair. The product of the leading companies having amounted to several thousand dollars also enables him to supply the better grades of rubber boots and shoes to those who prefer them. The exact number of the shoe buttons was 553. That number being guessed by Miss Eliza Watkinson, of Palmer, won her the ladies' gold watch.

CHRISTMAS AT THE CHURCHES.

Services Commemorative of the Day at the various places of Worship.

BAPTIST.

At the Baptist church Sunday morning Rev. J. H. MacDonald of Newton Center spoke from Rev. 5:12:

Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

The appropriateness of this text for the Christmas season was made apparent as the preacher developed his theme: "The worthiness of Christ to receive our choicest gifts" The speaker, as he sought to show the true standard of worthiness, contrasted the life of the Galilean prophet with that of the brilliant Napoleon Bonaparte. The latter set out with the motto "The world shall serve me," and to carry out his cherished design of reaching the height of never dying fame he permitted nothing to stand in his way; but during his meditative days on the wave-washed island of St. Helena he felt that such a life was unworthy even of his own approbation. Jesus Christ, on the other hand, came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and so it is that he is worthy of the praise and adoration of both men and angels. The world—unthinking, as it is sometimes called—is fast arising to the appreciation of this standard. The man who lives only for himself is coming to be regarded as nothing less than a veritable Scrooge, whatever his accumulative genius may be; and he alone is truly worthy who, following the example of his Master, sacrifices himself upon the altar of God and humanity. Whenever and wherever this spirit of self-sacrifice is found there instinctively arises within us a desire to give; but it is only when we see Christ in the supreme act of self-sacrifice upon the cross that we are constrained to give him the most acceptable of all gifts—ourselves. This is the origin of the festive nature of our Christmas observances, Whence comes the desire at this season to think not of ourselves, but of others? It is because the Christian world has caught the spirit of Him whose birth the day commemorates, who came to Bethlehem's Khan a poor and helpless babe that we through his poverty might become rich. This, too, is the secret of Christmas joy, because everyone, young and old, has ceased for the time being to think of himself "but everyone upon the things of others." Mr. MacDonald closed by wishing his hearers a glad Christmas. Give to the Lamb slain your power, riches, wisdom, strength, honor, glory and blessing, and so every day shall become a Christmas day, a day of peace on earth and good will to men.

In the evening the children of the Sunday school gave a concert which was largely attended and much enjoyed, the speaking and singing being excellent. Tuesday evening there was a Christmas tree for all, and numerous presents were distributed.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Mr. Jenkins's subject Sunday morning was "Christ's Coming Victory," his text being Rev. xi: 15, the revised version:

And the seventh angel sounded; and there followed great voices in heaven, and they said. The kingd-m of the World is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever.

In this text we are looking through the eye of the inspired Apostle at things yet to be. The birth of Christ was the culmination of the past. Upon Him the various lines of human history focused. The Jewish nation was that He might be produced and the ideas made ready so that His teaching and works could be understood. The gentiles produced language, government and other conditions for His coming. From the life of Christ have proceeded the great forces of modern civilization. What went before culminated in Him, but what came and is to come after of human progress and development has its impulse from Him. It is clearly declared in the Bible that Christs' victory over the world is finally to be complete. Many problems confront us. Our social order is not satisfactory. It is to be changed and the change will come in one of two ways—by revolution and the sweeping away of the present order and the substitution of a new, or by the development of the best things in the present system and the sloughing off the evil elements in it. If the best elements are to be developed into a new and higher social order they will be Christian elements and a Christian world will be the result. But if revolution is to come, whenever society shall be reëstablished according to its highest possibilities, the result can be nothing less than a Christian world. Whether it takes a thousand or ten thousand years to make it, this is to become a Christian world. The sermon on the mount is to be in every human constitution. The corruption of politics and of all present things is and the selfishness that now obtain are to be replaced by righteousness and the law of love—love to God as supreme, and love of neighbor as of self. Moreover Christ is to return visibly to this earth and reign over it in person. This is the clear and definite teaching of the Bible. There is to be a millennium of the complete victory of the gospel. Christians differ in their interpretation of prophecy as to the relation of the second coming of Christ and the millennium—some claiming that He will come before the victory of the gospel to give it greater efficacy; while others think that the gospel, as the power of God unto salvation, is powerful enough to convert the world and will do so, and that Christ will come in visible person after its millennium of victory. It matters not what is the Christian's interpretation of this point if he let the gospel have full play in his heart and life. Within a few years we all shall go to Christ, if he does not come to us, to give account of our way of treating His commission to give the gospel to all we can. We don't know but he may come in our day, we do not know that he will come for ten thousand years yet. The Apostles believed they were living in the "last time," and they were; so are we; so will be the generations to follow us as long as they come and go on the earth. The "last time" began with Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit first made the gospel effective, and there will be no new gospel dispensation. We are in the final period of the history of God's earthly kingdom, and we know nothing of its destined length, neither do the angels in heaven know. We celebrate to-day the birth of the world's final victor. To Christ at once, if you would have your life count in the final makeup of humanity.

In the evening the double quartette, assisted by a large chorus, gave the cantata of "Samuel" to a large audience, every seat in the audience room being filled. The rehearsals were in charge of H. W. McGregory, to whom great credit is due. Many have expressed a wish to hear the cantata again at an early date. Monday evening the members of the Sunday school were given a supper in the vestry of the church, after which the children gave a short entertainment, and an old-fashioned wind mill ground out a package of candy and pop-corn for each child.

UNIVERSALIST.

At St. Paul's church Rev. H. F. Moulton spoke Sunday morning from Luke ii: 11, and John viii: 11:

Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior which is Christ the Lord.

And Jesus said unto her, neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more.

This morning we cannot do better than to meditate on the question, "What absolution is there from sin?" It is sometimes stated by pessimistic persons that sin cannot be overcome. Christ was not a pessimist, but an optimist. He was conscious of the awfulness of sin; He wept over its cruelty and destructiveness. Yet He knew that there was a sure absolution for it. This absolution was not sacrificial nor priestly; it is simply this, "Go and sin no more." Perhaps some of you are saying, "That will be an easy thing to do." But will it be an easy thing for us to "go and sin no more?" Absolution from individual sins is found by obedience to the Master's words. Jesus does not say: Go and sin a little less, nor go and commit different sins. He commands us to immediately pause in our sinfulness and never commence again. If you are indulging an excessive appetite or passion, indulge them no more; if you are gossiping about your neighbor, gossip no more; if you are selfish, be selfish no more. If you have wronged another you continue to wrong him or her until you confess. Any evil of our past that is not in some way repaired is a continuous evil. "Go and sin no more" means that we shall stop in so far as we can the effects of past sins as well as immediately ceasing from present sins. Absolution from the sins of our vocation life comes by giving due heed to the words of the Saviour. Suppose every man and woman should obey them as they go to and fro, and as they work in their several vocations to-morrow morning. Oh, the change that it would bring about. Then the kingdom for which we work and pray would exist not in a spiritual anticipation, but in a spiritual participation between seller and buyer, master and servant. This ideal can be hastened by us. Christianity if it means anything means sixteen ounces to the pound, three feet to the yard; a just weight and just measure. It means honesty in all dealings, purity in conversation, a charity as broad as the race, unflinching integrity, sympathy, humanity to man loyalty to God. Absolution from sin in our society will come about by obeying the words of the Son of Man. We do not set free society from sin by locking criminals in prisons, nor by driving evildoers from a village or city. If we are to free our society from the criminal or the evil doer, we must remove the thing or things of our environment which make them or grow them. If we truly wish society absolved from evil, we can never be content under the power of sinful politics, nor tolerate sin any more among the wealthy than we do among the poor, nor show sin any favors by vote, or influence, or indifference. Listen this Christmas Sunday to the Master's words, "Go and sin no more." May they ring and echo through the corridors of our minds and hearts until they shall arouse us to redeem our better self from sinfulness, so that your life and my life may render the music of truth and love in harmony with that truth and love which is infinite, eternal and enduring.

Monday evening the children of the Sunday school had their distribution of presents, which took place this time from an old-fashioned fireplace, about which were grouped evergreen trees.

CATHOLIC.

Christmas was observed at St. Thomas's church Tuesday with low mass at 8 o'clock, during which the children's choir rendered very sweetly the hymns appropriate to the feast. At 9 o'clock a special mass was offered for the class of first communicants. The high mass at 11 o'clock was celebrated by Rev. Fr. Donoghue. At this mass, as well as at the vesper service in the evening, the music, a programme of which appeared in last week's JOURNAL, was especially well executed. At each of the morning services a sermon calling attention to the lessons of the day was preached by the rector. No attempt was made at elaborate display, but the altar decorations, for the beauty of which this church is noted, were perhaps even more elegant than usual.

PEOPLE'S.

Elder Francis of Sing Sing, N.Y., preached a stirring sermon Sunday morning, taking for his text the story of the prodigal son. Monday evening the Sunday school of the church had a concert and Christmas tree at the house of G. W. Camp on Park street.

Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Bodfish spent Christmas with relatives in Clinton.

Rev. T. J. Sullivan of Uxbridge, formerly rector of St. Thomas's Catholic church, was in town yesterday.

The mill of the Palmer Carpet Company is to be connected with the telephone exchange as soon as an instrument can be put in.

D. L. Bodfish is displaying in his show window some elegant specimens of Mexican drawn work, hand-made, done in Mexico.

The annual meeting of the Second Congregational church will be held next Thursday night, and all members are requested to be present.

The week commencing January 6th will be observed as a week of prayer at St. Paul's Universalist church, with services every evening.

O. P. Allen has a handsome doll in his show window which he will give away to some customer on St. Valentine's Day, February 14th.

G. F. Erskine of Malden, a former resident of Palmer, and wife have been spending the week in town, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Randall.

Friends of Dr. W. H. Stowe will be glad to learn that he is much better, and that the prospects for seeing him on the street once more are good.

Alice A. Young, who was sent to the house of correction from Palmer a short time ago for drunkenness, has been pardoned by the county commissioners.

The Betts Fencing Company is contemplating the offering of several hundred dollars in prizes for colt stake races, the meeting to be held some time in the fall.

The Sunday school of St. Paul's Universalist church will hold next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock a Christmas service, "Ring, Happy Bells, Across the Snow."

W. E. Breckenridge is home from Haverford, Pa., for the Christmas vacation, but has been unfortunate enough to be confined to the house by sickness the entire week.

The Pauline Brotherhood will meet next Wednesday evening at 7.30, in the chapel of St. Paul's Universalist church, when the social reform discussion will be continued.

Mr. and Mrs. Luther P. Gager of Coventry, Ct., celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage Monday evening at the home of their son, L. H. Gager, on Foster avenue.

Last Saturday the last of the special merchants excursion trains to the other villages were run, and were well patronized. The merchants as a whole report an excellent holiday trade, better than for some years before.

Matthew Kelliher, who was stricken with apoplexy at the shop of the Rogers-Osgood Hat Co. Thursday noon of last week, died at his home about 8 o'clock Saturday morning without having regained consciousness. He was about 52 years of age.

By vote of the town all taxes must be paid on or before January 1st, which is next Tuesday. The collector has no authority to extend the time, and any who have not attended to the matter on the above date must not blame the collector for using the law, as it is his duty then to do so.

Miss Addie Rogers, a former teacher in the grammar school in this village, from which she went to a school in Springfield, has resigned her position there and accepted one in Albany Academy at Albany, N. Y., where she gets an advance of $150 in salary. She will begin her work there next Tuesday.

The Odd Fellows elected these officers at their meeting Wednesday evening: N. G., M. M. Thomas; V. G., Lewis R. Holden; recording secretary, G. H. Bray; treasurer, C. T. Brainerd; permanent secretary, L. G. Parkhurst. They will be installed next Wednesday evening, when the remaining officers will be appointed.

The driven well which Mrs. Maria Lawrence has had sunk on her land at the head of School street is completed, and has proved as successful as was hoped for. Rock was struck at a depth of 12 feet, and then 52 feet was drilled through. An abundant supply of the best of cold water has been struck, the yield being about 3000 gallons per day.

Fitz Henry Pebbles, who drove the Palmer and Stafford Springs stage for years, and afterwards the Palmer and Southbridge stage, died at his home in Floyd township, Ill., last Saturday after a long and painful sickness. The deceased came from Hardwick or vicinity, and was well known in Palmer, Monson, Brimfield, Stafford, Fiskdale, Sturbridge and Southbridge.

Rufus Flynt has engaged Syer Johnson to take charge of his recently-purchased Wellman farm east of the village, and will raise stock, poultry, etc. Among other things he will engage in the breeding of Shetland ponies, believing that they can be successfully raised here. He bought several head, but sold all but one again, retaining a handsome mare which has taken first prize wherever exhibited.

At the meeting of the Quaboag Literary Circle this evening there will be a reading by Miss Bessie Royce, Mrs. W. A. Lawson will read the selections of the Round Table, Rufus Stimpson will present a short paper, and F. B. Pope will give the historical essay, entitled, "England during the Norman Conquest." The Circle is studying English history this winter, and much interest is shown. The public is invited to attend.

Miss Bessie Royce entertained a party of 25 young people at her home on Central street Wednesday evening, and a right royal time is reported by those present. The first part of the evening's programme was a dumb conversation, in which all questions and answers were for ten minutes written on paper. Each was then required to draw—blindfolded—the best resemblance possible to a pig, with prizes for the most correct and most remote likenesses. Then came a floral enigma, in which the requirements were to pick out the names of flowers in a dozen printed sentences. Refreshments, whist and dancing followed.

The man who can stand this New England climate need have no fear for his constitution in any part of the globe. Monday morning the mercury was down to zero; Monday night it had moderated materially, and before morning considerable rain had fallen, the mercury Tuesday being among the 40's at daylight. Wednesday morning it was down to 12 again, and Wednesday night a blizzard raged. This morning the mercury was 4° below zero, and the weather bureau announces a still further drop of 20 degrees before to-morrow morning. It takes a pretty tough individual to keep out of the doctor's clutches at these times, and an extensive wardrobe for adaptation to all the variations of temperature liable to be visited upon a community in a week.

John Morrisey of Pittsfield came before the district court Saturday morning charged with drunkenness. He had started from the soldiers' home in Taugus, Me., for Pittsfield, on a furlough of two weeks. When he started his pockets contained his furlough, a pass to Pittsfield and back, and $4. At Boston he visited a saloon near the station and laid in a supply of Christmas cheer, so much that when he finally got on the train his pockets were empty. Officer Studley happened to be on the train, and Morrisey was turned over to him. The court imposed a fine of $2, which was paid by a Palmer Grand Army comrade, who also furnished him with a ticket to Pittsfield. Charles D. Colburn of Palmer was up Monday charged with drunkenness, and his case was continued until next Monday. Carl Gustafson of Monson paid $5 Wednesday morning for drunkenness.

The storm of Wednesday night and yesterday morning caused a much greater delay to trains than is usual for so light a snowfall. About 7 inches of snow fell in this locality, but it was of a dry, mealy nature, which prevented its packing. This resulted in the snow which was thrown off the tracks falling back onto them again, so that the passage of a train did nothing toward opening the road for others. On the Boston and Albany railroad all trains which stop in Palmer were from 10 to 20 minutes late. The train from the west which is due in Palmer at 1.20 p. m. was about 6 hours late, on account of the greater severity of the storm to the westward. On the New London Northern road the noon train was about 30 minutes late, the other trains being nearly on time. The snow plow was run out over this road early in the day, but no plows were run on the Boston and Albany main line or the Ware River branch. The stages came in on runners, and were but little inconvenienced by the storm. Wires were not disturbed, and no local damage of any account has been reported.

State Primary School Notes.

Rev. J. H. MacDonald spoke to the children last Sunday.

Miss Minnie Moore has resigned her position at the school.

F. U. Wetmore is spending a few days with friends in Boston.

Nelson Kempton, the night watchman, is spending the week in Boston.

S. B. Keith, formerly employed at the school, is acting as supervisor during F. U. Wetmore's absence in Boston.

Christmas passed off very pleasantly at the school. The dinner consisted of roast turkey, vegetables, and cracker pudding. In the afternoon the children all assembled in the chapel to await the coming of Santa Claus, who for some reason did not appear, but left numerous games, harmonicas, and mittens for all. Among other things 125 pounds of turkey, 40 pounds of candy and half a bushel of peanuts were consumed during the day.

BONDSVILLE.

Amos Slate of Springfield is visiting his grandparents.

Henry Harton spent Christmas with his sister in Worcester.

Charles Holden of Albany is spending his vacation with his parents.

The Methodists had a Christmas tree and concert Monday night at the church.

Mrs. C. E. Getchell is spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs in Thorndike.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Morse of Belchertown spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Collis.

Mrs. Louis Gaboury and child are spending a few weeks with her parents in Millbury.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Squier of Amherst are visiting her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Ryther.

Richie Russell of Indian Orchard spent Christmas with his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Russell.

Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy and daughter Ella of Ware were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bruce, Christmas.

Miss Maggie Bruce took the first prize for essay work at the close of school, two volumes of Emerson's works.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Holden had a reunion of their children and grandchildren Christmas. Their was four generations present.

The Jones Brothers, who are to open a bakery here, have just had their oven finished and will soon be running their shop.

Bert Sedgwick of New Haven, and Otis Sedgwick of Andover Academy, are spending the holidays with their father, Butler Sedgwick.

Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Woods and child of Chicopee Falls, spent Christmas with Mrs. Woods's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Holden.

The body of Erastus Washburn, who formerly lived in Three Rivers, and died at the Northampton retreat for the insane, was brought here for burial at the Four Corners Monday.

The W. C. T. U. will meet next Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock with Mrs. O. A. Parent, to elect new officers for the coming year. Mrs. C. E. Getchell, who has been secretary and treasurer for a number of years, has resigned. Mrs. F. J. Hale has presented Mrs. Getchell with a jewel box in behalf of the W. C. T. U. as a token of their esteem for her.

Misses Barney, Thayer and Shea had Christmas trees in their schools for their children Friday, and each child had candy, oranges, nuts and pop corn. It was a surprise to the little ones, and they showed it in their looks as well as in their thanks. The teachers were well paid on seeing the pleasure it gave the children. Through the kindness of Charles Fuller the trees were got, for them.

THREE RIVERS.

Mr. Judd of Amherst has taken a position in the Palmer Mill office.

Charles Hough spent a part of this week in new Haven, visiting relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Johnson of Lynn spent a part of the week with their parents here.

Miss Fannie Barnes of Northfield Seminary is spending this week with her parents in town.

The A. O. U. W. will hold a special meeting next Monday evening, for the purpose of electing officers.

Miss Alice Sikes of the Republican office, Springfield, spent Christmas with her parents at this place.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stebbins of New Haven spent the Christmas holidays with Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins of this place.

Rev. E. C. Weeks will preach next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings, short practical sermons in the vestry of the Baptist church.

Mr. Casey of Springfield, who has been giving a few young men lessons on the violin during the winter months, has now a class of six in this place.

Mr. and Mrs. Crossman and sons, Harry and Leslie, and Miss Hattie Kendrick, all of Springfield, spent Christmas day with Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Kendrick.

As Miss Maggie Gates was walking to the mill yesterday morning she had the misfortune to fall and injure her head, but Dr. Bouley thinks she will recover after a few days.

James Milliken of Lawrence, a former resident of this place and an assistant superintendant of the Palmer mill, has been promoted to the agency of a large cotton mill, at a salary of $7000.

Rev. Isaac LaFleur will occupy the pulpit of the Baptist church next Sunday, morning and evening. It will be remembered that Mr. LaFleur held a French gospel service on the common in this village last summer. He is a preacher of power of both Engiish and French. He will be the guest of Mr. White over Sunday.

There will be a union watch night service at the Baptist church next Monday night. Addresses will be given by Rev. M. Butler, Rev. Mr. Wecks and others. Mr. Scruby will give a Bible reading on the "Speedy Coming of Christ," during the evening. Everybody should hear Mr. Scruby. All the addresses will be interesting.

The Christmas-tree party at the Union church Tuesday evening was a gathering which was thoroughly enjoyable to all present. Two trees were loaded with useful and valuable presents, the choir furnished some excellent music, and the children gave creditable recitations. The evening was most happily spent, and the little ones wished that Santa Claus would come often.

The children of the Raptist Sunday school held their annual Christmas festival and concert Monday evening in the vestry. Two Christmas trees were arranged each side of the platform, and were filled with presents for the friends of the church. Many of the presents were handsome and useful. The pastor's family was very kindly remembered; Pastor Weeks received a handsome sum of money, and Mrs. Weeks and the children received many useful articles. When the pastor's family reached home after the concert they found a barrel of flour standing against the kitchen door, which Santa Claus had left while the family were at the church. The concert was most excellent, though the programme was short. The recitations were well given by the children, and the singing was good. The success of this Christmas entertainment shows the peace and harmony now prevailing in both church and Sunday school Pastor Weeks has a large place in the hearts of his people.

Last Monday a woman with a baby alighted from one of the Springfield trains at the Athol station, and after she had wandered around the station for some time George Orcutt, the station agent, asked her if she was waiting for any person, upon which she replied that she was waiting for her husband, whom she represented to be one Charles Wilson, who worked in the mill. Accordingly Mr. Orcutt made inquiries, but found that there was no person working in the mill who would answer her description. The woman and child being in a fatigued condition, were conveyed to the Company's boarding house and left in charge of Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Kendrick. After she had partaken of refreshments Mr. Kendrick asked her where she came from, and she replied that she had come from Junction City, Kansas, and that her husband was one of the strikers in the Pullman trouble last summer. This aroused suspicion, and on being further questioned the inconsistency of her statements satisfied Mr. Kendrick that the woman was an imposter. He then telephoned to the chief of police at Springfield in regard to the woman who imposed herself on many of the citizens there as Mrs. Phelps a short time ago, and found that the description given was identical with his protegé. Mr. Kendrick then sent for the overseers of the poor, who recognized her as belonging at the town farm in Ware.

THORNDIKE.

Miss Katie Evans is home from New York for the holidays.

Henry Obier of New Haven was the guest of his parents over Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Kendall spent Christmas with friends in Connecticut.

Christmas passed off very quietly. The merchants all report a good trade.

Dr. Desauterack has opened an office at the residence of C. Bouthillier on Church street.

Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Thomas and Arthur Johnson spent Christmas with friends in Holyoke.

Peter Phanneff, a former resident of this place, now of Manville, R. I., is visiting his brother, Frank Phanneff.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Sugrue are receiving contratulations on the birth of a daughter, which arrived on Monday.

Several from this place will attend the entertainment and dance to be given at West Warren next Friday evening.

The staging has been removed from the handsome new brick chimney which has just been built by the Thorndike Co.

Mr. and Mrs. James Mitchell and family of Hazardville are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wright of Palmer Center.

James Byars of New York state, formerly of this place, was in town recently for a few days as the guest of John Bedford of Church street.

Miss Moffatt, teacher in the intermediate school, was presented with a handsome plush toilet case on Friday last by her scholars.

Thomas Chapman, a former resident, has returned to town and has accepted a position in the No. 2 mill weaving department in place of L. Foster, resigned.

Mrs. Frank Breard of Orange, a former resident of this town, is reported as being very ill at her home in the former place, and her recovery is said to be doubtful.

The rink will be opened to-morrow evening for skating and dancing, by the Columbian band, which will continue to open it Saturday evenings throughout the season until 11 o'clock.

Michael Fleming, an old resident of this place, and a member of the G. A. R. post of Palmer, was taken very ill on Tuesday with a hemorrhage. His condition at this writing is somewhat better.

Miss Katie Sullivan of West Warren, whose home is in this place, was united in marriage on Wednesday to Henry Abbott of Warren. May Sullivan, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and James Cronin was best man.

Louis Robison and Miss Elena LeHoullier, both of this place, were united in marriage on Wednesday morning by Rev. Father Marchand of St. Anne's church. Frank Robison, brother of the groom, was best man, and Miss Gebo was bridesmaid.

The goods which have been made in the mills here and stored, amounting to about 2000 cases, were sold at auction last week, together with about three weeks production of unmanufactured goods. The sale of the Otis Company's production brought in the neighborhood of two million dollars.

The Christmas tree exercises which were held at the Congregational church on Tuesday evening were largely attended and much enjoyed. Previous to the exercises supper was served to the children in the vestry of the church, and the little ones did ample justice to the spread. The supper was given by the kindness of the King's Daughters.

Joseph Shields, a lad of 15, while skating on the lower dam on Monday broke through the ice and had it not been for the prompt assistance rendered him by two other companions he would in all probability have drowned. Daniel Connors, a boy about the same age, had a similar experience on Monday afternoon, breaking through the ice on "Forest Lake," but was finally rescued.

At home for Christmas—Isaac Gerald from Providence, R. I.; John Prendiville from Fitchburg; Mr. and Mrs. Dorothy from Holyoke; Mr. and Mrs. McCusker of Jewett City, Ct.; Miss Maggie Thornton of Ware; Daniel Hartnett from Connecticut; Katie McCarthy from Woonsocket, R. I.; Maurice F. Kelliher from Amherst; Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Lyons from Springfield.

The following officers were elected on Wednesday evening by Court Hampden, Order of Foresters: M. E. Keefe, P. C. R.; C. L. McCarty, C. R.; George Hutchinson, S. C. R.; P. McKelligett, R. S.; D. F. Sullivan, F. S.; John Donovan, treasurer; William Murphy, S. W.; William Gerald, J. W.; E. Longtine, S. B.; M. Hurley, J. B.; John Broshnan, trustee for three years; Dr. Desmarais, surgeon.

Court Hampden, Order of Foresters of this place, will give their second annual concert and ball at Union Hall Friday evening, Feb. 8th, and will make it one of the social affairs of the season. Bird's orchestra of Marlboro, 11 pieces, has been engaged to furnish the music, and Frank B. Proctor will prompt. The committee of arrangements is C. L. McCarty, M. E. Keefe, H. Messia, John Donovan, D. F. Sullivan.

The members of the Columbian Band showed their appreciation of their leader, Mr. Malcomb McKenzie, last evening by sending for him to come to the Hotel Clinton, where he was met by the boys and presented with $50 as a work of their esteem. The whole affair was kept so quiet that it was a genuine surprise. Mr. Williams made the presentation, after which all sat down to one of Landlord Clifford's fine turkey suppers, and to say that justice was done the spread would be putting it mild. A general good time prevailed. The evening was spent in music, singing, etc.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.

To the heirs at law, next of kin, creditors, and all other persons interested in the estate of Elisha W. Marcy, late of Holland, in said county, deceased, intestate.

Whereas, a petition has been presented to said Court to grant a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased to Sarah A. Marcy of Holland, in said County of Hampden, without giving a surety on her bond.

You are hereby cited to appear at a probate court to be held at Springfield, in said County of Hampden, on the sixth day of February, A. D. 1895, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be granted.

And the petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once in each week, for three successive weeks in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published in Palmer, in said county, the last publication to be one day at least before said court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said court, this twenty-sixth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four.

"Dick," the finest monkey at Flynt Park, died Wednesday.

Miss Lillian Brown is spending the week with her parents in Ware.

Prof. Edward L. Morris is home for the holidays from Amherst College.

There were an unusual number of family gatherings in town Christmas day.

Mr. H. G. Kimball of Boston spent Christmas at the residence of Rev. F. S. Hatch.

Miss May Wales is home for the holidays from the Slater Art school at Norwich, Ct.

Misses Clara A. and Edith L. Wood have been at their home in Springfield for a week.

A sunrise prayer meeting will be held in the Congregational church New Year's morning.

Fernando Strong and family of Willimantic spent Christmas with Mrs. Harriet Fenton.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Newton spent Sunday with their son Warren at West Upton.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Noble and child of Pittsfield are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Minnie Noble.

Miss White of Amherst has been spending a few days at Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Newton's.

Harry C. McMaster of Allston was the guest of Mrs. Mary A. Gage from Saturday till Wednesday.

Arthur T. Robinson and Harry Merchant are home for the week from the Albany Medical College.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Bradway and child have been spending the week with Mrs. M. Jennie Bradway.

Mr. and Mrs. William N. Flynt have spent the week with Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. King in Springfield.

Edwin White of Springfield spent Christmas with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton White.

William Manning has resigned his position with R. M. Reynolds, and is at present taking a vacation.

The annual hand book for 1895, issued by the Congregational church, will be ready for distribution Sunday.

George Knowlton of Worcester spent a part of the week with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin D. Knowlton.

The pastor of the Congregational church will preach Sunday morning a sermon appropriate to the closing year.

Dr. A. D. Coleman and Herbert Shaw, who are home from the Philadelphia Dental College, will return to their studies next Thursday.

Measles are prevalent. Among the latest victims are the entire family of James Savage, William Nason and Miss Bertha Underwood.

Rev. James H. Tufts of Chicago University gave an interesting talk to the Spencer class Wednesday evening on the subject of "Knowledge."

Tickets are on sale at Keeney's drug store for the concert of the Fiske Jubilee Singers, which is to occur in the town hall next Wednesday evening.

Fred Hall spent Christmas with Mr. and Mrs. Josiah B. Davis. Solomon Squier and Mr. Hall caught a fine string of pickerel Christmas day.

"Where is your husband?" a caller inquired, and the wife replied: "I think he is in the lock-up." And it proved true, for it was his business to attend to tramps.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church will be held in the church next Thursday evening. The programme includes supper, annual reports and election of officers.

The Young People's Society of the Universalist church have been invited to attend a reception at the residence of Mrs. William Ricketts this evening, and a large number of them will accept.

Park avenue lots are selling well.

Solomon T. Cushman, Sr., has bought the five which border on the river. Four cellars have been dug on the avenue, and J. W. Lambert is putting in the foundation for a barn.

An entertainment for the benefit of St. Patrick's church will be given in Memorial Hall next Monday evening, when the Fitzpatrick family of Chicago will render a pleasing programme of bell-ringing, singing and character representations, closing with the unique commedietta, "That Burglar."

Monson Lodge, No. 210, I. O. O. F., elected the following officers at the meeting last evening: Noble grand, George W. Adams; vice grand, Harrison Howe; recording secretary, John Cross; treasurer, A. A. Babbitt; permanent secretary, Charles F. Aldrich; past grand, E. H. Graves; trustee for three years, Charles F. Hathaway.

Heimann & Lichten have commenced running their straw shop 10 hours daily. There has been some talk recently in Monson that work in the shops and mills was slack. The fact that Heimann & Lichten are running longer hours, and that some of the employes of Cushman's mill were asked to work Christmas day, does not look like a decrease in business.

The water works are nearly completed, although there remains some work at the well, and quite an extensive job at the quarry, where about 100 yards of solid rock must be penetrated by the pipe. The Italians had another grand spree at camp Sunday night, which wound up with a fight, in which several of the men were injured, none of them seriously, however.

Christmas was celebrated at the churches in an appropriate manner, with suitable entertainments for the children. At the Congregational church there was a Brownie carnival, the arrangements being under the management of E. F. Morris. Each of the children received a Brownie, with some other present. At the Methodist church there were three trees and a Santa Claus, while the Universalist church had three representations of Santa. The platform of the latter church was decorated to represent an old-fashioned room, with the fireplace and just such a chimney as Santa loves to find.

The funeral of Mrs. Laura L. Cushman, aged 67, was held at her late residence Thursday afternoon at 2.30. Mrs. Cushman was the wife of Leonard G. Cushman, and mother of George Cushman and Mrs. William Young. Mrs. Cushman's death was very sudden. Some time ago she sustained a paralytic shock, from the effects of which she apparently recovered. Monday evening at 4 o'clock she was found sitting in her chair, and it was evident that she had suffered another shock. She was unconscious when found, and did not regain consciousness before her death, which occurred Tuesday morning. Mrs. Cushman was an old and much respected resident of Monson, and her sudden death is deeply deplored. The funeral was well attended in spite of the unfavorable weather, Rev. F. S. Hatch officiating.

The Park Avenue Association have sold fourteen building lots since Nov. 1st, the time when its land was plotted. There are now only seven lots left, which undoubtedly will be taken before spring, and a busy time is looked for the coming season. Hynes Brothers already have the foundation in for two dwellings which they hope to get ready for occupancy by the first of April. It is probable that the shareholders will receive $5 per share Jan. first on their investment. John T. Casey bought yesterday for $225 the building lot on the corner of Park avenue and Western avenue, and will erect a dwelling home thereon the coming season.

William N. Flynt has fitted up the basement of the museum at Flynt Park into an old-fashioned kitchen and bedroom. In the kitchen is a fire-place, and a fire is kept burning all the time. Quaint old chairs, a spinning wheel, etc., are scattered about the room. On the wall hangs an ancient gun and an almanac. In the bedroom is an old-fashioned canopy bed, with the traditional trundle bed which slides underneath it. The effect of the whole is very pleasing, and reminds one of the good old times of which grandmother tells. A gallery is also to be added to the museum.

Marcus Keep Post, Woman's Relief Corps, is planning a sale to take place in February or March. The sale will be held in Memorial Hall, and will be accompanied by an entertainment. A supper will be served in Grand Army Hall. The proceeds are to be given to Marcus Keep Post for the purchase of a flag, which is sadly needed, the one now in use being badly worn. At a meeting of the corps Wednesday evening two ladies were initiated. Mrs. Susan E. Thrall read the following list of committees: Executive, Mrs. W. Lander Rood, Mrs. Julius N. Graves, Mrs. Herbert M. Smith; Mrs. Harriet Fenton, Mrs. George A. Harvey; relief, Mrs. Sarah L. Warren, Mrs. Eugene S. Howlett, Mrs. Charles Abbott, Mrs. M. Jennie Bradway, Mrs. George W. Seymour; auditing, Mrs. John Cross, Miss Mary A. Fuller, Miss Addie J. Davis; conference, Miss Lizzie Lull, Miss Mary J. Gage, Mrs. John C. Aldrich, Mrs. George M. Severy; home employment, Mrs. Robert L. Williams, Mrs. Juliette Needham, Mrs. Hannah Darling, Mrs. Nellie Maguire, Miss Hattie Bartlett. The next meeting of the corps will be held Jan. 9th, when the newly-elected officers will be installed. Mrs. Davis of Palmer, who was invited to install the officers, has been obliged to decline.

WEST WARREN.

A little daughter of John Miller was run over by a team Monday. She was attempting to cross the street in front of a passing team and fell down. She was badly cut and bruised about the head and neck, but her injuries are not considered dangerous.

The Sunday school of the Methodist church held a Christmas festival and tree in the church Tuesday evening. The Christmas cantata, "King Winter," was also given and much enjoyed by all. The church has bought a new Estey organ for use in the vestry.

BRIMFIELD.

Miss Baker of Pawtucket, R. I., is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Emory Livermore.

The Hitchcock Free High School will begin its winter term next Tuesday.

John W. Noyes of Jamestown, Pa., is home for the holidays.

Work on the ditch for the fountain is progressing splendidly. Wednesday some of the citizens turned out and helped, the supply of tramps falling short.

F. Lincoln Peirce of Tufts, Edwin B. Allen of Vermont University, and John L. Bacon, Jr., of Philadelphia Medical College, are home for the holiday vacation.

Both churches observed Christmas with festivals Christmas Eve. The occasions are always delightful, and those of this year proved no exception.

BELCHERTOWN.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stone of Enfield spent Christmas with W. E. Bridgman.

Elmer Kendall of Ludlow is at the home of his mother, Mrs. A. L. Kendall.

Night Operator Powers of the union passenger station has left and gone to Middletown, Ct.

Harry Bridgman of Worcester is at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Bridgman.

The friends of Clarence R. Shaw will be pleased to learn that he is recovering from his long sickness.

L. M. Foskit, while getting down hay, fell from the ladder to the floor, striking on his head. His father picked him up in an unconscious condition, and he remained so for some time, but is now seemingly well enough.

WALES.

Leon Thompson of Boston spent Christmas with friends here.

Miss Dora Green of Monson spent last Sabbath with her parents.

A. A. Cobbett has a new clerk in the person of Mr. Brown of New York.

Isaac Simpson, boss spinner at the Berkeley woolen mill, has resigned.

Not an intoxicated person was seen on the streets Christmas day.

George Switzer of Springfield came home to spend Christmas with his parents.

The Baptist Sunday school held its annual service Tuesday evening, distributing presents.

Mrs. C. Gale has been confined to her bed for several days, and is in a very critical condition.

The semi-annual meeting of the Wales Savings Bank will be held next Tuesday at 2.20 p. m.

January first draws nigh, and by vote of the town last April all taxes must be paid then, or costs will be made.

The Glee Club of the School for Christian Workers of Springfield is to give another concert in the near future.

Joseph Loudon, superintendent of the Excelsior woolen mill, is having the whooping cough with his small children.

Several of the young people went to the "Interview" last Friday evening at Brimfield, and some took in the dance at Holland Monday evening.

In addition to the Cristmas trees Monday evening the Methodist Sunday school celebration of Christmas ended with an old-fashioned chicken-pie supper, and it was good.

About forty friends and neighbors made LeRoy Squier a surprise visit Saturday evening to celebrate his 55th birthday. The evening was spent in partaking of goodly viands, which were in abundance, in social chat and singing. It was a very social party, and every one present seemed happy.

WARE.

Bombard will have a car load of Canada horses to offer at his auction sale to-morrow.

There is to be a Masonic sociable next Tuesday evening, with refreshments and dancing.

Rev. W. H. Kelley, formerly of Ware, is at Burt, Iowa, where he has gone for his health.

Town Clerk Richardson has been distributing some neat calendars advertising his shoe business.

Agnes Wallace Villa in "The World Against Her," will appear at the Town Hall, next Wednesday evening.

Owing to an accident at the electric light station, the stores were deprived of incandescent lights last evening.

Albert Smith, who has been for years employed at the Otis Company's mills, is going to Chicopee to accept a similar position.

"Some Reflections on the Valve of Life" will be the subject of the sermon by Rev. V. E. Southworth next Sunday morning at the Unitarian church.

Michael Golden of West Ware died at his home early Tuesday morning of cancer of the stomach. He was greatly respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife, four daughters and a son.

There was a quiet wedding on Monday, when Daniel A. Collins and Lina M. Newcomb were married, Rev. A. B. Bassett performing the ceremony. Only the family and private friends were present.

Thomas C. Osgood, who for many years was driver of the Geo. M. Gilbert Mfg. Co's. team from Gilbertville to Ware, was in town on Saturday. He has not been here before for 16 years. He now resides at Pomfret, Ct.

Rev. A. M. Osgood will preach next Sunday in the Methodist church his third sermon on "Success Under Difficulties" series, entitled "The Victory in Defeat." The Epworth League will unite with the church in a revival service in the evening at six o'clock.

L. Guertin is advertising very extensively his grand social dance for New Year's eve. He promises one of the biggest times possible. The concert will be by the the Ware Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Prof. George Flagg, pianist.

Mrs. James O'Leary, aged 55, died suddenly at her home in Hardwick on Saturday of typhoid pneumonia. The burial was at Ware on Monday. She leaves a husband well known in Ware, four sons, one of whom is Frazier of Ware, and one daughter.

One of the pleasant Christmas gatherings was that at the residence of D. S. Kennedy on Monday night. There were a goodly company of neighbors and friends present, and an entertainment was provided of singing, recitations and readings. Presents were distributed from a well ladened tree, and refreshments were served.

There is to be a roll call meeting of the East Congregational church next Thursday evening, at which every member is expected to respond to their name by a passage of Scripture or brief testimony. There will be a supper, and the church history will be read. Any who are not able to be present are to send in their brief word to be read when their names are called.

F. R. Cunningham, with Bassett the jeweler, made a show in their window for Christmas which attracted the crowds more than any other. It was a small electric car running back and forth with a Brownie for conductor, and laden with jewelry, etc. The car was labeled "Ware, Warren and Gilbertville Electric Railroad." It is probably only a matter of time when a road will run from these points to Ware.

The annual election of officers of Ware lodge, A. O. U. W., occurred last evening, and the following were elected: Master workman, P. A. O'Leary; foreman, F. D. Gilmore; overseer, W. Whitney; recorder, O. N. Moore; financier, W. B. Eddy; receiver, J. E. Clark; guide, C. F. Hills; inside watchman, J. McCarthy; outside watchman, J. Wilson; trustee for three years, W. N. Newcomb; trustee for two years, C. F. Hills; representative to the grand lodge, G. S. Marsh; alternation. J. Chesley. It is expected that the installation will be on January 15th.

There was a large auction sale of cotton cloth at New York last week, by order of Bliss, Fabyan & Co., when goods from Ware, Warren, Palmer and other places were sold to the amount of two million dollars. The Otis Company's mills at Ware hold nearly three thousand packages of the cloth sold, awaiting orders for shipment, so the business outlook for the Otis Company's mills is good for some time to come. The business in the underwear department is also brisk, and some of the departments are working overtime to supply material to keep other departments running.

The "Giving Christmas" exercises at the East Congregational chapel proved to be a grand success. There were enough parcels and bundles to load two large tables, and among some of the larger gifts were orders for a ton of coal, cord of wood, barrel of apples, half barrel of flour, and a live rooster. After the gifts were all brought in Santa Claus, represented by F. G. Fox, assisted by a fairy, took down the chimney and fireplace and distributed the bricks, which were filled with candy and pop-corn, to the children, and a merry social time was enjoyed. The groceries and clothing brought in inventoried at $65, and there was $35 in money, all of which is to be distributed among the needy poor of the town.

Is there some one whose Christmas gift was forgotten? or do you prefer the New Year as your giving time?

There is choice enough here yet to satisfy those who missed an intended gift or two.

Everything that belongs to Christmas—dolls, toys, etc., and whatever we can spare, or partly give away without more harm than loss of money—will be sold for the next few days at what it'll fetch.

The heavy trading in linens has left us with a great many odd lots and soiled pieces of table damask, cloths, napkins, etc. We shall get these all out to-day and put condition prices on them—prices to clean them all out this week.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

What Shall I Cook To-Day?

The women of New England are loud in their praises of the practical cooking recipes which are printed every day in the Boston Daily Globe. "What shall I cook to-day?" the question that worries more women than any other, is also answered every day in the Boston Globe. The Globe prints every day a simple bill of fare, giving three meals, and will do so all through 1895. For this reason alone the Boston Daily Globe is the paper for you to take in 1895.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria

The Columbia Desk Calendar.

For ten years the desk calendar issued by the Pope Manufacturing Company has held a unique place among business helpers. Each daily leaf during that time has taught its quiet lesson of the value of better roads and outdoor exercise and especially the benefits of bicycling. The calendar for 1895, which is just issued, is even brighter than its predecessors in appearance, as clever artists have added dainty silhoutte and sketch to the usual wise and witty contributions that have heretofore given this popular calendar its charm. It can be had for five 2-cent stamps from the Pope Manufacturing Company, Hartford, Conn., or from any Columbia bicycle agency.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. TOWN OF PALMER.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—BOARD OF CATTLE COMMISSIONERS,
52 VILLAGE ST., BOSTON, Nov. 5, 1894.

To the Boards of Health and all Owners of Neat Cattle in the Counties of Nantucket, Dukes and Barnstable.

First. All the states and territories of the United States, the District of Columbia, Canada, Great Britain, and all other localities without the limits of this Commonwealth, are hereby declared infected districts.

Second. It is hereby ordered that all neat cattle brought within the limits of this Commonwealth from any of said localities on or after November 20, 1894, are hereby made subject to quarantine until they have been inspected and released by this Board or one of its members thereto duly authorized.

Third. Except as hereinafter provided no such neat cattle shall be unloaded, except in case of accident, for any purpose whatsoever within this Commonwealth, at any place or places other than at such quarantine stations as are herein designated, or which may hereafter from time to time be designated, by this Board, unless upon written permit signed by the Board of Cattle Commissioners or one of its members.

Fourth. The Union stock yards at Watertown; the Boston & Albany stock yards at Brighton and the premises of the New England Dressed Beef and Wool Company in Somerville, are hereby designated as quarantine stations.

Fifth. All neat cattle entered at any quarantine station, except as hereinafter provided, are hereby declared quarantined, and shall so remain, at the expense of the owner or consignee, for a period of not less than twenty-four hours, or until they are released by the Board of Cattle Commissioners, or one of its members, during which time they shall be subjected to the tuberculin test. This test shall be made only by the Board of Cattle Commissioners or one of its members, or a duly authorized agent thereof, and without expense to the owner.

Sixth. Every such animal which, in the opinion of this Board or any of its members, is affected with tuberculosis, will be condemned and slaughtered as provided in Sections 45 and 53 of said Chapter 491 of the Acts of 1894.

Seventh. All animals which upon such inspection shall be adjudged free from tuberculosis and other contagious disease shall be branded with the seal of the commission. This brand will be placed upon the right hip.

Eighth. All neat cattle passing through this Commonwealth, consigned from points without its limits, for exportation from this State will not be examined as herein provided, but such animals shall remain in quarantine until transported without the limits of the Commonwealth.

Ninth. All neat cattle brought within this Commonwealth consigned directly to the Brighton Abattoir for slaughter shall be confined by themselves for identification, and shall not be released except after an examination as above provided, or for immediate slaughter.

Tenth. It shall be the duty of every person or persons, corporation or corporations, desiring to drive or cause to be driven any neat cattle into this State from any point without its limits, to notify in writing the Board of Cattle Commissioners of his, their or its intention so to do, which notice shall state the town or city within this Commonwealth through which it is the intention to enter, and the time when the drove will arrive within such city or town. After crossing the border all such cattle are hereby declared quarantined upon premises which shall be defined in the permit, within the limits of such city or town, at the expense of the owner or consignee, and shall there remain until they have been examined and branded, or destroyed, as hereinbefore provided. No neat cattle shall be driven within this State from any point without its limits, except as herein provided.

Eleventh. All neat cattle branded as herein provided shall be free to all markets in this Commonwealth.

Twelfth. No person shall sell or offer for sale, or have in his possession, except under quarantine, within the stock yards in Brighton, Watertown or Somerville, any neat cattle which are not branded as provided for in section 7, except as provided in sections 8 and 9 of this order.

Thirteenth. It is further ordered that a copy of this order shall be sent to each city and town throughout the Commonwealth, and that every town shall cause a copy thereof to be posted in two or more conspicuous places within its limits, and shall cause a copy of the same to be published once a week for three successive weeks in a newspaper published therein, or if no newspaper be published within the limits of said town, then in a newspaper published within said county; and that each such city shall cause a copy of the same to be published twice a week for three successive weeks in a newspaper published within its limits.

Fourteenth. This order shall take effect upon November 20, 1894.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the next of kin and all other persons interested in John Moriarty and Denis Moriarty, both of Monson in said County of Hampden, minors.

Whereas, a petition has been presented to said court by John W. Fay of Palmer in the County of Hampden, praying for the appointment of himself or some other suitable person, as guardian of said minors.

You are hereby cited to appear at a probate court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the second day of January, A. D. 1895, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a guardian should not be appointed as aforesaid.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, to the next of kin of said minors, and others interested, by publishing this citation once in each week, for three successive weeks, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published in said Palmer, the last publication to be one day at least before said court, or by delivering a copy thereof to the said next of kin at least seven days before said court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this eleventh day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninty-four.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home."

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. Va. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure.

Any one who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope, and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cent bottles.

The above remedies are for sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer; Charles E. Mason, Three Rivers; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; G. L. Keeney, Monson; John D. Smith, Ware.

The Modern Schoolma'am.

Her work in life was teaching, her profundity far reaching,
She had learning in her attitudes and knowledge in her hair;
Her brain cells were all prisms, she had ologies and isms,
With a manner most impressive and deportment debonair.
Her gaze was all discerning, irreproachable her learning,
She had patience by the quantity and uses for it all;
Of the odds and ends much needed, so often little heeded,
She had tons on shelves of memory responsive to her call.
Her pupils numbered fifty—all wigglesome and shifty,
Small pirates yet uncurried, often roughened in home huts;
Their natural depravity and scarcity of gravity,
Was equalled only by their way of running in the ruts.
There were kinds in vexing number, in their brains much mental lumber,
Which the patient little pedagogue must change or clear away;
They had to be restricted, restrained and interdicted,
Or change to little backsliders four hundred times a day.
Despite their motions Simian, and tendencies Darwinian,
She modelled them successfully to polished girls and boys;
Though mischievous and lippy, aggravoking and parsnippy,
She toned their up-and-downishness to average equipoise.
For all this wear and worry, high pressure and much hurry,
You'd think she had the salary which good mechanics clear;
But being a sage in knowledge, a perambulating college,
With all the virtues added brought—besides the frequent tear—
For all these varnished scholars, but just four hundred dollars,
The sum and substance of her pay for all the weary year.

To each man's life there comes a time supreme,
One day, one night, one morning or one noon,
One frightened hour, one moment opportune,
One rift through which sublime fulfillments gleam,
One space when fate goes tiding with the stream,
One once, in balance 'twixt Too Late, Too Soon,
And ready for the passing instant's boon
To tip in favor the uncertain beam.
Ah, happy he who, knowing how to wait,
Knows also how to watch and work and stand
On life's broad deck alert, and at the prow
To seize the passing moment, big with fate,
From opportunity's extended hand,
When the great clock of destiny strikes Now!

POLITE ROBBERY IN JAPAN.

Lafcadio Hearn, in the paper, From my Japanese Diary, in the November Atlantic tells this story of a robbery in the house of his neighbor, the dyer: He told me a queer story about robbers. Dyers are peculiarly liable to be visited by robbers; partly by reason of the value of the silks entrusted to them, and also because the business is known to be lucrative. One evening the family were robbed. The master was out of the city; his old mother, his wife, and a female servant were the only persons in the house at the time. Three men, having their faces masked and carrying long swords, entered the door. One asked the servant whether any of the apprentices were still in the building, and she, hoping to frighten the invaders away, answered that the young men were all still at work. But the robbers were not disturbed by this assurance. One posted himself at the entrance, the other two strode into the sleeping apartment. The woman started up in alarm, and the wife asked, "Why, you do not wish to kill us?" He who seemed to be the leader answered, "We do not wish to kill you; we want money only. But if we do not get it, then it will be this," striking his sword into the matting. The old mother said, "Be so kind as not to frighten my daughter-in-law, and I will give you whatever money there is in the house. But you ought to know there cannot be much, as my son has gone to Kyoto." She handed them the money drawer and her own purse. There were just twenty-seven yen eighty-four sen. The head robber counted it, and said, quite gently, "We do not want to frighten you. We know you are a very devout believer in Buddhism, and we think you would not tell a lie. Is this all?" "Yes, it is all," she answered. "I am, as you say, a believer in the teaching of the Buddha, and if you come to rob me now, I believe it is only because I myself, in some former life, once robbed you. This is my punishment for that fault, and so, instead of wishing to deceive you, I feel grateful at this opportunity to atone for the wrong which I did to you in my previous state of existence." The robber laughed, and said, "You are a good old woman, and we believe you. If you were poor, we would not rob you at all. Now we only want a couple of kimono and this," laying his hand on a very fine silk overdress. The old woman replied, "All my son's kimono I can give you, but I beg you will not take that, for it does not belong to my son, and was confided to us only for dyeing. What is ours I can give, but I cannot give what belongs to another." "That is quite right," approved the robber, "and we shall not take it."

After receiving a few robes the robbers said good-night, very politely, but ordered the women not to look after them. The old servant was still near the door. As the chief robber passed her, he said, "You told us a lie,—so take this," and struck her senseless. None of the robbers were ever caught.

THE MONKEY IN THE MAN.

To see the monkey in the man you have only to study the faces, bodies, and habits of babiez. Such is the theme of a very interesting article contributed by S. S. Buckman to the new number of the Nineteenth Century. The actions of children are, indeed, he says, like "ancient monuments of prehistoric times. The human infant is an interesting object of scientific research, and even a cross baby should be calmly contemplated by the philosophic mind." The Westminster Gazette subjoins a dozen of the numerous illustrations which Mr. Buckman gives to show how survivals of our simian ancestry may be found by any nursery philosopher:

1. Moneys are snub-nosed (simian). So are babies.

2. Babies have pouch-like checks. To judge from ecclesiastical monuments, this characteristic is supposed to be specially angelic. It is really monkey-like. Baby cheeks are the vistages of cheek pouches, possessed for storing away food, as in Cercopithecus, a monkey in which this habit of storing may be observed at the Zoölogical Gardens, if visitors feed it.

3. At the base of the vertebral column babies have a deep circular depression. This is the mark of the monkey's tail.

4. Babies (as Dr. Louis Robinson has shown) have superior arm power and very short legs. So have monkeys.

5. Babies in catching hold of anything don't use their thumbs, but clasp it between the fingers and palm. This is the action of monkeys in going from bough to bough.

6. A baby can move any of its toes independently, and it can move them one from another so as to make a V between any of them. As it grows older it loses this power and also the power of turning its ankle; but that it has such power over its muscles when young points to ancestors who used their feet more than their hands as organs for picking up small objects, and who relied on their arms and hands for supporting their bodies.

7. Babies go to sleep on their stomachs with their limbs curled up under them—a survival from our four-footed ancestors.

8. Babies are rocked to sleep—an imitation of the swaying to and fro of the branches where our monkey ancestors lived. Even our nursery ditties ("Lullaby baby, on the tree top") point back to the arboral ages.

9. The stair-climbing instinct of babies (like the tree-climbing propensity of boys) show:

10. The fruit-stealing instinct is a survival from monkeydom.

11. Children are fond of picking at anything loose—because monkeys pick off the bark from trees in order to search for insects.

12. Children are very fond of rolling. This points to the time when our ancestors had hairy bodies tenanted by parasites, and allayed the irritation by rolling.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use, and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

Cure For Headache.

As a remedy for all forms of Headache Electric Bitters has proved to be the very best. It effects a permanent cure and the most dreaded habitual sick headaches yield to its influence. We urge all who are afflicted to procure a bottle, and give this remedy a fair trial. In cases of habitual constipation Electric Bitters cures by giving the needed tone to the bowels, and few cases long resist the use of this medicine. Try it once. Large bottles only fifty cents at LeGro & Lynde's, Palmer; G. L. Keeney's, Monson; F. A. Spencer's, Ware.

Modest Youth—"I have only $5000 a year, sir, but I think I can support your daughter on that." Father (enthusiastically)—"Support her, my dear boy? Why, you can support her entire family on that."—Detroit Free Press.

Passenger—"Captain, can't you recommend any cure for seasickness?" Captain—"Certainly, my good sir, and one that never fails. All you have to do is to lie down in the shade of a tree in full leaf, and away it goes."—Der Schalk.

"I am sorry," said the rural justice, "but there's no evidence against you and I'll have to turn you loose, with just a fine for contempt of court." "But, your honor, I haven't said a word!" "Yes, but darned if you didn't look it!"—Atlanta Constitution.

"But when it came to putting down the rebellion, boys," said the camp-fire general, "you boys, you privates, were the cornerstones upon which" (great cheering) "we built our reputations!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Did Miss Flyppe receive many proposals while at the seashore?" "Many? Why, receiving proposals got to be a habit with her. She got so she couldn't even hear a soda water bottle pop without exclaiming, 'This is so sudden!'"—Indianapolis Journal.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. is on every wrapper.

New England People,

Whether they live in the land of their birth, or in other parts of the Union, are apt to know the value of a good newspaper. Most of us read at least one daily paper regularly, and those who cannot see a daily read a weekly. To keep up with the news is now considered a necessity. He is a wise man who selects for himself and family

A First-Class Newspaper,

One that he can rely on to give him not only a careful report of the daily happenings in his own neighborhood, but an intelligent and comprehensive review of all important movements and events in the state, the nation and the world. With the newspaper as with everything else the best article that one can command is the cheapest in the end. Superior quality counts in nothing more than in the public journal which you keep in touch with the world.

The Springfield Republican

Is recognized as a superior newspaper, one of the leaders of the American press. It has been in successful operation for over 70 years, but it is thoroughly progressive and modern. Its mechanical plant has been entirely renewed within the past year, the second time within a dozen years. Its facilities for publishing a great newspaper are now unsurpassed. The volume of reading matter in its daily issue has been increased by 40 per cent, and it has thus been possible to notably enrich and strengthen the quality of the paper.

News, Politics, Literature.

In all these departments of a newspaper the policy of The Republican is broad, independent and fair. It is alert and enterprising in the service of its constituency. It seeks to enlighten the minds and brighten the lives of its readers by laying before them day by day all that is best and richest and most interesting in current affairs, both at home and abroad. It publishes fully and fairly the information which enables its readers to form their own opinions on public questions. It samples literally the best literature of the times.

The Sunday Republican

Is unique among Sunday newspapers. It is large enough to afford its readers a rich assortment of entertaining and instructive literature in addition to the news, but it does not swamp them in an ocean of printed words, in which good matter and the worthless are indiscriminately mixed. It aims first at excellence, and in quantity is reasonable.

The Weekly Republican

Is an invaluable journal for all who cannot keep pace with the crowding reports of current events in the daily press, and as well for New Englanders away from their early homes who desire to keep informed of events and of public sentiment in Yankee land. It is edited with great care and presents each week the best editorial and literary matter from the seven daily issues, in addition to a compact and comprehensive review of the news. It also devotes special attention to farming interests.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

THE DAILY REPUBLICAN: $8 a year; $2 a quarter; 70 cents a month; 18 cents a week; 3 cents a copy.

THE SUNDAY REPUBLICAN: $2 a year; $1 for six months; 5 cents a copy.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN: $1 a year; 50 cents for six months; 3 cents a copy.

IF PURCHASED SEPARATELY THESE PERIODICALS WOULD COST $4.75.

IT IS THE PLAN OF SCRIBNER'S to give its readers next year a history of the past 25 years in the United States. (1869-'95.) These years have been unparalleled in the history of the world for national development and material progress. The narrative will be written in a graphic and picturesque style by President Andrews of Brown University, and capable artists will illustrate it.

ROBERT GRANT, whose "Reflections of a Married Man" will long be remembered, has written a series of articles on "The Art of Living," in which he sets himself to solve, as far as such problems can be solved, questions which beset every well-to-do family: The Income—The Dwelling—Household Expenses—Education of Children—Married and Single Life—The Summer Problem, etc., etc. Beautifully illustrated.

GEORGE MEREDITH, whom more than one good authority has pronounced the greatest of living novelists, has written a strong serial, "The Amazing Marriage," to begin in January.

W. D. HOWELLS will contribute a novel entitled "The Story of a Play."

IN THE LAND OF DON QUIXOTE will be a series of three sketches illustrated by a number of Daniel Vierge's wonderful drawings.

SINGLE ARTICLES in great variety have been arranged for and the illustrations will be elaborate.

SCRIBNER'S FOR 1895 WILL BE BETTER THAN EVER.

If you desire only SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE remit $3.00 to the Publishers:

OLD TIME LETTERS.

AN EPISTLE WRITTEN NEARLY ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

The Reverential Manner In Which a Young Girl of That Period Addressed Her Father—Proper Way For a Lover to Ask His Sweetheart to Elope With Him.

If the prim Puritan maiden of a century ago did not startle masculinity by wearing bloomers on the public highway, or pompously presiding at political mass meetings, or—horrible to relate—smoking perfumed cigarettes on the sly, she must have been a deucedly charming girl withal. A typical gentlewoman, she commands, irresistibly, more than ardent admiration.

If character can be portrayed in letter writing—and no one doubts the fact—an epistolary message written nearly a century ago by a devoted young Bostonian maiden to her much beloved papa in Philadelphia will afford an intensely interesting study of commencement de siecle womanhood, as it were.

To be sure, the dear young girl who penned the loving message decades and decades ago never dreamed that her letter would be published at the dawn of the twentieth century in a Chicago newspaper and read by the eyes of modern woman, so called. For a fact Chicago was not on the map in those days, and woman—lovely woman—had not been modernized. To peer into this primitive maiden's private affairs really seems a sacrilege. The epistle is, however, so essentially unique, so different from the flippant style of correspondence today and withal so suggestive of the excessive formality and great reverence accorded parents by children in the proverbial good old times that its perusal may be pardonable. In a word, it is the embodiment of filial affection. It would doubtless surprise the average indulgent papa of today, who is quite used to being told a few things occasionally by his "advanced," all wise daughters.

The fair writer was evidently a young woman of exceptional culture in those early days. Of course she must have been, for did she not reside in the Hub City and eat baked beans? In a peculiarly artistic and legible handwriting the remarkable letter is thus addressed: "Rev. John Murray, to the care of Colonel John Connelly, Philadelphia."

There is the customary heading—"Boston, Feb. 13, 1804"—but the usual salutation of "My Dear Father" is omitted. After this interesting fashion Miss Julia Marcia Murray makes reparation for a supposed slight to her paternal ancestor:

"You are astonished, my dear papa, at not receiving an answer to your letter, and I, my dear sir, am equally astonished that my answer written as early as the 8th of January has not yet reached you.

"Yes, indeed, you are entitled to my utmost gratitude, my utmost affection, to my duty, and my veneration, and I should have considered myself inexcusable if I had delayed a day to acknowledge a letter which gave me such heartfelt pleasure. If you have received my letter, you will find in it expressions of the warmest gratitude. It will always, my dear father, make me unhappy to know that you are so, and particularly if I have any reason to suppose myself, even unintentionally, the cause of it. You ought not to be kept in suspense, and I do indeed, my dear papa, consider it a prime duty to attend to you, and I have given a circumstantial account of the school exhibition and other particulars. And now, my dear sir, indulging the hope that I have rendered you easy on the subject of my not writing to you, I will go on to a part of your letter over which I shed many, very many, tears.

"Oh, my father, my heart is indeed filled with tender affection for my dear, my excellent parent, and if my heart be an affectionate feeling heart how could you expect that I should read the following very affecting line in your letter without its being torn: 'Sweet soul, you will not have your parents long?' When I came to read this, I could no longer restrain my tears, so covering my face with my handkerchief I audibly sobbed. Can I endure the thought that those dear, indulgent parents must ascend to the bosom of their God before me? Would to heaven I could continue here as long as I could be useful to them and then wing my flight to the regions of the blessed, where I might prepare garlands of never fading roses to crown them with, but as this is a felicity too great for human beings to attain I must content myself with the lot of mortality and meekly bow my head in pious resignation.

"And now, my dear papa, hoping that you will acquit me of either neglect or inattention to the best of fathers, I repeat again and again that I am your ever affectionate and dutiful daughter,

"JULIA MARCIA MURRAY.

"We have got our buckwheat meal. Mr. Jones and Cousin Mary Allen desire their best regards. J. M. M."

A writer on etiquette of those days tells amorous youths how to write "fetching" billet doux to their ladyloves. Clandestine marriages must have been as popular in the long ago as they are today. At any rate, the writer gives an ideal letter from "a young gentleman, who is in expectation of an estate from his penurious uncle, to a young lady of small fortune, whom he desires to elope with him to New England." After this fashion was the anxious lover instructed in this interesting branch of lovemaking:

"MY DEAR MARIA—My uncle's laying his injunctions upon me not to see you more has only served to add fuel to my passion. I cannot live without you, and if you persist in refusing to comply I am miserable forever. I pay no regard to his threatening when put in competition with the love I have for you. Don't be afraid of poverty. If he should continue inexorable, I have still education sufficient to procure a genteel employment in one of the public offices, where I may rise to preferment. Therefore, if ever you loved me, let me beg that you will not make me any longer unhappy. Let me entreat you by all that's dear that you will comply with my request and meet me at 6 Sunday evening at the back door of the garden, where a chaise and four will be ready. I will fly on the wings of love to meet my charmer and be happy in her embraces forever. I am your dear lover."—Chicago Tribune.

Soldering Aluminium.

One of the drawbacks to the general use of aluminium has been the difficulty of soldering it. Many persons have entirely failed in their attempts to unite aluminium and other metals or to join two pieces of aluminium. A film of oxide formed upon the surface of the metal seems to be the cause of the nonadherence, and this all ordinary methods have heretofore failed to remove. Recent experiments have brought out new methods, and a compound of 50 parts of tin, 25 of aluminium and 25 of silver makes a solder that has thus far worked admirably. It is necessary to keep a clean metal surface, and this can be done by heating the aluminium to be united until the solder can be kept in a soft state for an instant after contact with the plates or sections. This causes a coating of the solder to adhere to the surface of the metal, and no further trouble is experienced. It has been suggested that the outside of aluminium articles that are to be put together should have a coating of this solder applied to their edges. If this were done, the difficulty would be removed, as the coating, already firmly fixed, would need no further preparation.—New York Ledger.

Trees.

I have written many verses, but the best poems that I have produced are the trees that I have planted on the hillside which overlooks the broad meadows scalloped and rounded at their edges by loops of the sinuous Housatonic. Nature finds rhymes for them in the recurring measures of the seasons. Winter strips them of their ornaments and gives them, as it were, in prose translation, and summer reclothes them in all the splendid phrases of their leafy language.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

A bat finds its way about without the assistance of its eyes. A blinded bat will avoid wires and obstructions as dexterously as though it could see perfectly.

WORKED TO THE LIMIT.

How the Boys Got Ahead of One Man on a 10 Cent Find.

A man walking along Wrightwood avenue saw a bright dime lying on the sidewalk. He picked it up. Only a short distance ahead of him were two boys. He called to them, 'Boys, did you lose anything?"

They turned around, and after looking at each other and then at the friendly man they shook their heads.

"Have you any money?" he asked them.

"I've got 65 cents," said one of them.

"What kind of money is it?"

"I got a half dollar and three nicks."

"No dimes, eh?"

"No, sir."

"I just picked up a dime back there, and I thought perhaps one of you might have dropped it."

He walked on to the corner. As he stood there waiting for a car he felt a pull at his coattail, and a small boy, with a streaked face, said, "Mister, did you find a 10 cent piece?"

"Yes, I found one."

"Well, I lost it, honest. Ma sent me for bread, and now she'll lick me."

"Well, here's your dime."

The boy grabbed it and ran.

That evening, when the man alighted from the car at the same corner, a boy, with a derby hat too large for him, halted him and asked: "Say, mister, did you find a dime? 'Cause I lost one on the way to the butcher's, and I'll catch it when the old man hears about it."

"Look here, I gave that dime to another boy. He said he was going to buy bread with it."

"He was stringin you."

"I don't know what that means, but maybe the money belonged to you. Here's 10 cents."

Next morning another boy, with the proud evidence of a hole in his pocket to back up his claim, met the honest man at the front gate and asked for the dime. The man knew that some one must have lost the money, and as he didn't want to overlook the right boy he gave up another dime. That evening two more were lying in wait. He handed them 10 cents apiece on condition that they should notify all the boys in the neighborhood that he had been "worked" to the limit.—Chicago Record.

Hot Boxes.

Those who have traveled much by rail are more or less acquainted with the hot box. A hot box, as it is commonly called, really means a hot journal bearing or a hot journal, or both. It arises sometimes from the use of poor material in the bearing, sometimes on account of imperfect casting and sometimes from too great weight upon the bearing, producing friction and heat.

There are now far fewer hot boxes than formerly. Some of the heaviest cars are now carried upon six wheeled trucks, thus distributing the weight of each end of the car upon six journal bearings, instead of four, and reducing the danger of excessive friction. Better materials are used, and the workmanship upon them is better, weights to be carried are calculated more nicely, and greater care is exercised in operation, so that the hot box is not what it once was. A man thoroughly familiar with railroading, who made not long ago a trip of 10,000 miles, which included points as far apart as the City of Mexico, San Francisco and Chicago, said that he did not encounter a hot box until he was within 20 miles of New York on his return.—New York Sun.

All the Baby Wanted.

"It isn't a bit of use," cried the young man distractedly as he paced the room with the crying infant in his arms. "There is something alarming the matter with him, or he wouldn't cry like this."

"Oh, whatever shall we do?" said the young wife as she took her offspring and tried to soothe him. "Whatever shall we do?"

They were very young, and it was their first baby, and really if things had gone on for another hour as they had during the last it is an open question which would have gone into convulsions first—father, mother or baby.

"I'll fetch mother," cried the young fellow at last. "She'll know what to do." Presently he returned, dragging the good old mother with him, almost breathless with haste and overcome with apprehension. Putting on her spectacles, she regarded the infant critically for a moment and then said, "He wants feeding!"

"There," cried the young father excitedly, "we both knew the little beggar wanted something, but neither of us could tell what it was."—London Tit-Bits.

Smallest Electric Battery In the World.

In contrast to the very large generators of electricity—batteries and dynamo electric machinery—in such common use today, it may be interesting to note what is perhaps the smallest electric battery ever constructed, and no doubt also the smallest generator of electrical or mechanical energy. This battery was constructed some years ago by one of the electricians of the Boston Telephone company and consisted of an ordinary glass bead, through which two wires, one of copper and the other of iron, were looped and twisted so as to prevent their coming in contact. The wires acted as the electrodes, and all that was necessary to cause a current to flow was to place a drop of acidulated water in the bead. Certainly such a minute battery furnished but an infinitesimal current, but could be easily used in a delicate telephone—in fact, it is said to have actually been used in signaling to a distance of nearly 200 miles.—Cassier's Magazine.

Taciturn Carlyle.

It is not recorded that William the Silent was contemplating his chances of heaven when he won that title, though Thomas Carlyle, to whom some writer applies the paradoxical phrase, "the roaring apostle of taciturnity," might be accused of wanting to go where there are no women. The same writer once rode with Carlyle in a Chelsea omnibus and endeavored in vain with questions to induce the great man to break his golden silence and coin a few sentences of silver speech. Carlyle preserved a moody silence. But the defeated questioner had his revenge when, affecting not to know Mr. Carlyle, he asked the conductor as they got out who the gentleman was and received the following reply:

"Oh, yes sir, I know him well enough. 'E's wot you call a littery gent—writes books wot nobody can understand. 'E's a bit off his chump, like many of those gents, but he ain't a bad sort if you take him the right way."—Minneapolis Housekeeper.

Lord Russell's Ruse.

The lord chief justice was too smart for the juryman who sought to be excused from serving. "On what ground?" asked his lordship. The man approached with his hand to his ear and said, "I'm deaf, my lord, and cannot hear the evidence." "You can go," said Lord Russell in a whisper. "Thank you, my lord," replied the juryman, taken off his guard, but the learned judge had not finished his sentence, and he sternly added, "into the box and do your duty!" The man quailed and obeyed in some confusion at the failure of his ruse.—Westminster Budget.

An Insult.

Miss Beans (of Boston, visiting in Chicago)—Mamma, that Mr. Porkingham insulted me last night, and I shall never speak to him again!

"Yes, dear," she answered, "but you know we couldn't exist very well without it."

Then he smiled and took a new hold.—Detroit Free Press.

LIKED HIS PREACHING.

He Had Heard Him Often and So Enjoyed His Supper.

A hard featured man, dressed in a new suit of very cheap black, called at the house of a well known clergyman, and upon giving his name was invited to take a seat in the gentleman's study.

"I have a few days to spend in town," said the visitor, "and I did not want to leave without calling and paying my respects to you. I have heard you preach many a time."

"Yes," said the parson, beginning to take an interest in the visitor.

"I like your preaching, and, though I do not belong to your church, yet I must say you preach the best sermon I ever heard. There are so very few good preachers now, very few in whose uprightness we can place trust, that when we meet one of the right kind we like to express our appreciation."

"Yes," the good man repeated, and as the bell tinkled he rose and said, "Come, my friend, and take some lunch with me."

The visitor was only too happy, and seated at the table began to eat with an avidity that attracted the host's attention.

"You say that you have heard me preach many a time?" remarked the minister.

"Oh, yes," the man replied, conveying an ample allowance of mashed potatoes into his mouth.

"I don't remember seeing you at my church. I suppose you have heard me in the country?"

"No," said the visitor, helping himself to beans, "not in the country."

"Certainly not in town?"

"Well, sorter yes and sorter not. You know you preached at the prison for some time. I was there for stealing a horse and cart and finished my time today. Thank you for the bread."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE MEXICAN SECRET SERVICE.

It Keeps an Eye on the Affairs of Public and Private Men.

"The secret service of the French republic is generally considered to be the most perfect spy system in the world," said Oliver Beach, a traveling man of St. Louis, "but in my humble opinion the department of private intelligence supported by Mexico surpasses it both in extent and intricacy. A couple of years ago I was accidentally permitted to get an insight into its workings, and I was astounded. One would imagine that a great private detective agency would be a necessity only in a country like Russia, where the life of the ruler is constantly threatened, but down in Mexico there is a system of espionage that extends to every part of it.

"The motives of every public man in Mexico are not only perfectly well known to the government, but every visitor is subject to scrutiny. It was President Diaz who first established the chain of secrecy that now holds all the people in its links. Every now and then one will be surprised to see a body of Mexican troops hurried off to some remote place in a faroff state. None will know the reason, but the fact will soon become known that the government has prevented an embryo revolution from gaining strength and force. A considerable number of Americans residing in Mexico do so because the law will make it unpleasnat for them in their native places. The Mexican secret service has the private record of each of these, and if any of them shows too much activity in Mexican affairs there is an arrest. The United States authorities are notified, and extradition of the prisoner follows. Yes, sir, the Mexican secret service is the greatest of them all, and its ramifications extend everywhere over the republic, and a good way on this side of the border."—Washington Star.

Howells on Dante.

Again I say it is a great pity that criticism is not honest about the masterpieces of literature and does not confess that they are not every moment masterly; that they are often dull and tough and dry, as is certainly the case with Dante's, writes William Dean Howells in The Ladies' Home Journal. Some day perhaps we shall have this way of stating literature, and the lover of it will not feel obliged to cheat himself into the belief that if he is not always enjoying himself it is his own fault. At any rate, I will permit myself the luxury of frankly saying that while I had a deep sense of the majesty and grandeur of Dante's design, many points of its execution bored me, and that the intermixture of small local facts and neighborhood history in the fabric of his lofty creation is no part of its noblest effect. What is marvelous in it is its expression of Dante's personality, and I can never think that his personalities enhance its greatness as a work of art. I enjoyed them, however, and I enjoyed them the more as the innumerable perspectives of Italian history began to open all about me. Then indeed I understood the origins if I did not understand the aims of Dante.

Growth of the Hair.

The hair is not like plants. It is nothing more than unsensible threads of skin, or rather papillæ, as they are called, which grow in their proper places under the same conditions as the nails on the finger ends.

The hair papillæ do not lie on the surface of the skin, but are sunk more or less deeply into it—more deeply as the hair is longer, so that long hairs adhere in a deep sac. The number of these hair papillæ of course varies considerably with different people, but for each individual is constant and unchangeable and cannot be increased any more than can the number of one's finger nails. The number of hairs depends on the papillæ; consequently if there are no papillæ there can be no hair. Moreover, the number of these papillæ is constant, so that the idea of increasing their number by clipping the hair must be abandoned. The growth of the hairs depends rather on the well being of all the papillæ, but they are constituent parts of skin and share its fate alike in both good and evil days.—Chautauquan.

Increase A. Lapham.

The father of the weather bureau service was Increase A. Lapham, a modest and retired but ripe scholar, who lived in Milwaukee. He was the first to note by telegraph the progress of the wind currents and storms and to predict their appearance in specified neighborhoods. On the strength of a weather dispatch from Omaha, in 1869 or thereabouts, he announced the first storm on Lake Michigan that ever was heralded 12 hours in advance of its arrival. The first work of the weather bureau was under his charge in Chicago. It was on the small beginnings of Dr. Lapham that the entire system of the signal service was based. Dr. Lapham died in 1875.—New York Ledger.

Learning to Cook.

"No, ma'am," said the grocer, making a great clattering among his tins, "I have coffeepots and teapots, but there isn't such a thing as a jack pot in the store."

"I'm so sorry," wailed the young wife. "You see, we haven't been married long, and my husband's mother has always cooked for him, and when I heard him talking in his sleep about a jack pot I thought I'd get one, for he mentions it so frequently he must be used to it. Could you tell me what they cook in it?"

"Greens, ma'am," said the grocer, and he sent her to the tin store in the next block.—Detroit Free Press.

When She Is Perfect.

The Duchess of Rutland has perpetrated the little joke that "some of her relatives considered that the perfect woman should be a silent woman." Such a sentiment, says The Lady's Pictorial, could only have its origin in the mind of some such malicious male as the man who wrote the famous epitaph on a talkative woman:

Here, 'neath this stone, a lump of clay,
Lies Arabella Young,
Who, on the twenty-first of May,
Began to hold her tongue!

Had Settled One.

Soph—Say, Fresh, did you ever see a $4 bill?

Fresh—Well, I guess yes! Had one presented me that time you invited me to lunch.—University Courier.

Wycherley, the dramatic author, married Lady Drogheda, who was jealous. He was fond of meeting his friends at the Cock inn, across the street, but she would never allow him to go unless the taproom door was left open, so that she could look in and see that no woman was there.

THE RULERS OF MANKIND.

What though the Sword, incarnadined and crowned,
Yoke to its car the servile feet of Fate;
What though the sophist Senate's pompous prate
Engross the hour and shake the world with sound,
Their carnal conquests can at best but found
Some tinsel towering transitory state
On force or fraud, whose summits, soon or late,
Fresh fraud or force will level with the ground.
It is the silent, eremitic mind,
Immured in meditation long and lone,
Lord of all knowledge, while itself unknown,
And in its cloister ranging unconfined,
That builds Thought's time long universal throne,
And with an unseen scepter rules Mankind.
—Alfred Austin in National Review.

THE FAT WOMAN'S REVENGE.

Her Victim Did Not Get a Chance to Greet His Friends.

Apropos of the theater, I saw something one other night within the last seven that filled me with a totally unholy glee. A woman sat in front of me. She was decidedly plump. In fact, she was what Illinois people call corn fed. She was bareheaded, too, by the way, and before the play began and after every act she had to stand up and let a man who sat near her pass out. It was a tight squeeze every time, and as the man did not say, "Pardon me!" or "Beg your leave!" or anything else to show the faith that was in him I could see the tide of that fat woman's wrath rise till its crimson edge made the straggling fringe below her back hair bristle indignantly.

At last the play was over, and the man wanted to rush out to join two women friends—undoubtedly he'd have called them "lady friends"—whom he had noticed near. But did he rush? Well, if he did, his rush wasn't visible to the naked eye. That fat woman sat down and put on her rubbers. Then she replaced her gloves, which she had taken off. Then she stood up, blocking the passage, while she put on her hat, adjusted her veil and buttoned her cloak. And all the while the man was dancing with impatience, unable to get out, and the "two lady friends" were passing out the door. At last the fat woman moved, and the man—well, inasmuch as nothing so much angers a man as a punishment he knows he deserves, you can imagine how he looked. For my part, I thought it was delightful, and if ever I meet that fat woman I mean to tell her so.—Washington Post.

Booming a Cigar.

"Do you know how to boom a cigar?" asked the advertising man.

The other man confessed his ignorance.

"Well, I've taken hold of a new cigar with instructions to make it a 'go,' no matter what it costs. Here are a few of the schemes: Of course I use the newspapers first and last, but I've got some other ideas. I've ordered some wooden cigars 6 feet long, which are to be carried through the streets. It takes two men to carry one cigar. Then I've sent out about 25,000 postal cards to men who smoke good cigars, and on each card it says, 'Present me at the nearest cigar store and get a —— cigar for 8 cents!' See? That postal card is good for 2 cents when applied on the purchase of one of our cigars. There won't be many of them presented, but it will be a good 'ad.,' and every man who gets one will be attracted by the novelty of the scheme. Then I'm going to put music boxes in the cigar stores and have the music come out of little organ pipes made in the shape of our cigar and labeled. Every dealer in the city gets a blue print cartoon each morning to hang in his window. Mention of the cigar is the biggest part of the cartoon. I'll send private boxes of the cigars to club stewards and well known dealers. When I've done all that, I'll try something else."—Chicago Record.

Stork Legends.

In an old collection of matronly stories entitled "The Gospel of the Distaff," printed at Bruges in 1475, I find this passage: "When a stork builds her nest over a chimney, it is a sign that the proprietor shall have wealth and long life." Ancient beliefs admitted that the stork protected buildings against lightning. It is a holy bird, and in certain German towns the arrival of the storks, heralds of spring, was announced with joyous blasts by the watchman on the tower.

What is certain is that which Michelet says of the swallow may be applied to the stork, "He has taken not only our house, but also our hearts."

Legends go still further. They consider storks as the incarnation of departed souls.

In that metamorphosed capacity they have for mission to search the bottom of wells for the souls of newborn infants. In the whole of northern and central Germany they have their baby wells. Hamburg, too, had her "kindelbrunnen." This naive faith has its origin in ancient mythology, which represents the stork, jointly with the peacock, as the favorite bird of Juno, goddess of maternity.—French of Maurice Engelhart.

Thrift.

Thrift is a virtue. No people can long be free who are not thrifty. It is true that thrift sometimes passes beyond virtue, degenerating into the vice of greed. Because there are men who are greedy—drunk with the intoxication of wealth and power—we sometimes are told that wealth and power are criminal. There are some that hold that thrift is folly and personal ownership a crime. In the new Utopia all is to be for all, and no one can claim a monopoly, not even of himself. There may be worlds in which this shall be true. It is not true in the world into which you have been born. Nor can it be. In the world we know the free man should have a reserve of power, and this power is represented by money. If thrift ever ceases to be a virtue, it will be at a time long in the future. Before that time comes our Anglo-Saxon race will have passed away and our civilization will be forgotten.—David Starr Jordan in Popular Science Monthly.

Photographing Unseen Stars.

One of the most popular and eminent lecturers on astronomy is Sir Robert Ball, who uses simple and graphic illustrations to give his hearers ideas of magnitude and distance. For instance, he says that going at the rate of the electric telegraph—that is, 186,000 miles a second—it would take 78 years to telegraph a message to the most distant telescopic stars, but the camera has revealed stars far more distant than these, some of which, if a message had been sent in the year A. D. 1—that is to say, 1,894 years ago—the message would only just have reached some of them and would be still on the way to others, going at the rate of 186,000 miles a second.

A FAMILIAR CRY.

When the day is gone, and the stars come out,
and the barber's shop is full,
When low and clear you frequently hear the faint "Does the razor pull?"
There comes with a rush the man who is late,
no matter how late it be,
Who opens the door to look in and roar, "How
many ahead of me?"

He sees a patient in every chair, and all
around the room
Wherever a man can sit or stand, in silence
like the tomb,
The bristly faces and tousled heads are counting the "nexts" that be.
But this tardy elf only thinks of himself—"How many ahead of me?"

From shop to shop, from door to door he makes his anxious round.
He never will rest from his eager quest while
an open place is found.
Bearded and restless the same old crowd in every room he'll see,
But he rings the chime on the same old rhyme
—"How many ahead of me?"

WEATHER FORECAST BY THE TEETH.

Dentists Can Prognosticate by Keeping Count of Their Customers.

"What's the use of a man in my line keeping a barometer around?" said a dentist the other day. "I can tell when storms are coming and when we are apt to have long spells of good sunny weather as accurately as any barometer or weather indicator ever made, if not more so, and that, too, without budging a step out of my office, without consulting any kind of scientific instrument and without even so much as glancing out of my window. And if you will ask any other dentist in town about it I'll wager that he'll tell you the same thing.

"It's a very simple matter. Human beings are the greatest barometers in the world, and there is no part of the human system which is so quickly affected by damp weather as the teeth. Of course the degree in which a man is affected by the weather depends entirely on the condition of his teeth, but how many people have perfect teeth? Very few, I can assure you. Now, during the week of fine weather which preceded the last rainy spell I had over 30 people, two-thirds of them strangers to me, come in with aching teeth. Most of it was neuralgia, but I knew the sign and said to myself, 'We'll have some rainy weather now surely.' It was a sure indication, and I knew there could be no mistake when, as the end of the week drew nearer, they began to come in faster and faster. In the stormy weather they keep coming in, and then all of a sudden they'll stop, and although it may rain for two or three days after that I know that fine weather is at hand. When toothache patients are few, I know that we are in for a lot of good weather, and though the people would exult at the prospect the dentist groans, for while it is not so pleasant the work of pulling teeth, treating neuralgia and curing toothaches is far more lucrative than filling teeth. I can attend to ten such cases in less time than it takes to fill one tooth. It all proves, however, that the human body is the best barometer in the world, and if you would have weather forecasts of an accurate nature consult your dentist."—New York Sun.

Beyond Dispute.

It is said that Mr. Tyler from the time of his election to the vice presidency until the death of General Harrison kept no carriage, owing to the insufficiency of his salary. When, however, he found himself elevated to the chief magistracy of the country, the financial difficulty being removed, he determined to set up an equipage.

He bought a fine pair of horses, engaged an Irish coachman and proceeded to look about for a vehicle to suit his taste. He heard of one which was for sale by a gentleman residing in Washington and went to look at it.

It had been driven only a few times and was in excellent condition, so that the president after a careful examination felt satisfied with it. Before finally deciding the matter he had his Hibernian coachman take a look at the carriage and give his opinion of it.

"It's jist the thing fer your honor," reported that accomplished person.

"But," queried Mr. Tyler whimsically, "do you think it would be altogether proper for the president of the United States to drive a secondhand carriage, Pat?"

"And why not?" asked Pat, with a shrewd twinkle in his eye. "Shure, an, beggin your pardon, ain't it yerself that's a secondhand president?"—Youth's Companion.

Injured In the Accident.

Sufferer—I suppose we shall sue the railway company for about $3,000 damages.

Lawyer—Three thousand dollars damages! Nonsense! Thirteen thousand at the very lowest, man!

Sufferer (surprised)—Why, I think I should be quite content if I got $3,000 damages.

Lawyer—Yes, probably you would, but I want at least $10,000 for myself.—Somerville Journal.

The Boy's Explanation.

It was a Buffalo small boy who came home from one of our model schools and was asked by his father how he was coming on. "Well," said the candid child, "Jimmy —— has got ahead of me in the class." "Dear, dear," said the father, "and how does that happen?" "Oh, you know his parents are very bright!"—Buffalo Commercial.

Brooklyn was named by the Dutch from a small village near Amsterdam named Breucklen. The name is found in the city archives spelled Bereuckelen, Breucklen, Breucklyn, Broucklyn, Breuklyn, Brockland, Brucklynd and finally Brooklyn.

SHOPPING IN EUROPE.

Women the Managers of Most of the Notion and Specialty Stores.

Outside of the large European shops of national fame a stranger hardly knows where to ask for his or her wants. The small shops include everything, but what things in what shops is the puzzle. In a small German town, when mosquito netting was asked for at a general dry goods store, the inquirer was directed to a small notion, or what the English term a "thread and needle," shop for it. When found, it was wrapped in a newspaper, and a large pin served in the place of twine. This sounds primitive, but no one would think of complaining of the parcel's appearance, except "those particular Americans," one of whom did protest most energetically against it.

The gloveshops are very small, but also well fitted up with one or two counters, comfortable seats, a decorated window and mirrors. Why is it that so many shops show mirrors directly opposite a customer, when she does not require the aid of one in her purchase, unless the idea is to keep her in a good humor? In London one of the best glovers sells hosiery down stairs and gloves and fans above. They also show glove boxes, stretchers and powder shakers in the same cases with gloves. Men sell the gloves here and only try them on when requested to. Only warranted gloves are exchanged if they rip or tear when first putting them on, and only the best qualities are warranted.

In Paris much of the same custom prevails, though the chief shops are larger, one on the Boulevard des Italiens having two windows. No better gloves can be found than are sold at the Bon Marche and Louvre, where the glove trade is immense, but the small shops have also an excellent trade. Many of the costume houses sell gloves to match each dress, which takes trade that may be called high class and higher priced. While the salespeople do not offer to try on gloves, they will do it when requested to, and all first class gloves are exchangeable under the conditions prevailing here.

Berlin abounds in gloveshops, also Vienna, Hamburg, Dresden, and Munich has at least two neat ones, selling a prominent make manufactured in the outskirts of that city. Women are the clerks here and are very prominent in the mercantile circles of Europe, especially in France, where they seem born with a business tact and faculty unknown to other nations. In Berlin the display of dark red pique gloves in a pretty window was marked "New York style." Europe did not take kindly at first to large buttons, but now they are pronounced very chic. The fashion of keeping gloves of all sizes loose in a large package that was noticed in several German shops does not favorably impress an American accustomed to the neatly wrapped and boxed gloves shown in this country.

What we call notions—needles, thread, dress stays, pins, bindings, etc.—are considered small wares and haberdashery in Europe, the latter term being common in London. Threadneedle street in London probably received its name from the small wares or "thread and needle" shops that were there in bygone days. Such shops are universally carried on by women, and often the owner does dressmaking or plain sewing.—Dry Goods Economist.

Women Venders In Paris.

The streets of Paris, particularly old Paris, are vocal with the mournful cries of women venders. They sing out the merits of newspapers, toys, fish, vegetables, fruits, flowers and small wares. Existence with many is a pitiful struggle, and poverty makes them inventive. After the marketing hours the greatest anxiety is caused by the perishable foods. Nothing is left untried to keep them from spoiling but ice, which is not to be had. One way of keeping up the appearance of the fish is painting the gills with cochineal or vermilion. Even the fresh fish are painted to quicken sales. Every now and then an unfortunate fishmonger is arrested, but she meekly takes the judge's lecture, pays a $10 fine and touches up her stock the very next morning.—Paris Letter.

One Thousand Years Hence.

"Tell my daughter that she must not forget that dinner will be an hour earlier today. She is in Egypt."

"Yes, mum." (Telephones a phonographic signal to Pyramid station No. 99,999.)

"I see the airship from Market street, Japan, nearing the window. Bring my husband's slippers and dressing gown."

"Yes, mum."

"Now touch the buttons A, L, R, T, V, and X. I think that will be all we want for dinner. Here comes my daughter on her biwind flier just in time. Call up No. 8888."

"Yes, mum."—Boston Globe.

He Got Half the Fine.

A man who had been on a hunting trip in the forests of northern Maine vouches for the entire truth of the following story, as he had it direct from the sheriff:

A man who lives in the Mount Katahdin region went into the office of a justice of the peace and inquired about the penalty for hunting deer with dogs, and very particularly as to whether one-half the fine did not go to the informer.

The justice consulted the game laws and assured him that it did.

"Very well," said the man. "I want to complain of myself and settle."

The justice could not back out, and so gave the transgressor "a clean bill of health" upon payment of one-half of the penalty.

It seems that the man got wind of the fact that a game warden had got the "drop" on him on his deer poachings with his dogs and was only waiting an opportunity to arrest him; hence his shrewd bit of diplomacy.—Portland (Me.) Argus.

JUST LIKE A MAN.

And It Cost Him a Sealskin Cloak to Patch Up a Peace.

This is the sad story of two absentminded men. One of them told it last night with tears in his voice.

"Jennie Allen," he said, "was one of my wife's girlhood friends. Her father is a rich man who lives in central Illinois.

"When we came back to Chicago to live, my wife had not seen Miss Allen for three years. One day I went down to Mr. Allen's home to see him on business. After we had talked that over Mr. Allen asked me if I knew that his daughter was married. Naturally I was surprised.

"'Jennie has been married more than a year,' she said, 'and she is living in Normal Park, just outside of Chicago, you know. Tell your wife to go out and call on her.'

"I told him my wife would be delighted and came on back to Chicago. When I got back home that night, I told my wife about it, and she smiled.

"'So Jennie Allen is married, is she? She lives out at Normal Park, and I'm to go out and call on her, am I? Of course, you brainy man, you did not remember to get the present name of the Miss Allen who was?'

"Well, I hadn't thought of asking whom Miss Allen married, and I wrote to her father in a day or two, telling him that my wife found his direction rather indefinite and asking him for further particulars.

"His answer came by return mail. 'It is easy enough to find,' he wrote. 'Their house is only two blocks from the depot at Normal Park, and everybody who lives there can point it out. Do tell your wife to call as soon as she can, for Jennie is the mother of a little boy, and she is simply dying, she writes me, to see her old friend.'

"I took that letter home and handed it in triumph to my wife. 'I guess that will settle your difficulties,' I ventured to remark.

"She read it through in silence. Then a superior, pitying sort of smile gathered about her lips.

"'Oh, Jennie's house is only two blocks from the depot, is it? Anybody can point it out to me, can they? All I've got to do is to go out there and ask the first man I meet, is it? Well, will you be kind enough to tell me whose house I am to ask for when I get off the train at Normal Park? Shall I ask for the house of the husband of Jennie Allen, or what shall I do?'

"I called a messenger boy and sent this telegram:

"'James Allen, Woodville, Ills.: What is the full name and address of your daughter's husband?'

"One hour later the answer came. I finally succeeded in making peace in the family, but it took a sealskin cloak to do it."—Chicago Mail.

How Many Crimes Are Committed In the Name of Hospitality.

How many mistakes are made in this world with the best intentions! How often we condole with each other when we should rejoice! How frequently a man urges a friend to take a drink, "just one more," under the impression that he is doing him a favor, when really the man is anxious to get home to his family! There is no mistake so hard to correct as that which is made with the best motives possible. The other day Buggins invited Muggins out to dinner. Muggins is rather shy, but he managed to scare up enough courage to accept. Mrs. Buggins and the three Misses Buggins held a council of war.

"What is Mr. Muggins fond of?" queried Mrs. Buggins.

"I'm blessed if I know," quoth he.

"Find out today if you can," was the edict. So Buggins went to a friend for advice.

"I don't remember. Let's see. He either despises or is very fond of coffee. I think he is fond of it. Yes; I'm pretty sure I remember his drinking eight cups in one night."

The truth of the matter is that Muggins hates coffee with a bitter, undying hatred that was inborn. If he ever drank eight mugs of anything, it surely was not coffee, but Buggins went home and told his family that as long as Muggins had a cup of good coffee he didn't care a row of pins about anything else.

The dinner came off.

"Have a cup of coffee, Mr. Muggins," said pretty Miss Buggins first. "I know you won't refuse." So Muggins took it. He gulped it down and tried to look calm. Then the second daughter of his hostess spied his cup empty. She rushed up for another. His shyness overpowered him, and he took it without a murmur. He swallowed that too. The eagle eye of the youngest Miss Buggins fell upon him. He quailed.

"Poor Mr. Muggins!" said she sympathetically. "Have they neglected you? Never mind; I'll take care of you. Here's a cup of coffee."

How could he refuse? He never has discovered how he emptied that cup. All he remembers after that is the hostess coming up with another cup of coffee on one side of him, and Buggins, with a genial smile, insisting upon giving him a fifth dose.

"I want to make you feel at home," said he.

"Well, then," said Muggins, recovering from his shyness, "don't give me any more coffee."

"Why not?"

"Because, when I'm home, I never drink coffee. In fact, I loathe coffee."

"I understand that the angels have left a baby brother at your house," said Uncle Charley.

"I dunno," replied little Ben doubtfully. "He's red enough to have come from the other place."—Brooklyn Life.

ONE ON DR. DEPEW.

How a Rural Editor Got the Better of the Genial Orator.

The more stories a man has the more difficult it is to say which is the funniest. I know a great many story tellers and still more stories, but just which one is funniest I would not dare to say offhand. A friend of mine, a newspaper man, tells me that he was in a small town in New York state where Chauncey Depew was billed to make a speech that night, and it happened he stopped at the same hotel Depew did. Just after supper the editor of the local paper dropped in to see Mr. Depew, and the distinguished gentleman proceeded to have some fun with the country journalist. He had fun, too, and every now and then he rounded up a sentence against the editor by saying, "Oh, you can't believe everything in the newspapers," the editor having used the newspaper matter very largely in his argument.

After the speechmaking was over the editor met Mr. Depew in the hotel office again, and there was a big crowd present.

"Well, my friend," inquired the genial Chauncey, "what did you think of my speech?"

The editor hesitated a moment.

"Are you," he asked solemnly, "the genuine Chauncey M. Depew?"

"Certainly. Why not?"

"Are you the one that all the newspapers have been saying was the finest speaker, the greatest talker, the sharpest stumper and the brightest wit before the public?" pursued the editor.

"I guess I'm the one," blushed the gentleman. "Why?"

"Oh, because you can't believe everything there is in the newspapers."

And Depew shook hands with the editor and called it square.—Demorest's Magazine.

HER WATCH.

The Scornful Jeweler Expressed Surprise That It Had Stopped.

A young girl took her watch into the jeweler's recently and explained that something was the matter with it. While the watchmaker examined it the owner of the fractious watch remarked that she did not see what made it act so.

"It is always stopping or having something happen to it," she said.

"Possibly you do not take good care of it," ventured the jeweler, closely regarding the interior of the watch.

"Oh, yes, I do. I wind it nearly every night, and I nearly always remember to take it out of my pocket when I take off my dress. The pocket in my gray dress is too large, though, and sometimes it falls into the bowl when I am washing."

"Water would ruin it if it got inside," remarked the jeweler.

"That little bit wouldn't," said the girl, with a very wise shake of the head. "It's only falls that hurt them. Once it fell out of the up stairs window, but it landed in the rosebush, and it wasn't hurt much. The time Johnny squeezed it by shutting the bureau drawer on it the crystal was broken, though."

By that time the jeweler had discovered that the balance wheel was out of place and two cogs broken.

"I don't see how it happened," said the girl in surprise. "It flew out of my blouse pocket yesterday when I was swinging dumbbells, but I did not suppose that was what hurt it."

"Those things seldom do," said the man, with a touch of scorn.—Philadelphia Press.

Making Socks In Sections.

A novelty has recently appeared in hosiery, the new idea being to make it possible to repair hosiery so that it will appear as if new. To this end fast seams in the mesh are made across the toe, ankle and heel. If, therefore, a hole appears in the toe, it is cut off and a new one attached, which is easily and quickly done by hand, the seams appearing practically the same as when new. In like manner the heel is repaired, or, in case of "general debility," the whole foot can be removed by cutting it off at the ankle. In order to make it possible for all to repair their own stockings it is the design of the manufacturer to furnish with every dozen pairs of hosiery one dozen extra pairs of feet, three dozen pairs of toes and three dozen pairs of heels.—Textile Record.

Street Car Discipline.

The street car companies, like other concerns employing large numbers of men, have a system of rewards and punishment corresponding to those of the schoolroom. If a conductor keeps his record clear, he is moved forward in the list toward a job with better pay as fast as men ahead of him either resign or are discharged. If, however, after having been set forward 20 times, he comes to the barn a half minute behind the time fixed for taking out his car, he goes back to the foot of the list. If he is sick, he must send a man to sign him off, and if this man is a half minute late the consequences are equally severe.—Chicago Tribune.

Of Course They Do.

"I wonder," said the sentimental boarderess, "if the little birds make any plans for their homes in the spring."

"Of course they do," said the cheerful idiot. "Don't they have to make a nest to mate?"

The custard pie that the astonished waiter girl let drop to the floor at this juncture fell on its soft side and consequently was deducted from her week's wages.—Indianapolis Journal.

Irate Parent (who has been trying to satisfy John's curiosity on every known subject under the sun)—Now, Johnnie, if you ask me another question I'll whip you on the spot.

Johnnie (whose undying curiosity overcomes even the dread of punishment)—Wh-wh-what spot, papa?—Pick Me Up.

...THE...

NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

1895.

FOREMOST OF AMERICAN WEEKLIES.

Circulation 168,000 Copies a Week.

First to rally from the overwhelming defeat of 1892, THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE patiently labored for two years to awaken the sleeping judgment of the Nation. Possessing an enormous circulation, equipped with a staff of competent and honest students of public questions, and itself having no object to serve except the welfare of the masses upon the farms and in the shops, scorning lies and sensational appeals, and satisfied merely to place the truth before its readers, THE TRIBUNE has sent to half a million earnest and reflecting people, weekly, a budget of honest facts, sensible arguments and friendly suggestions, which have at least borne fruit in the elections of 1894. The work of the people is, however, only half done. It is necessary in 1896 to place in the Chair which Grover Cleveland has not adorned, a constructive statesman of the Republican faith. To this task THE TRIBUNE now addresses itself, and invites the support of every American citizen who desires a return of the "good old times."

Roswell G. Horr, ex-Congressman from Michigan, but now of New York City, will continue to discuss Tariff Currency, Coinage and Labor questions in THE TRIBUNE. By all odds the most witty, earnest and well-informed speaker upon the stump, he is every year sent by THE TRIBUNE to aid the local campaigns in every part of the country. He keeps in constant touch with the people, knows their wants, and addresses himself in THE TRIBUNE directly to the thoughts which are in their minds, and makes himself understood. He will gladly answer questions, asked in good faith, by readers.

All the regular features of THE TRIBUNE will be continued. For Western readers, a special array of Western news is supplied. For Eastern readers, an Eastern edition is printed.

It is the intention to make the paper especially helpful to farmers and mechanics. Each class has its separate department in THE TRIBUNE; and the new inventions of mechanics, who lack the means to exploit the produce of their brains, are advertised free of charge in the hope of aiding them to find a purchaser or a partner.

The market reports of THE TRIBUNE, long acknowledged to be the best in the country, will maintain their old standard; and the usual variety of foreign news letters, essays upon home topics, book reviews, articles on chess and checkers, and miscellany will be presented every week. The editorial pages of the paper sum up the most important news of the day, with comments.

THE TRIBUNE also prints, for the ladies, the very latest fashions from Paris and London, and there is a department of "Answers to Questions," conducted by a capable writer, in which all the questions of the people on miscellaneous topics are carefully answered.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE is an incomparable paper for residents who live beyond the range of THE DAILY TRIBUNE, but find it necessary to keep in touch with the best thoughts and higher interests of the world at large.

A few premiums are offered to readers and club agents.

Any friend of THE TRIBUNE is cordially invited to send for sample copies and terms, and make up a club of subscribers. We would be especially pleased to see a large circle of readers in every workshop.

THE WEEKLY, $1; THE SEMI-WEEKLY, $2; THE DAILY TRIBUNE, $10 a year. THE TRIBUNE Almanac for 1895, ready in January. 25 cents a copy.
